Mr. John Marshall (Hendon, South): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on his success in the ballot, and on his wisdom in choosing this subject for his private Member's Bill. It is a privilege for me to be associated with him, as a sponsor of the Bill. In passing, I also pay tribute to him in his role as a constituency Member of Parliament, because I had the privilege of living in Ealing for several years, and I remember that, when my hon. Friend was selected for Ealing, North, it was regarded as a marginal constituency. It is a tribute to him that, by 1987, he had a majority of 15,000—although that may have been helped by the fact that his opponent in that election was named Benn.

Tens of thousands of our constituents listen to an Australian soap opera whose musical jingle runs but they do not seem to pay much attention to it, because the problem of noise is generated by bad neighbours—by anti-social, selfish, thoughtless individuals who put their pleasure first and do not consider the impact of their thoughtlessness on other people.

"Neighbours, everybody needs good neighbours",

Those people may enjoy loud music, but they forget that the music they enjoy may be a pain for someone else. Noisy parties may be fun for the drunks who take part, but they are preventing other people from sleeping and from exercising their right to enjoy the privacy of their own home.

That fact was brought home to me during one of my surgeries, when 20 or 25 people from one of the high-rise blocks that were one of the great innovations of the 1960s came to see me. When I asked, "What is your problem?", they replied, "Mr. Campbell." Mr. Campbell's particular skill was to turn his hi-fi unit on at 8 o'clock at night and to keep it going until 8 o'clock in the morning. That meant that the neighbours all too often had a sleepless night, and were always worried that they would have to go to work the next day unable to do as well at their jobs as they would have liked.

There is no doubt that the problem of noise has been aggravated by social trends in recent years. The problem is worse in the high-rise flats in which so many people live. In many such blocks, anti-social behaviour multiplies, and one has only to go to any council estate to see graffiti on the walls. One hears also of many other forms of anti-social behaviour, of which drugs and noise are but two.

It is a tragedy that the local authorities have been so slow to react to the mushrooming of anti-social behaviour. By their failure to react quickly, they have given an incentive for such behaviour to continue.

The problem has been aggravated elsewhere, as well as in modern high-rise blocks. Those of us who have lived in the modern purpose-built flats that have appeared over the past 25 years have frequently found that they are not as well insulated against noise as they might be. That means that a record player in one flat can be heard only too easily in another.

The provisions of the Bill are not mandatory for local authorities, but permissive. There is no doubt that some local authorities will say rightly that noise is not a major problem, as noise and noisy parties is more of an urban problem than a rural one, but some urban local authorities do not treat the problem as seriously as they ought to. When the Conservatives controlled Barnet council, they instituted a noise patrol that dealt with a large number of cases. When Labour and the Liberal Democrats took control, they redirected spending and wound up the patrol. The patrol was doing a lot of good work, and its absence has annoyed a large number of my constituents.

Mr. John Carlisle: Have not we had a semi-indication of that today from the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock)? She tried to refute my allegation that, in many cases, environmental health officers seemed to be spending a lot more time building small empires with what seem to be trivial regulations—some of which have been passed by the House. My hon. Friend is absolutely right to say that there is a possibility of political connotations. We as Conservatives see the very real problem that noise is creating and believe that local authorities should attach great importance to helping to alleviate that problem. Is that not confirmed by the fact that the Conservative Benches have been semi-packed all morning, while the Opposition Benches have been very sparsely attended?

Mr. Marshall: I do not wish to attack the London borough of Lewisham too much. I fought Lewisham in 1974 and Lewisham fought back and won, but I noticed recently that an hon. Member who lives there decided that the education system in Lewisham was not good enough for his children.

Ms Ruddock: I am sure that the hon. Gentleman would expect me to comment on the intervention by the hon. Member for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle). There is no question in my mind that local authorities—whether they are Labour, Liberal Democrat or Tory-controlled—ought to carry out their duties with respect to their citizens in all areas, including health and safety, food regulation and noise. If authorities find that they do not have enough resources, perhaps the fault lies with the Government.

Mr. Marshall: I am surprised that the hon. Lady decided to intervene, as I suspect that she will make a speech later. I resent the suggestion that local authorities have been short-changed by the Government, and I speak with the authority of one who served for four years as chairman of a finance committee. Before we gained control of Ealing council, we were told by the Labour party that it was terribly efficient, but soon after we gained control, we found that we could squeeze millions of pounds out of local authority spending without affecting the quality of service.

If the hon. Lady looks at the statistics from the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, she will see that there are huge fluctuations in the relative efficiency of different local authorities. If authorities such as Lewisham were to become as efficient as other authorities, they would have plenty of money to spend, both on improving the quality of the education service and on dealing with problems such as noise. It is no argument for her to say that the council does not have enough money—the council must become more efficient.

Ms Ruddock rose—

Mr. Marshall: Before the hon. Lady jumps up again, I should remind her that the Audit Commission has pointed out that local education authorities could save hundreds of millions of pounds by getting rid of surplus school places. If they did so, they could improve the quality of education, and the hon. Lady would have nothing to jump up about—but she can jump up again if she wants.

Ms Ruddock: The hon. Gentleman makes a great mistake in attacking Lewisham, as the very bodies to which he has referred frequently congratulate the council—as does the Department of the Environment—on its excellent delivery of public services and its good housekeeping and careful husbandry of resources.

Mr. Marshall: All I can say is that a colleague of the hon. Lady decided that—while it may be good enough for her constituents—the education service in Lewisham was not good enough for his two children.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): Order. May I inquire what this has to do with the Second Reading of the Bill? I think nothing.

Mr. Marshall: I shall not beg to differ with you, Madam Deputy Speaker, because I shall wish to catch your eye for an Adjournment Debate later. Local authority spending is an important part of the Bill, as authorities have been given a permissive, rather than a mandatory, power. It is up to them to decide how they exercise that power.

I shall refer quickly to one or two items. The £40 fixed penalty is too low. Some 40 or 50 noisy people at a late-night party in London would have to pay only £1 each—what is a quid at two o'clock in the morning?—and the fine will be paid. I should like the fixed penalty to be as much as £100, as that is more realistic.

I welcome the power of seizure contained in the Bill. If local authorities were to take away the noisy equipment, and did so once or twice, that would act as a severe disincentive for people to carry on with late night parties.

This is a positive Bill, and I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North, on introducing it. I wish it fair speed in Committee; I am sure that it will have an interesting Committee stage, as the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) has volunteered to sit on it. He may create some noise—whether he will create any light is a moot point.

Ms Joan Ruddock (Lewisham, Deptford): I join other hon. Members in congratulating the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on his success in the ballot and on introducing the Bill, which I am pleased to say has our general support. I also wish to express my understanding of his absence at this time, and to add to the tributes that others have paid to Philip Lawrence.

The Bill would implement some of the main recommendations contained in the report of the Government's working party on noise, which was published nearly a year ago. In particular, as we have heard, it will create a new criminal offence of night-time noise, and it will clarify the law relating to the seizure and confiscation of noise-making equipment. We believe that it would have been much more satisfactory had the Government managed to conclude their consultations in better time and had introduced comprehensive measures to tackle noise in last year's Environment Bill, as we urged them to do.

Measures to tackle the chronic and worsening problem of noise nuisance are long overdue, as all hon. Members have said. Noise, defined as unwanted sound, can cause extreme stress, exhaustion and other health problems. Many of us have had to deal with constituents suffering utter frustration and misery owing to noise nuisance. The problem is a real one for thousands of people, and it is still growing.

Other hon. Members have quoted the figures for 1993-94. In that year, there were 131,000 complaints about noise from domestic premises—a rise of more than 10 per cent. on the previous year—and it was the seventh consecutive year in which complaints rose. As my hon. Friend the Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) reminded us, noise disputes are reported to have been responsible for 17 deaths, and the true figure may be higher.

The Association of Metropolitan Authorities tells us that complaints about noisy neighbours have increased by 700 per cent. since 1978. Of the 131,153 complaints in 1993-94, more than 32,000 were dealt with through mediation and informal resolution, and more than 5,000 abatement notices were served. However, the vast majority of complaints were not resolved, and the number of court actions remains tiny. In that same period, there were just 441 prosecutions, and 372 convictions. Of all the complaints made, only one in 297 resulted in a court prosecution and one in 352 in a conviction. That cannot be right.

About 60 per cent. of all mediated neighbour disputes involve noise, and estimates of the success rate range from 40 to 77 per cent. Mediation is cost-effective and usually costs between £200 and £300. If intervention is early enough, it can save local authorities a great deal of money, as well as save the time of the police and the courts. Mediation services are a valuable resource when dealing with noise nuisance, and I wish to place on record my recognition of their role. I also wish to pay tribute to my local service, which has been extremely helpful to me and to many of my constituents. Obviously, mediation does not solve all noise disputes. The Bill does not tackle all noise disputes, but deals only with night-time noise.

The causes of some noises are more amenable to mediation than others. Night-time noise problems are especially difficult to mediate. Frequently, people are more belligerent and, in my experience, often suffering from the effects of alcohol or drugs. Noise nuisance and other forms of anti-social behaviour are often perpetrated by vulnerable people who are unsupervised under the guise of care in the community. Such people can cause havoc in a neighbourhood and neither mediation nor the provisions of the Bill will deal with their problems, which are more deep-seated and require much greater application from the Government to provide for them both in the health service and in community services.

I hope that the Bill will succeed in providing the first penalty for the careless, selfish and sometimes criminal householder who causes night-time nuisance. I know exactly what such noise means in practice. In my very own street, in my inner-city constituency, we have had a succession of noise nuisances over the past four years.

One couple, who live at the opposite end of the street, told me that, for the two years before I moved in, there had been continuous problems with their neighbours. When they came to me, they had already suffered for two years. They had a petition signed by 18 neighbouring households testifying to the extent of the problem. In a note that they put through my letterbox, the woman wrote:

"We are a normal family. We don't object to parties—anything within limits—but this is too much to bear."

Her husband is a postman getting up at 4.30 in the morning. They have a child of five who has to go to school. She also goes out to work, yet they could get no peace at home and no sleep at night. Life had become utterly impossible.

That problem was brought to me in June 1994. It was resolved only two months ago, despite all the efforts of the relevant authorities, as well as my efforts. During that period of persistent noise nuisance, various neighbours who were home owners, and an elderly woman who had to be rehoused by the local authority, moved away. My constituent wrote to me:

"people are being driven out, the police carry no weight whatsoever, though I may add, without them on the end of the phone I too feel I may have gone by now. I have also had great support from the EHO, who have sent us the 'Noise Pack', twice now they have sent letters to No. 18, so the next step is to take court proceedings which I have reservations of doing for obvious reasons."

That constituent was courageous and persisted in trying to deal with a problem that was not hers alone but the whole street's. However, the problems got worse and worse.

After the first offending household had been somewhat quieted through the procedures of the local authority and threatened with eviction—it was a council tenancy—the woman's immediate neighbour vacated his home and let it to a so-called care in the community organisation. That organisation, for a substantial amount of money, brought four young people—which became a succession of young people—into the house, all of whom were on probation and none of whom was supervised in the residence. The Government require no registration of such small homes. From then on, there was a reign of tyranny in our street.

Fortunately, we keep such long hours in the House that I would often get home when the worst was over. People could not believe that I had not heard every bit of the loud music, the shouting, the motor bikes, the throwing, the arguing and, once, an axe being thrown into the neighbour's garden. That havoc could not be easily arrested. Recordings were taken; things quietened down. By the time that the case was to come to court, it was said that new recordings were required and so on and so forth.

I shall not continue with that sad story, but it is a miracle that someone did not commit an act of violence against the perpetrators. Those responsible for the young people showed a complete lack of responsibility. What is more, that illustrates the amount of time, effort, expense and frustration involved when one uses the present law.

For all those reasons, we welcome the Bill. We congratulate Val Gibson and the Right to Peace and Quiet Campaign, as well as all those constituents who have tried valiantly to find some solution to the problems. Much more comprehensive action is required, however, to deal with cases of persistent anti-social behaviour, when noise is used as a weapon alongside threats and often actual violence.

In July last year, Labour proposed to tackle such anti-social behaviour, suggesting a number of remedies in our document "A Quiet Life". They were widely recognised, appreciated and applauded by everyone except the Government, who dismissed them as "merely window dressing"—those were Ministers' words. On reflection, however—perhaps because of the amount of support—Ministers have taken them up, I am glad to say, albeit in a more limited form, in part V of the new Housing Bill, which has little else to recommend it.

Although we welcome the Noise Bill and its intentions, the Labour party remains concerned about aspects of the legislation. My hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) raised the substantial technical concerns expressed by his local authority. I hope that we shall hear some response from the Minister to those concerns. I must raise a number of other concerns as well as some that I have in common with my hon. Friend.

My hon. Friend the Member for Tooting mentioned resources. The financial memorandum states:

"The additional cost for local authorities to enforce the night noise offence is estimated to be between £1 and £3 million per year."

[Ms Joan Ruddock]

A few minutes ago, the hon. Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) and I had an exchange on that very question. How do local authorities prioritise, when they are required to implement so much legislation on behalf of their citizens?

I fear that the financial memorandum grossly underestimates the amount of money that would be required for effective implementation of the Bill as proposed. Dividing even the maximum figure of £3 million by each of the 405 local authorities in England and Wales would give just over £7,000 per authority. In the survey of local authorities published yesterday by the National Society for Clean Air, an alarming 70 per cent. of those who responded identified lack of staff and resources as a major constraint on their ability to control noise nuisance—it was by far the biggest reason cited for local authorities having difficulties dealing with the problem. I am sure that that was the problem that confronted the London borough of Barnet.

I know that the hon. Friends of the hon. Member for Ealing, North are taking notes on his behalf. I wonder whether he has estimated how many local authorities will adopt the provisions and how much, on average, implementation will cost each authority. Alternatively, perhaps the Minister would like to give the Government's view—I suspect that they assisted with the calculations.

Furthermore, as the offence is specifically night-time noise, it will be essential for local authorities to provide out-of-hours services if they are to implement the proposals with any effect. In an area like mine, local authority officers would probably feel unable to go if they had to go alone. They either have to get a police escort or go in pairs, such are the dangers of dealing with night-time noise in many areas. Given that local authorities are currently cutting services to meet the Government's latest demands in respect of revenue support settlements, that may well be impossible.

Even if local authorities do implement the measures effectively, they will not benefit from the moneys raised by fixed-fine penalties. I wonder whether the hon. Member for Ealing, North considered allowing local authorities to retain the sums so raised, as they are able to do with parking fines. If so, why did he decide against it?

The level of fines proposed is one of the few points on which I agree with Conservative Members's criticisms of the Bill. I do not believe that £40 is consistent with deterrence, and I doubt very much whether victims of noise nuisance would consider it sufficient punishment.

We are unable to understand why the proposed powers are adoptive rather than mandatory. The hon. Member for Ealing, North outlined his reasoning, which is that not all local authorities face the same severity of problem. If any local authority is faced with just one such problem, that authority owes it to the council tax payer householder to see to it that the problem is dealt with. That means that there should be mandatory powers and that action should not be a matter of choice.

If it is a matter of choice, it is likely to give rise to a situation in which behaviour that constitutes a criminal offence on one side of a street would be perfectly legal—perhaps not perfectly legal, but at least not subject to redress—on the other side if that street happens to be divided by a local authority boundary. The consequence could be even greater disparity between the noise nuisance services provided by local authorities in future.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. James Clappison): Does the hon. Lady accept that the provision of a mandatory service across the country will inevitably cost more?

Ms Ruddock: I can only deduce from the Minister's question that he is perfectly happy that some local authorities will not use the powers, either because they cannot find the money or perhaps because they do not give sufficient priority to dealing with noise nuisance. The Minister's question shows yet again that the Government are interested not in people but—

Mr. Tom Pendry (Stalybridge and Hyde): They are interested in window dressing.

Ms Ruddock: Indeed, as my hon. Friend says, the Government are interested only in window dressing. They support the Bill but are not prepared to ensure that local authorities have the necessary resources to give an equal right to all our citizens to have noise nuisance dealt with effectively.

Mr. Jenkin: I apologise for not hearing the beginning of the hon. Lady's speech. It is interesting that Conservatives are usually accused of over-centralising and being too dictatorial to local authorities, but when we want to give local authorities the choice to decide how to handle issues such as noise abatement, according to local circumstances and their judgment, the hon. Lady wants to centralise and control. Does not that say something about the hon. Lady's party?

Ms Ruddock: If I may say so, it says something about the hon. Gentleman. What he is proposing does not mean choice for local authorities; he is proposing that citizens should have unequal rights. He is saying that some citizens should have the right to have noise nuisance at night subject to redress by their local authority, while others should not. That cannot be the proper way for the Government to proceed. We have often sought choice for local authorities to do the extra things that citizens would have them do, but it should be a common baseline that all citizens have this particular fundamental right. We do not wish local authorities to have to decide whether to provide the service according to the difficulties they face under the revenue support grant settlement by the Government.

Mr. John Marshall: Does the hon. Lady agree that there are very great differences between urban areas, such as those that she and I represent, where noise pollution is a major problem, and rural areas where it may not be a problem? In the real countryside, where people live at significant distances from each other, noise is not a problem at all. To impose a national solution to a local problem is sometimes a mistake.

Ms Ruddock: I wonder where the hon. Gentleman lives and what newspapers he reads. Has he never heard of the noise nuisances that occur in the countryside? Although the Bill would not cover the problem, raves are now one of the greatest problems for people living in the countryside. Noise nuisance is not just an urban problem. In a village, one anti-social neighbour can cause distress to others as great as in any town or city. Those affected have a right to redress, and that is why the Opposition say that powers should be given to all local authorities and they should not have to opt in.

Measures to tackle the chronic and worsening problem of noise nuisance are long overdue. We already know that the provisions that exist are unacceptable to victims, most of whom are extremely dissatisfied and would continue to be if they found that their local authority would not tackle the problem whereas a neighbouring authority would. It would be preferable for all local authorities to be required to implement those measures and to receive appropriate support from Government to do so.

Clarification is also needed over the proposed night-time noise limit of 35 dB. I assume that that will be the limit used by the Secretary of State, if he has to implement the Bill—perhaps the Under-Secretary would clarify that for us. Defining noise nuisance is problematic. My hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West referred to some of the differences in the ways in which people perceive noise and how they are affected by it. Many hon. Members will be aware of the survey on attitudes to noise carried out by the building research establishment in 1991. One of the main findings was the great variety in the acceptability of noises. Car alarms and people arguing were far more objectionable than children playing or people laughing, even if the decibel level was the same. In other words, the type and quality of noise is as important as the level of noise in determining nuisance.

Specialists in the subject are also concerned that the 35 dB limit does not take adequate account of low frequencies and, in particular, that the "A" weighting used to adjust sound measurement to mimic the human ear does not adequately describe bass music. As we have heard today, that type of music—low, persistent beat music—is the most common source of night-time noise complaints.

Labour would welcome a clarification of how the chosen limit will take account of ambient noise levels, which in rural areas—I concede the point to the hon. Member for Hendon, South—are very different from those in urban areas. It seems unlikely that any one limit can prove satisfactory, and the Bill would give the Secretary of State the power to determine different noise levels for different circumstances.

I wonder whether the hon. Member for Ealing, North has considered that local authorities might play an important role in advising the Secretary of State on what levels are appropriate to different areas and different circumstances. Areas are different, and it could be useful to involve local authorities in trying to establish how to deal with the measurement of noise, as the Bill provides.

I want to address the important issue of the relationship between the local authority officers who will implement the Bill's measures and the police. Many of those officers are concerned that attempting to implement measures to deal with night-time noise nuisance and the confiscation of equipment may put them in potentially dangerous and difficult situations. Unless they receive adequate support and co-operation from the police, we believe that those local authority officers will be unable to make full and effective use of their new powers. Knowing the enormous pressures that the police are under and the shortage of officers on the beat, does the hon. Member for Ealing, North, or the Minister, believe that the police will be able to provide adequate back-up if local authorities undertake those new duties?

We seek clarification on a further issue. We wish to know whether the equipment that can be seized will include items such as records, cassette tapes and compact discs. Will do-it-yourself equipment and tools such as drills also be included? What is the status, if any, of noisy animals, such as the constantly barking dog that is often left alone at home overnight?

We are delighted that the Bill makes provision for the seizure of equipment and clarifies what can be taken. Although one hon. Member stated that such seizures had not presented a problem to his authority, it certainly has been such in my area, where, in one desperate case with which I had to deal, equipment was eventually seized by the police, but the courts made them give the equipment back. The police felt extremely angry about that, and felt that their position had been undermined. The case has not been successfully resolved, partly as a consequence of the court's intervention.

I have raised many points for clarification, and I hope that we can hear either from the hon. Member for Ealing, North, should he be able to return to the Chamber, or from the Minister, as it is important for us to get a better measure of the Bill before it proceeds to Committee. Having said that, I hope very much that it will receive a successful Second Reading and that it will take its place in Committee. It is but a small measure, but we should like to make it as effective as possible in the battle to contain noise and anti-social behaviour. The Opposition will co-operate with the hon. Member for Ealing, North when his Bill reaches Committee.

Lady Olga Maitland (Sutton and Cheam): I add my congratulations to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on introducing the Bill and I appreciate his reasons for not being in the Chamber right now. He undoubtedly had a duty of friendship and loyalty to attend the funeral of Philip Lawrence, and I am particularly sympathetic in that regard as it was due to Philip Lawrence's tragic death that my private Member's Bill—the Offensive Weapons Bill—came into being. I therefore add my tribute to Mr. Lawrence.

I also wish to stress the importance of the Noise Bill. I suspect that, if one went to a pub or coffee bar and asked people which topic was more on their minds—the Scott report or the measures that my hon. Friend has introduced to try to control noise nuisance, which has destroyed people's lives—there would undoubtedly be a chorus of responses about how noise afflicted people's lives, making the subject of the Scott report a secondary issue.

No one needs bad neighbours. Everyone is entitled to a decent life. For years, however, neighbours have been suffering in silence, frustrated by the fact that the police do not regard noise as a matter for them unless violence is involved. Local authorities have also been reluctant to take action, and have perhaps felt somewhat powerless.

Desperate sufferers of noise have only one recourse: to take legal action at their own cost, and that takes time. The scale of the problem is reflected in the enormous post bag that I received, containing more than 200 letters from angry people. One of the letters—from a woman who lives in Sheffield, Yorkshire—sums up the passion and feeling that people have in this regard:

"We have personal experience of a neighbour from hell.

The noise was horrendous day and night. My thoughts alternated between suicide and murder."

[Lady Olga Maitland]

We must understand how deeply people feel about noise and how difficult it is for people to complain about it. Those who make noise have become intimidating and quite violent if people complain—for example, people have been stabbed, shot and beaten up for objecting to noise. In 1994, a classical pianist was gaoled because he set fire to the home of an elderly woman who dared to protest about his daily nine hours of practising.

The scale of noise complaints has increased over the years, particularly noise from neighbours. Last year, there were 112,000 recorded noise complaints—and I am certain that many more complaints could have been made—mainly as a result of bawdy parties, blaring music systems, barking dogs and quarrelling families.

Noise can have a serious effect on people's health—it can cause mental scars of stress, anxiety and depression, and the physical changes are well documented. I draw hon. Members' attention to other letters that I have received. One from a person who lives in south London states:

"It has affected my health and I am now under the Doctor's care. I have become so depressed about the noise, the lack of sleep and the amount of time and money involved in taking this action, that I regularly take antidepressants."

I have also received a letter from one of my constituents, which states:

"We have only had one decent night's sleep this year and that was only because we went and stayed at a friend's.

My wife and I are tired, stressed and suffering from depression. In short our life is being made hell and we are becoming ill because of this man."

The powers in this Bill are undoubtedly important.

Some hon. Members have asked why we are only talking about noise that is made at night, when there can be so much aggravating noise by day. I feel for people who have retired after a lifetime of work and toil and who are trying to enjoy peace during the day. Is music any more tolerable during the day? Nevertheless, I do not wish to denigrate the importance of putting a curfew on noise at night.

The powers we give to local authorities must enable them to tackle these problems robustly and take reasonable steps to investigate excessive noise. One issue is the benchmark of acceptable noise. We live in a noisy society. Even at night, we sleep at an average 35-dB level. That is considered normal. It is equivalent to sleeping in a bedroom with closed, single-glazed windows, facing on to a busy suburban street. Moreover, two thirds of British homes are exposed to noise above that limit.

Of all noise, noise at night is undoubtedly the most distressing. It is interesting to consider the experience of Westminster city council, which has led the way in tackling noise. It has noise patrols which operate 24 hours a day, seven days a week. That has undoubtedly brought relief to residents. That council's experience is that, in 90 or even 95 per cent. of cases, people will respond positively to a polite and courteous approach to turn down the sound. The real question is how we deal with the hard core of people who do not respond and cause hell for everyone else.

There are other problems. It is not just a matter of sounds coming from the domestic property next door, the flat above or the house nearby. Noise at night from other sources should be included in the Bill. For example, cockerels crow at night and with the early dawn. That is not just a rural issue. Many people living in suburban areas, including my constituency, like to keep a henhouse and cockerels in their gardens. That may seem romantic, but it is not—they make a dreadful piercing sound.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: My hon. Friend does not represent a rural seat. Is she saying that people who live in the countryside should no longer be able to keep cockerels, a tradition going back many centuries? Country people often find that people from, for example, Sutton and Cheam, move to the countryside and then kick up a fuss about rural traditions.

Lady Olga Maitland: I understand my hon. Friend's comments about cockerels in a rural environment. However, he must remember that the noise of cockerels in a urban area, where there is a concentrated population, cannot be absorbed and is therefore much more intense. Other problems include dogs barking in gardens and car doors slamming. Those are not strictly neighbour nuisances, but they are close to that.

We are talking about how we can improve the Bill. I have a few reservations about it. It is an empowering Bill. It does not make it obligatory for local authorities to set up noise patrols. Local authorities are mixed in the degree of seriousness that they attach to noise. About 65 per cent. of local authorities in England and Wales do not provide a 24-hour service. About 86 run some form of service, and about 19 run a weekend service.

Let us consider the experience of my constituency. Sutton is a Liberal Democrat-controlled council which claims to be strong on the environment and on environmental pollution. However, it employs just two people, once a week, to investigate noise nuisance complaints. In the past year, it has received about 1,200 complaints. Two people working once a week will not get very far when there are so many frustrated residents.

What worries me is how to put pressure on local authorities to take the issue seriously. Obviously I want to encourage all council tax payers to press the matter loudly, firmly and persistently. If they do not like what their local authorities are doing, for heaven's sake they should vote them out. The Liberal Democrats in Sutton do not deserve to retain their so-called green label when they are manifestly not taking action against environmental polluters.

I welcome the Bill. It is important that, at long last, people will have a swift remedy. There will be clearly defined standards of what is acceptable when mediation fails. A sharp rap on the knuckles or in the pocket with a noise ticket will focus minds. Perhaps the level of fine, which is set at £40, should be raised, or perhaps it should be flexible. I agree with hon. Members that £40 is not a real deterrent.

Neighbours should not have to suffer months and months of guggling around by local authorities and environmental health officers, which in the end achieves absolutely nothing. Residents want action. The Bill gives them the means to take action. In future, it will be closed season for noise. The tyranny of noise vandals can end. I warmly welcome the Bill.

1.4 pm

Mr. Richard Alexander (Newark): It is a privilege to speak in this debate, which has attracted wide interest both within and outside the House. I compliment my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway), who is in his place, and I welcome his Bill.

Apart from physical violence, probably nothing other than noise causes so much distress, offence and misery, and results in such a lowering of the quality of life of innocent people. People should have the right to enjoy their homes in peace and quiet, and the selfishness of noise makers should have the attention of the law. The Bill will enable that.

Hon. Members have given examples of constituents complaining about excessive noise which councils feel unable to do much about. They require detailed evidence, collated over quite a long period, detailed records, and so on. The net result of council inquiries is continuing misery for the person suffering from the noise until something is done and often, as my hon. Friends have said, unpleasant retaliation from the people causing the nuisance and their friends in the meantime.

The law is clearly unsatisfactory, and statistics show how ineffective it is. In 1993-94, there were roughly 111,000 complaints of neighbour or domestic noise to local authorities. Of those 111,000, statutory nuisance was confirmed in only 40,000, and only 3,600 abatement notices were served. As a result of those notices, only 247 prosecutions took place and 220 convictions were obtained. That shows that the law is deeply unsatisfactory.

Those 111,000 complainants cannot all have been completely mischievous and without merit. They took the trouble to do something about the misery that noise was creating in their lives. The law is also unsatisfactory because local authorities are uncertain about the extent of their powers. That may account for the minimal number of prosecutions that are undertaken. I understand—it has not been contradicted—that local authorities will welcome a specific power to act such as that in the Bill.

I am afraid that, in daily life these days, I find people more and more selfish. Music—if one can call it that—is one of the worst examples of noise nuisance. Barking dogs also come very near the top of the list. Such selfish acts cause sleep deprivation and damage to health. Often, violence results, and it is sad that, when it does, both parties are brought before the magistrates court and both are bound over as though they were equally at fault. It is a useless remedy and gives no satisfaction at all to the person suffering from the noise. When both parties are bound over, the perpetrator continues his or her activity, often to a greater extent, while taunting the other person that they can do nothing about it. Moreover, the person who complains is made to feel equally to blame. That must be unsatisfactory.

To make noise above a certain level should be a criminal offence, both during the night and during the day. I believe that the Bill does not go far enough. The matter should not just be left to local byelaws or local interpretation. Making noise above a certain level needs to be a criminal offence per se, just as not wearing a seat belt is. It should be a law like the others that we all have to abide by. Life should be made just as unpleasant for the perpetrator as he or she makes it for the victim.

I tell my hon. Friend the Minister that the Bill could go further. It still relies on warning notices, it still relies on local authority action, and it does not provide the instant action or instant prosecution that many of us would like. By instant action, I mean an immediate summons to the magistrates court, as applies when one is caught speeding or driving with excess alcohol in the body.

On 30 October 1994, the then Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins), announced that he was setting up a working party to identify quicker and simpler remedies to the problem of neighbour noise. The Bill is the result, but I must tell my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North and my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State that it could go further. The person suffering from noise in the middle of the night who complains about all the nuisances that we have been discussing will not get any more sleep that night, the next night or any subsequent night until the local authority has gone through its procedures.

I grant that the procedures under the Bill are better than those available previously, but I seek from the Bill the instant remedy that I thought the Government sought to provide. Such an instant remedy was one of the proposals contained in the package of measures announced by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State on 12 December last. He said that action was to be undertaken as soon as possible, and an instant remedy should have been included in the Bill.

So long as making noise above a certain level is only a civil offence, people will continue to have to take the law into their own hands, and complaints about noise and disturbance from neighbours will increase. Controls on neighbour noise must be strengthened. The Bill is a start, but it is only a start. I draw the Under-Secretary of State's attention to his press release on 12 December last. He said that the Government wanted to create a new offence dealing with excessive noise from domestic premises during the night-time period. He added that that would "require new legislative powers and we will look for an early opportunity to introduce these".

The Bill gives my hon. Friend that opportunity, and I hope that he will table suitable amendments in Committee to achieve just that.

I have a further concern, to which my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) alluded. It relates to timing. There are two completely opposite problems. The first concerns when night time is proposed to start. A perfectly lawful activity that is a little noisier than one might wish could still be going on between 11 pm and midnight. To cut off that noise at 11 pm might be a little inappropriate, especially if a conviction resulted. I suggest that midnight might be a more appropriate time.

There is, however, a totally contrary concern, which may be thought to conflict with what I have just said. Noise is also offensive during the day, and 11 o'clock may not be early enough. Many people are shift workers or work at night, such as those who run our hospitals and transport services. Their sleep patterns are different from the norm, but they are as susceptible as the rest of us to excessive noise. That is the other side of the coin, and I hope that that, too, can be considered in Committee.

As a result of what is happening these days, people find that their general health is being badly affected through stress and lack of sleep. The result is something akin to road rage: anger, rage and hatred. In many cases, violence also results, and who can blame the victims of noise if that sometimes happens? The Bill will prevent some of that. It does not go far enough, but it deserves all our support.

1.14 pm

Mr. Bernard Jenkin (Colchester, North): I am grateful for the opportunity to take part in the debate. With your permission, Madam Deputy Speaker, may I also be the first to welcome my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) back to the Chamber from his duties in his constituency? May I be allowed to put on record the fact that everyone who has spoken has heaped praise on my hon. Friend for his work in preparing and introducing the Bill?

Much of the discussion has been about the scope of the Bill. I echo some of the sentiments of my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) about its possible deficiencies, in that it confines itself to night-time noise and to neighbourly noise. Much of the noise that affects people's residences comes not from other people's residences but from commercial and publicly owned concerns outside the domestic environment with which the Bill deals.

I fully accept that we should perhaps tackle the issue in bite-sized pieces rather than try to be too comprehensive, but I still hope that those aspects will be taken on board. If my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North studies the record of the debate, he may find good meat to feast on when he is thinking about amendments for the Committee stage.

I shall now pick up something said earlier by my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett), who unfortunately cannot be in the Chamber at the moment. He got dragged into a minor altercation about the role of local authority environmental health officers and their attitude to forms of regulation other than noise regulation. If we could persuade the environmental health officers to tackle the problem of noise abatement with the same terrifying enthusiasm with which they tackle food safety, we should probably have a riot on our hands about their intrusion into our lives.

It is worth analysing what drives environmental health officers on the food safety issue—it is usually a "more than my job's worth" mentality. The way in which the regulations have been framed—the European legislative and regulatory framework is as much at fault as ours—means that there is a liability on the officers if they fail to enforce them. For noise abatement there is no such liability. Perhaps there should be.

Perhaps there should be more than a mere discretionary duty on local authorities to enforce noise abatement. Perhaps there should be more of a legal requirement, so that in case of failure, sanctions could be imposed on the local authority. Perhaps, also, there should be less of a legal obligation on local authorities to reduce the temperature of our cheese to below 6 deg C, which spoils its flavour, and all the other silly things that people are forced to do. I offer that as a countervailing thought.

One of the factors that drove me to take part in the debate was the case of "Mrs. Smith". I call her that because I want to maintain her anonymity, but she will be a familiar figure to almost every right hon. and hon. Member of the House, because she is typical of the problem that I hope the Bill will tackle. She is a dear, sweet lady who has saved enough money to live in her own home and maintain herself. This is not, incidentally, a problem caused by high-rise construction. She lives in a modern, well-spaced housing area called Highwoods, which is an attractive place to live.

She has been unfortunate, in that a rather selfish young man has moved in next door. He started out by causing a great deal of noise at night with music and cars revving. She naturally involved the environmental health department. It is appalling that, ultimately, the local authority will advise her to take out an injunction against the neighbour. It is absurd that ordinary law-abiding citizens must start spending their good money on legal advice to take out an injunction against somebody who is literally breaching the peace.

The sad thing is that the youth next door would probably be eligible for legal aid. The lady's solicitor did what a wise solicitor should do in the circumstances—he advised her not to go down that route, as the youth would have unlimited resources with which to contest the injunction, while she would be using up her valuable savings. It is absolutely right that we should tackle the matter. We do not expect the police to apply to the court for an injunction to stop somebody exceeding the speed limit, so why do we expect little old ladies to spend their savings to stop someone breaching the peace?

Mr. Couchman: Does my hon. Friend agree that one of the few drawbacks of the right-to-buy legislation is that a property bought with hard-earned savings and a mortgage may be next door to a property that has not been bought? That is particularly true with blocks of flats. A tenant can then arrive at a property that is still owned by a local authority or housing association and make all the noise under the sun, thereby severely prejudicing the peace and happiness of the people who bought the next-door property and blighting the property so much that it becomes unsaleable.

Mr. Jenkin: I agree with my hon. Friend. When properties are bought, the undertakings on noise and the countervailing pressures on tenants by a landlord are transferred. It should be easier for a landlord—whether social or council—to deal with people who are disrupting the peace. Surely there is less of a duty on a public housing authority to provide long-term accommodation for somebody who is not prepared to play by the rules or to fit in with the local community. It should be easier for councils to evict tenants who have breached the covenanted undertakings about noise that they made when they moved in.

I fully understand my hon. Friend's point, which ultimately depends on the interpretation of the courts. My authority, Colchester, argues that there is little purpose in applying for court orders to evict noisy tenants from premises, because magistrates tend to support the right of residence of the tenant rather than the rights of the other tenants and residents.

We have been dealing with the minutiae and the technical detail of the Bill, but I would like to take a step back in my last few comments.

This is an important piece of social legislation. In some respects, it is the equivalent of the Clean Air Act 1956, under which individuals who were polluting the environment to the detriment of the common good were told that they could no longer do so. It was a good piece of Tory legislation. We want a clean airwaves Act, if that is the correct term. We want to be able to have around us clean sound, not sound pollution—to that extent, the Bill is important.

I would go further: we are living in a society in which people have more and more rights and are more capable of indulging themselves. People are increasingly brought up to express their own aspirations and emotions, and there is less discipline in schools. People are less encouraged to have regard, for their immediate neighbours, and they have more technical means of inflicting their indulgences on others. If people abuse their rights, it must be the duty of the law to take those rights away. It is the duty of the law to ensure that it protects those who live in the community considerately, in co-operation with others, and who abide by what we would regard as social norms.

I plead with the House to make the Bill as effective as possible, so that decent people receive protection. My hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North said that he did not want the Bill to be a killjoy Bill. I hope that it will wipe the smirks off the faces of some of the selfish people in society.

1.26 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. James Clappison): I welcome this opportunity to make a brief contribution to the Second Reading debate. Before welcoming the Bill, I should like to join other hon. Members in congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on choosing this as the subject of his private Member's Bill, following his success in the ballot. I also congratulate him on the clear and concise way in which he outlined the Bill to the House this morning. My hon. Friend deserves our congratulations and thanks. For my part, I fully associate myself with all the comments that have been made about the reasons for my hon. Friend's absence earlier. I extend my sympathy to him on that account.

The Government welcome the Bill, which is an important piece of legislation. We take on board the general welcome that has been extended to it in speeches from my hon. Friends the Members for Halesowen and Stourbridge (Mr. Hawksley), for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. Hargreaves), for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett), for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall), for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) and for Newark (Mr. Alexander), as well as the hon. Members for Tooting (Mr. Cox), for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) and for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks). I note, too, that the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock), who speaks for the Opposition, extended a broad welcome to the Bill. The measure has been debated in a good and constructive way and has had a well-deserved general welcome.

The Government recognise the extreme distress that can be caused by domestic noise, particularly at night. We also recognise the potential cost to the country of the lost sleep, illness and disrupted lives that result from such noise. Today, we have heard many examples of individual suffering. I hope that the Bill will help people who suffer from the problem, especially noise at night.

I am thinking of people such as the residents of Clare road in Greenford, to whom my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North referred in his opening speech. Those residents have suffered from loud music, noisy parties and six months of sleepless nights. My hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford mentioned constituents whose cases he has taken up, including Viki Harrold and Daisy Clement. In particular, he has vigorously taken up the case of Val Gibson, the founder of the Right to Peace and Quiet Campaign.

At present, local authorities have a range of powers to abate noise nuisance in premises, including land, and from vehicles, machinery and equipment in streets, but it has become increasingly apparent that the controls on domestic noise are not working as well as they might.

The number of complaints to local authorities in England and Wales about noise from domestic premises continues to rise steadily. In 1993-94, there were more than 130,000 such complaints—more than a threefold increase over the previous decade. That concern is reflected by the large number of letters received by my Department asking that more be done to address the problem.

One of the themes that has emerged in the debate is that it has been the general experience of hon. Members that the number of complaints that come to them is rising. That was said my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford and the hon. Member for Newham, North-West. That demonstrates the extent and prevalence of the problem, especially in urban areas such as Hendon, South, where residents in tower blocks are particularly affected.

Another theme has been that noise is a widespread problem that can have tragic consequences, as we heard in graphic detail from my hon. Friend the Member for Halesowen and Stourbridge. He spoke of the disproportionate and violent response in some instances. The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey spoke in similar vein, as did my hon. Friend the Member for Newark. They made clear the tragic consequences that can stem from noise.

Noise can come from many sources. We have heard about a wide variety of noises, from Nepalese bagpipes to the problems caused by riddling, but hon. Members have come back to the problem of noise from loud music, especially amplified noise and noise from musical equipment.

My hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle) took us back to the era of flower power, which I had not previously associated with him. It was a trip of some nostalgia. My hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North showed a commendable knowledge of modern music and broadened my knowledge of rap, jungle, techno and hardcore, the latter three of which I have not come across before. I look forward to hearing more about them. He made the valuable point that one man's music is another man's noise. We need to be thoughtful and considerate about our tastes in music, and especially about the volume at which it is played.

It is fair to say that many young people who listen to those sorts of noise are considerate and do not cause problems. Many of our constituents enjoy such music peaceably and thoughtfully, but there are those who are not reasonable or neighbourly and, above all, not considerate. My hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford made a valuable point in talking about thoughtlessness. That is the common denominator of much of the problem of noise. If neighbours would think of other neighbours, possibly by extending invitations to parties, they might overcome some of the problems. Sometimes, neighbours are not prepared to be reasonable or accept mediation. There need to be actions that can be taken and powers for local authorities to deal with the serious problems of domestic noise nuisance.

The Bill would give local environmental health officers additional powers to deal with the problem. It takes forward part of the Government's response to the recommendations and proposals of the working party set up by my right hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins) in October 1994. The resultant consultation paper, issued in March last year, was the subject of widespread positive comment.

The Bill establishes for the first time a noise offence based on an objective standard that will apply to noise from domestic premises during night hours between 11 pm and 7 am. I will answer the other points made by the hon. Member for Deptford in due course, but she asked about the level of permitted noise. While this is the Second Reading of a private Member's Bill, the Government take the view that an appropriate level for the permitted level of noise—the expression used in the Bill—would be 35 dB. That standard is appropriate because it is objective and based on World Health Organisation guidance on the levels of noise that are consistent with preserving the restorative process of sleep. I think that it was my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam who so rightly said that we all need a decent night's sleep. That is very important in the context of this Bill.

The broader points about noise outside the defined hours are also important—for example, taking into account the interests of people with young families and babies and of shift workers. One hopes that those responsible for noise will be considerate about such people outside night-time hours, but the Bill is limited to those hours.

We have debated what the hours should be. My hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford said that resistance was low at night. He took the view that 11 pm to 7 am were the key hours. Other hon. Members have suggested that 10 pm would be an appropriate starting point. No doubt those are matters that can be visited in Committee, but the important point is that people are entitled to a good night's sleep. The Bill will protect people from noise at night.

Mr. Jenkin: Is my hon. Friend averse to extending the powers in the Bill to the whole day? Often, noise from neighbours during the day is just as irritating and stressful as that at night.

Mr. Clappison: The Bill focuses on the problem of night-time noise. My hon. Friend will be familiar with the many other legislative measures that deal with noise pollution and general anti-social conduct. He has certainly made a valuable point, however.

A local authority will be able to offer documentary evidence to a court that, despite a warning, the permitted noise level continued to be breached after environmental health officers had gone into action. Their measurements will be based on an objective standard, rather than the subjective judgments that apply under the statutory law of nuisance with which the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey familiarised the House.

In addition to the usual option of prosecution, a local authority will be able to operate a fixed-penalty scheme for night-time noise. The Bill initially sets the fixed penalty at £40. I have heard the views, expressed on both sides of the House, about whether that is an adequate sum. That is certainly a matter that will arise again during the passage of the Bill. I remind hon. Members that the fixed penalty is provided as an immediate sanction—one that could be an immediate remedy for many cases of neighbour noise.

Further measures can be taken in other instances, particularly in cases of gross or persistent domestic noise. The Government agree that, in those cases, the option must remain for prosecution through the courts. The maximum fine for the offence is to be set at level 3, which is at present £1,000. That reflects the seriousness with which the problem of noise should be viewed.

The Bill also contains the important power for local authorities to seize noise-making equipment that has been used in commission of an offence, under either the night noise offence or the existing noise nuisance provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. From responses to our working party consultation paper, the Government are aware that that clarification of existing powers relating to confiscation has the overwhelming backing of local authority practitioners. Judging by some of the comments made in the debate, it also has a broad welcome in the House. Hon. Members, including the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey and some of my hon. Friends, spoke of the need for tough measures to deal with noise. Confiscation would certainly fit the bill.

The hon. Member for Deptford extended the legislation a general welcome. She mentioned resources for local authorities. She should bear in mind the fact that approximately one third of all local authorities already have a night noise complaints service. There are examples of successful services, and our calculation of the additional costs that she said were likely to be incurred is based on a gradual take-up of the powers by other local authorities. That is the way in which the costs will arise.

She said that she wanted a mandatory scheme. She listened to an intervention in which I pointed out the way in which the scheme can be adapted under the present legislation. She also took a very acute intervention from my hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, North about leaving such matters to the discretion of local authorities. She will have to deal with that issue. It is important for local authorities to examine the problems in their areas and to decide the appropriate level of service.

Ms Ruddock: I think that the Minister should be referred, if he has not already seen it, to the report issued yesterday by the National Society for Clean Air and Environmental Protection, which stated that, based on the society's contact with and survey of local authorities on this Bill and on this issue, 70 per cent. of local authorities have said that they cannot properly and effectively deal with noise nuisance because they lack resources.

Mr. Clappison: The hon. Lady is treading into the territory of advocating additional spending. The problem with her plan for a mandatory scheme is that there may be additional spending in authorities that have decided that such a scheme is not appropriate for them, and result in their incurring the expense of the scheme. That would mean fewer resources for other authorities, which are bound by the same public expenditure constraints. She will know that many authorities, particularly in urban areas, provide a satisfactory noise level response service.

Ms Ruddock: The Minister would help the House if he told us which authorities in England and Wales have no one suffering from noise nuisance at night which should be dealt with by the new provision in the Bill.

Mr. Clappison: That is a matter for local democracy. It is for local authorities to decide, by listening to their residents, what level of noise they think is appropriate. It may be that all authorities will wish to participate in the scheme; we do not know. The Government are leaving it to the authorities to decide. The hon. Lady is, first, taking away the opportunity for local authorities to offer the service. Secondly, she would spend additional money to deliver the service in areas that may not consider it appropriate. The hon. Lady must face that problem.

We should like local authorities to examine the noise problem seriously. If they think that it is a problem, we would encourage them to find methods of best practice. We shall certainly do what we can to disseminate best practice and professional guidance and to adopt a graduated service standard that will clearly identify the appropriate type of service.

The hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford and other hon. Members raised the issue of police involvement. She will know that that issue was also examined by the working party, and that how the police will work alongside environmental health officers is an important question. She will also know that there are many excellent examples of good local liaison between environmental health officers and the police. We want to encourage those informal arrangements by supporting the representative bodies in drawing up a code of practice on effective liaison between the agencies. The police will, of course, continue to have responsibility to support local authority staff where there is a threat to public order. However, the judgment as to what level of support is required is an operational matter for the police. It is clearly an interesting and important issue, to which hon. Members have drawn attention.

The hon. Lady also asked a question about the destination of the fines that will be imposed under the system. I can tell her that the fixed penalty under this scheme, in effect, will substitute for court fines. As with other court fines, local authorities will not receive the fines, because they will have been set by the courts. The situation is not the same as with, for example, parking tickets, because, as the hon. Lady knows, they have been decriminalised. We are taking the noise problem seriously. It can be dealt with by fines in the courts and, as I have already said, they can be very substantial.

The hon. Lady and other hon. Members asked what types of noise can be investigated. The Bill, as it is currently drafted, is very wide-ranging in relation to that question. There may be problems in relation to certain types of noise, but many sources of noise will be investigable. If she examines the Bill, she will see that it is aimed at the equipment that causes the noise. That must be a matter of judgment in each case. Such equipment could certainly include tapes, records, compact discs and do-it-yourself equipment. Perhaps the Committee will want to examine that point further.

The hon. Lady and the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Miss Hoey) mentioned vehicle noise—

Ms Ruddock: And barking dogs.

Mr. Clappison: And barking dogs—dogs that barked in the night as the caravan passed on.

Noise from vehicles is covered by legislation that has recently come into effect. I refer the hon. Lady to regulations and the Noise and Statutory Nuisance Act 1993. If the hon. Lady examines the fairly wide definitions of dwellings and their surroundings, she will find that some instances of vehicle noise may be covered.

Mr. Simon Hughes: If the Bill is granted a Second Reading, will the Minister ask his officials to consider the question of vehicles on private land? This is where the problem usually arises, but private land is not covered by existing legislation.

Mr. Clappison: I hope that I am not going into too much detail, and I appreciate that there are many matters still to be debated in Committee, but the Bill has been warmly received, and I am sure that, as the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) said, it will benefit many people in the real world who suffer from the problem. The Government warmly welcome the Bill, and I again congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North on introducing it.

Mr. Harry Greenway: With permission, Madam Deputy Speaker, I should like to say a few words in reply to the debate. I thank you, your predecessor in the Chair and the House for the indulgence granted me this morning, as I was spending time with my constituency community on a most poignant, sad and important occasion. I am very grateful to everyone.

I thank my hon. Friends the Members for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) and for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall), who so kindly kept watch for me and provided me with an admirable briefing on the debate. It is clear that the Committee stage will be extremely important, as my hon. Friend the Minister said. I am grateful to him for the comprehensive points that he made in picking up matters raised today.

I am also grateful for the consistent support of the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) and note that he would like the relevant time to be brought forward from 11 pm to 10 pm. This is something that will have to be debated, but we can come back to it. I am also grateful for the support of my hon. Friend the Member for Halesowen and Stourbridge (Mr. Hawksley), who asked whether dogs barking in a garden will be covered. My hon. Friend just responded to that question and said that that difficulty is already dealt with under existing legislation, so the Bill cannot be extended to cover it.

I understand that the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) would put people in cells if they made too much noise. Clearly, the mood of the House is very tough, and rightly so. My hon. Friends have spoken in a similarly forceful way.

My hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) was anxious that the Bill should be tough and thought that offences committed under the Bill would be only civil offences. I assure him that the offences detailed in the Bill will be criminal in nature. That is an important point, and I hope that it gives him some reassurance.

I was sorry to miss the distinction between accidental noise and deliberate noise that was made by my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. Hargreaves). That is important, but noise is noise whether it is deliberate or accidental. I am sure that we will come back to that issue.

I am also very grateful for the generous support of the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) with whom I see eye to eye on animal welfare and other issues. I thank my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) for his support and I am grateful for the strong support of my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford, who kept a careful and clear watching brief for me.

The hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock) made several points which I have noted. My hon. Friend the Minister has made his response, and we will discuss the hon. Lady's points further in Committee.

I am anxious that the Bill should be capable of being as widely applied as possible if it becomes an Act, as I hope it will. My hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, North (Mr. Jenkin) drew an analogy between my Bill—and its hoped-for effect—and the Clean Air Act 1956. I agree with that analogy, and my Bill is, like that Act, an attempt at an absolute. My hon. Friend made an inspired point, and we should all bear it in mind.

The advice of the National Society for Clean Air and Environmental Protection suggested measures for preventing noise nuisance. We must remember, for the purpose of the Bill and everything else, that prevention is better than cure. The society's advice included suggestions to site noisy household equipment away from partition walls. It suggests performing noisy DIY jobs during normal working hours when other people are making a noise; apologising to neighbours in advance for disturbance caused by DIY; and telling neighbours in advance about parties and inviting them, and keeping noise to a minimum. It also suggests that, if a dog barks when left alone, arrangements should be made to leave it with a friend. If people do not do that, they might be caught under existing legislation.

I thank the House for an excellent debate, and I hope that it will give my Bill a Second Reading today.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read a Second time, and committed to a Standing Committee, pursuant to Standing Order No. 61 (Committal of Bills).

Railway Heritage Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

1.52 pm

Mr. Mark Robinson (Somerton and Frome): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

It would be difficult to overestimate the importance of the railways in the development of the country's transport infrastructure. They certainly shaped the landscape of my childhood. I grew up in Bristol, which contains many examples of the work of Isambard Kingdom Brunel. I have many early memories of travelling to London on the Great Western Railway, as we always called it, through the great Box tunnel just outside Bath. I was lucky enough to travel on occasions on the old Bristolian with one of the Castle locomotives pulling the coaches rapidly along.

I remember thinking that I would approve of the advent of the diesel engine as modern technology, but I quickly changed my mind. I believe that many, like me, have great affection for the age of steam and the history of our railways. The influence of the railways on our nation goes far deeper than just the landscape. One has to think only of the Duke of Wellington's anxiety that railways would encourage to realise the enormous social change that has been brought by the railways, in other countries as well as ours. Those of us who are aficionados of the Western movie will clearly understand that.

"the lower orders to go uselessly wandering about the country"

As a history graduate, I believe strongly in the importance of learning from the past. To do that effectively, we must ensure that historic materials are preserved and made available to the public so that it is possible for our children to learn about the railways and their great contribution to our industrial revolution.

Governments of all political parties have been aware for some time of the need to ensure the conservation of our railway heritage.

Mr. Toby Jessel (Twickenham): Does my hon. Friend agree that interest in the railway heritage is part of a wider interest in transport heritage? If any museum shows old ships or ship models, old bicycles, old cars, old aircraft, old engines or old carriages, those displays have a tremendous appeal for the young, and always will do. That interest should be fostered and encouraged, and that is why my hon. Friend's Bill should be supported in every possible way.

Mr. Robinson: I entirely agree with my hon. Friend, and I thank him for his intervention. At this late stage, it may be difficult to extend the scope of the Bill to the preservation of other parts of our transportation heritage. My hon. Friend's extremely good point is borne in mind by all those who have a great affection for the railways.

Section 114 of the Transport Act 1968 transferred responsibility for British Railways Board's historic artefacts and certain of its records to the then Department of Education and Science. In 1975, the national railway museum was opened in York on the site of the former London and North East Railway museum in what was once the York north motive power depot, to house those artefacts and records.

I look forward to visiting the constituency of the hon. Member for York (Mr. Bayley), who has registered his support for the Bill. For reasons connected with his advice surgeries, however, he is unable to be with us today. I certainly look forward to taking up an invitation to visit the national railway museum. If the Bill is successful in passing into law, I hope to deposit a copy of the Act at the museum.

Mr. Peter Atkinson (Hexham): While touring the north, perhaps my hon. Friend would like to come to my constituency to visit Wylam in Northumberland, the birthplace of the locomotive. One of the great disputes in history surrounds who built the first locomotive. Wylam is the birthplace of George Stephenson. Although he is often credited with building the first locomotive, it was built by a local shipowner, William Hedley. If records had been properly kept, that mystery could have been cleared up many years ago.

Mr. Robinson: I thank my hon. Friend for that intervention. My knowledge of railway history has just been significantly improved. If I have time, and my hon. Friend is in his constituency, I will be delighted to come and learn a little bit more on my way north.

The need to preserve our railway heritage was not forgotten in the privatisation legislation, because section 125 of the Railways Act 1993 extended the protection of railway artefacts and records to those owned by the new public sector bodies set up under that Act. Under that section, the Railway Heritage Committee was created in 1994, with the function of designating artefacts or records as worthy of preservation and ensuring that they go to the appropriate collecting institution at the end of their working lives. The committee consists of individuals who are respected in the working railway and railway heritage communities.

The committee has done some worthwhile work. For example, it has designated the Railtrack collection of Brunel-era drawings between 1883 and 1859. That collection comprises more than 7,000 drawings of original Great Western Railway structures, many of them by IKB himself, and bearing his signature. Classed as working drawings, many are still in use and are regularly consulted by Railtrack engineers. A programme of restoration is under way and a feasibility study is now in process to determine whether additional funds can be found to speed up that programme and make the collection available for public inspection.

Also designated is the famous Gooch centrepiece—which has nothing to do with the great man who recently occupied the crease at many of our test match grounds. In 1837, Brunel appointed Sir Daniel Gooch, then aged 21, as the GWR's first locomotive superintendent. He was living proof that one could rise to the top, because, although he resigned in 1864, he soon returned as chairman of the board. In 1872, the shareholders voted him an honorarium of 5,000 guineas, from which the centrepiece, which has a triangular base, was commissioned. At each corner of the centrepiece sits a sculptured figure—I. K. Brunel, George Stephenson and Joseph Locke. Artefacts from the royal train—among other things—are currently being considered for designation.

The powers of the committee, and the excellent work that it has carried out, are in danger of coming to an abrupt end when the companies that own railway artefacts and records are privatised. When the Railways Bill was in another place, Ministers undertook to bring forward a voluntary scheme to extend the heritage regime to the private sector. I understand that that is no longer considered a viable option. The Bill will ensure the protection of those artefacts and records that are leaving the protection of the Railways Act as their owners pass into the private sector.

I pay tribute to the chairman and members of the Railway Heritage Committee, who have given the Bill so much support. I also pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Minister and to his civil servants at the Department of Transport, who have also taken a keen interest in this matter. Their advice in helping to frame the legislation has been most useful. I am grateful that they were prepared to listen to members of the Railway Heritage Committee and to incorporate their thoughts and observations into the Bill.

The Bill deals with moveable items, artifacts and records, rather than buildings and permanent structures. Buildings and permanent structures are protected by planning legislation. Brunel's train sheds at Temple Mead are grade 1 listed. Hon. Members will be aware that the Railway Heritage Trust does an excellent job in funding and carrying out preservation work on such structures.

The owners of artefacts and records that are covered by the Bill will inherit the British Railways Board's property under the restructuring of the railway industry, as a consequence of the Railways Act 1993. The Bill makes a number of changes, which reflect the different requirements of a scheme involving private sector operators.

I shall outline how the regime will work in practice. When a body to which the Bill applies wishes to dispose of a designated artefact or record, it will be required to notify the committee of the intended recipient and the terms of the disposal. If the committee is unhappy with either the intended recipient or the terms, it can direct the body to offer the item to a different person, on different terms, or both.

The body making the disposal will be able to do so only with the committee's consent or under the terms directed by the committee, but the committee has to make up its mind in six months, after which the disposing body can act freely. I believe that to be a reasonable stipulation.

If the committee determines terms for the disposal, the people to whom the object is offered have to act within six months. All other such disposals under the Bill would be void. Making disposals in contravention of the Bill void should act as a deterrent and reduce the likelihood of dishonest dealings. That is why I have felt that it would be inappropriate to introduce criminal sanctions into the Bill.

I pay tribute to those who devote so much of their lives to preserve old steam locomotives, carriages and the like. Indeed, this week, I had the opportunity to visit Cranmore railway station in my constituency, where I saw the painstaking work that was being done on the Nunney Castle, which is one of the Castle class steam locomotives. In the 1980s, I represented the constituency of Newport, West. Extraordinarily enough, I found one of my former constituents, whom I knew well at the time, on top of the engine busily polishing its engine and getting it ready for tomorrow. As part of its commissioning, tomorrow, it will set off on a journey to Plymouth, which will take the weekend, and then return to Cranmore the following weekend, hopefully having given much pleasure to many people—as it will continue to do.

The Bill gives the Secretary of State the power to give guidance to the committee. That guidance will be used to set out the compensation and dispute regulations and to give helpful advice on how to word directions so that they may be legally binding.

In order to be effective in its task of preserving railway artefacts and records, the legislative framework must recognise the interests of the working railway. It is essential that the working railway should work in partnership with the railway heritage community in the preservation, for future generations, of railway artefacts and records. I believe that the provisions of the Bill will meet that need.

When an item is transferred from a private sector body to a collecting institution, in accordance with the direction of the committee, and the collecting institution pays market value compensation to that body, the committee would not be able to direct the owner to dispose of an item in a way different from that which the owner wishes—for instance, to lease when he wishes to sell or vice versa. For the further protection of the owners, the committee would be required to consent to a proposed disposal if it does not object, rather than just sit on it until its power to direct expires after six months. If the committee failed to notify the owner of the designated artefact or record of the designation, that owner would be free to dispose of that item.

Of course, it is necessary to ensure that working records and artefacts are not in danger of compulsory transfer to museums. To that end, transfers of equipment between owners covered by the Bill—which would, before April 1994, have been BR internal transfers—and disposals in accordance with transfer schemes under part II of the Railways Act 1993, would not require a direction from the committee.

I believe that the Bill will act as an important fail-safe in the task of preserving our railway heritage. One of the delights of our railway heritage is the work of individuals and organisations who voluntarily ensure that museums, such as that in York, make such a contribution to the history of our railways. By doing so, they demonstrate to the younger generation just how important our railways have been to the development of Britain's economic prosperity.

We can travel around many parts of our country and come across preserved and special railways. Indeed, I did so only last summer, when I had the pleasure of travelling on the Blaenau Ffestiniog railway with my family. That railway, together with the East Somerset and West Somerset railways, are to be commended to any hon. Members who are thinking of doing something a little different in the coming summer recess. Certainly, for those of us with young children it is a delight to travel on the railways and to see the enthusiasm of the people who run them and the care that is taken to ensure that these magnificent engines and their carriages are restored to such a remarkable condition.

I know that many hon. Members who spend many years in the House are never successful in the private Member's ballot. I feel fortunate for having been successful and for having this opportunity to try to contribute to the preservation work on our railways. I commend the Bill to the House. I hope that it will pass all its stages, go into another place and eventually become law.

2.10 pm

Mr. Brian Wilson (Cunninghame, North): I congratulate the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Robinson) on choosing the subject of the Bill, and I am grateful to him for his generous reference to my hon. Friend the Member for York (Mr. Bayley), who has put much effort into achieving the ends that the Bill embraces.

My only possible disagreement with the Bill is over what the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome said about there not being any need for criminal sanctions. Given some of the people to whom the Government appear willing to sell our railways, criminal sanctions might not be a bad idea. Compared with systematic ticket fraud or stashing away a few million pounds for after the success of a management buy-out, flogging a few artefacts on the side might seem a relatively minor offence.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I deliberately tried to keep the politics of change in the railways out of my speech. When I visited Cranmore station, it was mentioned to me that one of the advantages of privatisation, which is already apparent, is that people are thinking up new ideas and new ways in which to improve our railways, which I am sure is for the good.

Mr. Wilson: Let us leave it at that. I think that the hon. Gentleman will agree that that sounds like a pious hope rather than a firm commitment.

One cannot entirely leave politics out of the debate, because the Bill is a necessary tidying-up measure as a consequence of rail fragmentation for privatisation. If the railways were not being fragmented for privatisation, there would be no need for the Bill.

The alternative to the Bill, however, as I am sure the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome would agree, is unthinkable. If no safeguard were built into rail privatisation legislation, the history of our railways would be scattered to the four winds, which is certainly not acceptable. Indeed, it would be a tragedy to compound the other tragedies unfolding in our railway network. There must be measures to stop people who, if uncontrolled, might be prepared to sell the railway family silver and other valuables.

We are not only dealing with knick-knacks. For instance, Railtrack owns many historic documents such as the Brunel drawings—the original working plans for the Great Western railway, signed by Brunel and still kept at Swindon—as well as artefacts such as signal boxes and items of signalling equipment. There is much valuable material, and not only in the monetary sense. Much of it is recognised as of intrinsic value by everybody who is interested in this country's extraordinary railway history. We do not want Railtrack to be privatised, and I do not expect it to be, but if it were, it would be an additional public scandal if it gained untrammelled possession of those artefacts.

It is as well to keep some control of the more ancient parts of our railway network, and not only for historic reasons. I was interested in a story in last Sunday's Wales on Sunday that described the return of "ancient trains" to the rails. It said:

"On the Rhymney Valley line, a 35-year-old train from . . . Watermans Railways company travels the route from Mondays to Fridays. The Class 47 diesel engine, normally used on special trips, is known as Davies the Ocean."

So, in our wonderful new railway system, the engine has been brought back into service for regular passenger use.

On the south Wales to Birmingham route, passengers

"found themselves on a train leased back from a railway preservation company in Lancashire."

A spokesman for the train leasing companies went as far as to say:

"A lot of people actually like travelling on the old rolling stock."

They may do if they choose to, but whether they want to turn up for their normal commuter train and find that it has been replaced by one that the bold, new, fragmented railway company has hired from a rail preservation company because there is no new rolling stock in the country is another matter. I repeat, the spokesman, effectively for the Government, said:

"A lot of people actually like travelling on the old rolling stock."

However, Cardiff resident Nick Lewis, who travelled between Cardiff and Newport on Sunday, said:

"I couldn't believe it when this ancient train trundled into the station. It was an absolute disgrace to go back 40 years in time to travel in this dilapidated and decrepit train."

The Minister for Railways and Roads (Mr. John Watts): No sense of history.

Mr. Wilson: As the Minister says, that shows no sense of history. However, he would probably prefer to choose when he travels on 40-year-old trains hired from rail preservation societies and when he travels on rather more modern rolling stock. The point is that it is not just a matter of keeping old railway artefacts to put them into museums. There is the problem that, in the new set-up, the museums will be raided to keep the railways running at all.

As the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome said, the railway industry in this country has a long and honourable history, with its origins in the 18th-century coal mining industry. Earlier, hon. Members discussed which was the first locomotive. There are many contenders for the title of first railway in the United Kingdom. The first railway sanctioned by Parliament was the Surrey iron railway from Wandsworth to Croydon in 1801. The first Scottish line authorised by Act of Parliament was the Kilmarnock and Troon railway of 1808, which opened in 1812 and linked collieries at Kilmarnock to Troon harbour. There is no truth in the rumour that Jimmy Knapp was on board. The line operated with a steam locomotive and carried passengers as well, several years before the Stockton and Darlington railway in 1825, which is usually credited with being the first public steam railway in Britain.

The railways laid the foundations of much of the modern British economy and were one of the more important British developments. Railways were then adopted around the world. British and especially Scottish railway engineers took their expertise to the railways of south America, India and Australia, as well as Europe.

It is understandable that the passionate devotion of many in Britain to the railway should extend to an interest in preserving its past. There are 35 preserved steam railways listed in the British Rail timetable and dozens of museums dedicated to the history of the railways. Many people devote weekends, holidays and retirement to restoring railway equipment and sharing it with the public, who have a huge interest in our railway heritage.

Regardless of questions of ownership—I do not think that my views on that can be mistaken—it is right to have in place a properly ordered procedure for the identification and protection of historic railways. The Bill is therefore welcome. The real tragedy in our railway system is that we are now approaching 1,000 days since an order was placed in this country for new railway rolling stock. Let us therefore treasure what was given to us in the past, while bitterly regetting what is being done to our railway network and our railway rolling stock in the present.

The operations of the proposed committee must be rigid. I can see the point in a six-month time bar after which the owners can do what they like. However, that suggests potential loopholes, and it must be absolutely clear that the availability of the artefacts is notified, publicly known and considered at an early stage by the committee, and the committee's conclusions should be well known, certainly within the railway world. We do not want to find that, somehow or other, certain disposals have slipped through before anyone noticed. In Committee, we should consider ways in which to tighten up the procedures so that they guard against that eventuality.

In many instances, we are dealing with objects of considerable value, not just in the national market, but in the international market. Let us ensure that they are properly protected.

2.18 pm

The Minister for Railways and Roads (Mr. John Watts): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Robinson) on having introduced this important Bill. I also welcome the support of the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson). We do not often agree on railway matters, but I am glad that we can at least agree on this one. However, I shall not let the hon. Gentleman tempt me towards some of the more controversial aspects of the railways. Perhaps the Hansard record of some of our rather more spirited exchanges on privatisation should form part of the record of the history of privatisation—but I shall say no more about that today.

As the Minister responsible for railways, I am well aware of the importance of and fascination for railway heritage. My hon. Friend has already touched on its value to future generations and to historians. On a more practical note, it is vital for the railway that artefacts and records of historical significance are preserved, so that the industry can benefit from the lessons of the past.

Historic railway records can be surprisingly relevant to the running of the railways today. Indeed, Railtrack still has about 7,000 engineering drawings from the Brunel era. They have not been placed in a museum, because, as my hon. Friend has explained, they are still in use as working records.

The need to ensure the preservation of Britain's railway heritage was taken into account during the passage of the Railways Act 1993, by the creation of the Railway

[Mr. John Watts]

Heritage Committee, an independent committee of experts from railway heritage interests and from the railways industry, to ensure that historically significant railway artefacts and records went to the appropriate collecting institution at the end of their useful lives and became available to a wider public. I must take this opportunity to join my hon. Friend in applauding the work done by that committee.

The committee's powers under the Railways Act extended to the British Railways Board, and to the new public sector bodies due to come into being as part of the restructuring process. Now many of BR's successors are entering the private sector, and thus leaving the scope of the existing heritage provisions, which means that new arrangements have to be made.

Ministers recognised while the Railways Bill was in another place that it would in time be necessary to extend the heritage provisions to the private sector. As my hon. Friend said, there was then a proposal to introduce a voluntary scheme, but on closer examination that proposal proved inappropriate, and we decided that legislation for a statutory scheme was necessary.

I must thank my hon. Friend and congratulate him on the timeliness of his Bill. It will reinforce the powers of the Railway Heritage Committee and enable it to carry out its work more effectively, by giving it power to require information from owners of records and artefacts and by allowing it to delegate to sub-committees. The power to require information from owners is important, and the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North touched upon that aspect. We can ensure that those important records and artefacts are protected only if we know of their existence, and of any proposal to dispose of them.

There may be a gap between privatisation of some of the major owners of railway artefacts and records and the enactment of the Bill. I understand that that may cause concern, but I can assure the House that transfer to private ownership does not mean that objects will be lost to the nation. It has already been mentioned that Railtrack is one of the major owners of such records and artefacts, and I have discussed the matter with the chairman of Railtrack. I have his personal assurance that, as one of the principal owners of railway records, Railtrack will continue to work positively with the Railway Heritage Committee after privatisation. Indeed, Railtrack's solicitor is a member of the Committee and fully supports its work.

Mr. John Carlisle (Luton, North): Does my hon. Friend agree that the chairman of Railtrack, too, is what is colloquially known as a bit of railway buff, and will therefore support the Bill containing the measures outlined by my hon. Friend the Member for Somerton and Frome?

Mr. Watts: Yes, I am sure that my hon. Friend is right. Indeed, I would expect many railway companies moving into the private sector still to want to make records and artefacts available to collecting institutions at nominal cost, as the nationalised railway has done. They will do that to show their support and good faith, and their commitment to both the future and the past of the railway.

Mr. Wilson: On the subject of good faith, if the owners or inheritors of the artefacts set a price upon them, will the purchasing body be given any financial support, as there is likely to be a different level of commercial transaction involved than at present?

Mr. Watts: I am not sure whether the private sector owners will necessarily want to get full the commercial value for the items that they seek to dispose of, but I shall refer to the way in which we propose to use the Secretary of State's power of guidance to indicate the values that we would expect to be set.

My hon. Friend has said that the Bill provides for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to issue guidance to the committee, and I should perhaps explain why that power is necessary and how it would be exercised. It is essential that private sector owners of designated records and artefacts be compensated at market value if the committee directs disposal of those items. But the British Railways Board is happy to continue to transfer records and artefacts to the national railway museum, the Public Record Office, the Scottish Record Office and other collecting institutions, either free or for a nominal charge.

Sir Patrick Cormack (South Staffordshire): Will my hon. Friend ensure that the Royal Commission on historical manuscripts—of which I am a member—is consulted on the disposal of all archives? Will he also recommended that, where possible, artefacts should be transferred to the science museum's department at York, a marvellous and incomparable railway museum?

Mr. Watts: Indeed. Most of these records have in the past been passed to the railway museum in York, and we intend that that should continue. I shall look further into the point that my hon. Friend makes about the royal commission.

It would not be right to obstruct such a mutually beneficial arrangement between the British Railways Board and the collecting institutions, and it would be wrong for us to make one provision in the Bill for the public sector and another for the private sector, as I am advised that that might hybridise the Bill. I am also responsible for the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill, and I think that one hybrid Bill at a time is quite enough. The guidance would deal with that problem.

The market value compensation for private sector bodies would be arrived at through agreement between the owner and the collecting institution. Clearly they will not always agree, and the guidance will therefore need to make provision for disputes. We envisage recourse to arbitration under those circumstances. If the parties failed to agree on an arbiter, the president of the Institute of Arbiters would be asked to choose one. The guidance would cover those matters. In addition, the guidance will assist the committee in drafting directions.

I understand that there may be some concern that giving the Secretary of State the power to provide guidance to the committee would undermine its independence. I must stress that it is not our intention to dictate to the committee which artefacts and records should be preserved. Even if the Secretary of State were to give such guidance, the committee would merely be obliged to have regard to it, not to follow it.

A summary of the matters to be covered in the guidance is set out in more detail in the notes on clauses for this Bill, copies of which are available from the Vote Office and have been placed in the Library. I am aware of the public interest in the actual contents of the guidance and I can confirm that, when it has been fully worked up, it will be published and copies placed in the Library.

Railway heritage may be primarily concerned with the past but, as I said earlier, it is highly relevant to the future. I am confident that privatisation will bring considerable improvements in the running of the railway, and innovations that will be of interest to future generations. I am therefore very keen to ensure that the records of such an exciting period in railway history and the innovations that will be encouraged by the introduction of private sector disciplines will be preserved for the nation.

I warmly encourage my hon. Friend to visit the national railway museum and to deposit a copy of his Bill there. I am sure that he would be welcomed there and would enjoy his visit. The Bill is supported on both sides of House and is clearly very much in the public interest. I commend it whole-heartedly to the House, and invite the House to give it a Second Reading.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read a Second time, and committed to a Standing Committee, pursuant to Standing Order No. 61 (Committal of Bills).

TOBACCO PROMOTION (PROTECTION OF CHILDREN AND RESTRICTION OF PROMOTION) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

2.29 pm

Mr. Bernard Jenkin (Colchester, North): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. There is a rumour circulating the Palace of Westminster that a device has been found under the car of an hon. Member. I hasten to add that it is rumour, and that the device was not found within the precincts of the Palace of Westminster. Will you use your good offices and those of Madam Speaker to circulate warnings to hon. Members so that we can all be on the alert this weekend?

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): I should have thought hon. Members would be aware of the position already.

Mr. Peter Atkinson (Hexham): Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Will you use your offices to encourage Madam Speaker to ask the Leader of the House to come to the Chamber today to make a statement about what he proposes to do to increase security in the Palace of Westminster? In view of what my hon. Friend the Member for Colchester, North (Mr. Jenkin) has just said, it seems that hon. Members should know, as a matter of urgency, that they are being properly protected.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I have noted what the hon. Gentleman has said.

Mr. John Carlisle (Luton North): Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I have already dealt with the point of order. The hon. Gentleman must sit down.

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): I beg to move, That the Bill be read a Second time now, Madam Deputy Speaker.

Mr. John Carlisle: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Is this a different point of order?

Mr. Carlisle: Yes, it is on a different subject. I am a little concerned that the business that is to follow the business that we have been discussing, and which we have just accepted, is the result of a ten-minute Bill. Other hon. Members have Bills that came up in the ballot for private Member's Bills. A ten-minute Bill appears to have almost jumped the queue—perhaps you, Madam Deputy Speaker, could give me some guidance on that.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Yes, I can give the hon. Gentleman some guidance straight away. It is a bogus point of order, of which I take a dim view. I now put the Question on the tobacco promotion Bill.

Hon. Members: Object.

To be read a Second time on Friday 22 March.

WATER CHARGES (AMENDMENT) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Mr. Simon Hughes: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I shall deal with the previous Bill first. I moved it "now"—I hope that that was on the record. I understand that it was not able to be taken—

Mr. John Carlisle: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I am not taking any points of order from the hon. Gentleman now.

Mr. Simon Hughes: I moved my Bill "now". I understand that an objection was taken to that, so I have now named a date for the Bill to be taken again. I believe that there cannot be any objection to that.

Madam Deputy Speaker: That is correct.

Mr. Carlisle: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I have already ruled on this. I am not taking another point of order on that issue.

Mr. Simon Hughes: On the second Bill, which has just been called by the learned Clerk, with the leave of the Member whose Bill it is, I wish to move the Bill now.

Hon. Members: Object.

To be read a Second time on Friday 1 March.

WILDLIFE BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Read a Second time, and committed to a Standing Committee, pursuant to Standing Order No. 61 (Committal of Bills).

HOUSE OF COMMONS (REFORM) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

To be read a Second time on Friday 1 March 1996.

BRITISH TIME (EXTRA DAYLIGHT) BILL

Order read for resuming adjourned debate on Question [26 January], That the Bill be read a Second time.

Hon. Members: Object.

Debate to be resumed on Friday 1 March.

Mr. Simon Hughes: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. The hon. Member for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle) raised a point of order in the dying moments of today's sitting. Could you investigate whether the hon. Gentleman should be required, even at that stage, to declare his interest in the Bill? I realise that the subject has just been placed partly within the remit of the Commissioner for Standards, as well as being within your remit and that of Madam Speaker. Two of the hon. Gentleman's interests listed in the Register of Members' Interests appear to be pertinent, and I wonder whether the House and the public should be aware when someone tries to block a Bill, by whatever means. Whatever the interest of the hon. Member concerned, should it not be declared and appear in the record of the debate in the House?

Madam Deputy Speaker: That is not a matter with which I can deal. If there are any complaints, I think that they should go to the commissioner.

Mr. John Carlisle: Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I wonder whether it should be stated on the record that the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), who has just made that objection, should be accurate in his assessment. It is, of course, for you to judge Madam Deputy Speaker whether he is out of order. Are you satisfied that the accusation that he has just made against me as an individual Member is entirely accurate in terms of my interests in this place?

Madam Deputy Speaker: I made it perfectly clear that I did not regard it as a matter for me, but if an hon. Member felt that there was cause for complaint—about which I did not judge—there was a proper course of action to take. That should settle the matter.

Mr. Carlisle: Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Entirely untrue and inaccurate aspersions have been cast which show that the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey has not kept up to date with the Register of Members' Interests. He has a rather out-of-date copy. When such aspersions, which are without foundation, are cast on an hon. Member's name and character, has he any way, through you, of clearing his name, or does he have sit here accused and unable to say that he is not guilty?

Madam Deputy Speaker: I presume that it will also be open to the hon. Member to make that point to the commissioner.

Mr. Carlisle rose—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I have had enough.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Tuesday 20th February, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order No. 14B (Proceedings under an Act or on European Community Documents), the Speaker shall put the Questions on the Motions in the name of Mr. Secretary Lilley relating to Social Security, Family Law and Pensions not later than Ten o'clock.—[Mr. Ottaway.]

Serious Fraud

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Ottaway.]

2.35 pm

Mr. John Marshall (Hendon, South): I have raised the question of serious fraud on several occasions in the House. I realise that I cannot refer to individuals who may have been subject to previous prosecutions but who are also subject to current prosecutions.

There are several serious issues which must be considered. First, there is the competence of the Serious Fraud Office. There have been a large number of acquittals in high-profile cases. Secondly, there is the cost of cases to the public purse and the national scandal whereby a number of wide boys have been helped by the legal aid fund. Thirdly, there is a widespread feeling that serious fraud cases are too complicated for the average jury.

We must remember who the victims of serious fraud are. They are frequently the financially unsophisticated—the small man. I remember, at the time of the Dunsdale Securities case, meeting a constituent who told me that he had concentrated all his financial investment in one company, Dunsdale Securities. He had even been persuaded by Mr. Miller, who ran Dunsdale Securities, to increase the mortgage on his house so that he could invest even more money in Dunsdale. He did not realise that the return offered by Dunsdale Securities was far higher than that offered by the gilt-edged securities in which it allegedly invested—so high as to be suspicious.

Similarly, those of us who were in the House at the time of the Barlow Clowes disaster will remember meeting constituents who had put money aside for a rainy day. One constituent had put money into Barlow Clowes to save for school fees. They were the people who suffered because they were not wise enough in the ways of the world and invested in a duff company. More recently, there was the Belling pension fund, about which pensioners suffered worry and concern.

In Sussex, two partners in a firm of solicitors engaged in an £8 million fraud. The victims were the employees of the firm, whose jobs disappeared from under them because it went bankrupt, and honest solicitors throughout the country who had, through the solicitor's compensation fund, to pay out £8 million to the clients of that company. That was all paid for by honest, decent solicitors.

Although the victims may often obtain compensation, as they did eventually in the Barlow Clowes case, the uncertainty before getting it can be fatal. I knew an investor in Dunsdale Securities who got a 7.30 am telephone call to tell him that Dunsdale had gone bust. Within a few days, he had died of a heart attack, which was clearly not unrelated to the worry and concern that he had suffered. While those who suffered as a result of Barlow Clowes were eventually pleased to get compensation, they went through many months of agony about which the perpetrators of the fraud were not concerned.

The other case is one of which I have spoken to my right hon. and learned Friends the Law Officers from time to time. About £59 million was misappropriated, and it was all investors' money. Some of those who suffered were very small investors.

It is not just the fact that small people suffer. The reputation of this country for honest dealing in finance is put at risk when one of these individuals gets away with tens of millions of pounds. Vast sums of money are involved, and the greed and dishonesty that enables people to seek to get away with it beggars belief.

The public have a sense of intense frustration that large sums of money are lost by the victims of fraud. In some of the high-profile cases, many tens of millions of pounds are lost. Many millions are spent on the cases themselves. The Government not only pay the costs of the Serious Fraud Office, but normally help the defendants through legal aid. All that happens—the money has been lost and the costs are paid out—but all too often there is no conviction.

The Serious Fraud Office is nicknamed by some the "seriously flawed office". When Mr. Nadir decided to fly to Cyprus, many people thought that he could have chanced his arm and been prosecuted. He probably would have been at liberty in England now, rather than a prisoner in northern Cyprus.

My interest in this issue was aroused by the Levitt case. I thought that the prosecution by Mr. David Cocks was bungled. He ended up blaming the judge, complaining unsuccessfully about defence counsel and misleading the director of the SFO, the Attorney-General and, indirectly, the House.

Many of us have complaints about the SFO. It has had three directors in its short life. Many question whether its budget is adequate. The Sunday Times recently pointed out that the SFO's responsibilities have been increased, in that it is now responsible for cases in which the fraud is more than £1 million, whereas previously the threshold was £5 million.

A lawyer called Bob Goldspink—one could not have invented that name—who is a partner at Denton Hall and specialises in major fraud cases, says:

> "To be the dynamic, fraud-fighting body the country desperately needs, the SFO must be given the resources to hire and train the very best lawyers."

Another lawyer said that the SFO is already woefully under-resourced.

The SFO has had a mixed record. I wish to thank the Lord Chancellor's Office for answering a question of mine today. In the year 1992-93, there were 21 trials, but in only 12 were all the defendants convicted. In 1993-94, there were 26 trials, but in only 14 were all the defendants convicted. In 1994-95, there were 12 trials, in five of which all the defendants were convicted. In 1995 and to date, there have been nine, in six of which all the defendants were convicted.

The scale of convictions is not always the best guide, however. Mr. Levitt was convicted after plea bargaining, but he did 185 hours of community service—scarcely an adequate penalty in view of the scale of the fraud that he had committed.

Apart from the cost of serious fraud to the individuals concerned, there is a huge cost to the legal aid fund. The wide boys who practise serious fraud are smart enough to transfer their assets before they are charged. In the Levitt case, for example, he was given the legal aid appropriate to a pauper, but he lived in a house worth £750,000 and celebrated the end of the case with champagne and going to the plush boxes of White Hart lane. Since then, he has moved up market in his housing rather than down. The victims suffered twice over—they lost because they were unsuccessful investors, and they lost again as taxpayers.

It sticks in the gullet of most decent people that villains who have been party to very large frauds can then live the life of Riley, having been helped with legal aid. When they apply for legal aid, they are allegedly penniless, but if they escape conviction they suddenly seem able to live the good life.

One of the most amazing cases was that of Mr. Ernest Saunders, who was always able to get legal aid when fighting his case in the United Kingdom courts. I saw recently that he was taking a case to the European Court' for which, I assume, he is having to pay solicitors but where he is not eligible for legal aid. One wonders whether this man, who at one stage suffered from Alzheimer's disease but discovered that Guinness was a good cure for it, may not occasionally suffer from amnesia when filling out his legal aid application forms.

In 1994, there were 1 million applications for legal aid and 600,000 for criminal legal aid, but only 15 prosecutions for fraudulent claims. Are we being told that the criminal fraternity is honest when claiming legal aid? I cannot believe that. I believe that all too often those who practise serious fraud have salted away their assets, so that, when they are brought to trial they can get legal aid paid for by the taxpayer. I welcome the Lord Chancellor's commitment to ensuring that those who are apparently rich and living in big houses will no longer be eligible for legal aid.

The House may like to know about the growth in expensive legal aid. I have today been given the answer to a question that I tabled to the Lord Chancellor's Department. It shows that, in 1993-94, there were 172 cases in which the cost of legal aid exceeded £100,000. In 1994-95, there were 237 such cases, and so far this year there have been 178. In other words, the cost to the taxpayer is considerable.

Finally, we must consider whether juries are suitable for trying serious fraud cases. The Roskill committee in 1986 recommended that serious fraud cases should be tried not by juries but by a judge and lay assessors. We have to ask whether juries are able to understand very complicated serious fraud cases. One recent case was so complicated that the court heard evidence only in the mornings because the judge thought that it would be too much for the jury to take in evidence in both the morning and the afternoon. The burden on the judge is magnified by the need to explain inherently complicated issues to a jury which may include some more simple people.

I have been told by Law Officers and others that the judges themselves are almost exhausted by the end of some serious fraud trials, because the judge has to understand issues that are foreign to him in his daily life. If complicated fraud trials are sometimes too much for the judges, they are certainly going to be too much for the jurors. Complicated fraud trials frequently last for many months, and I do not believe that the juries in such cases are representative of society as a whole.

In a recent case—the one that I am not allowed to mention in case it prejudges another trial—the potential jurors were asked whether they had any views on X. For people not to have a view on X meant that they could not have been frequent readers of newspapers. If they are not frequent readers of newspapers, I suggest that they are not typical of the average person.

If the judge had the benefit of lay assessors, accountants, solicitors and lawyers specialising in City matters, instead of trying to explain the almost inexplicable to people who will never again have to deal with such matters, he would have the arcane issues explained to him by technical experts who understand them very much better than he.

I believe that the history of serious fraud cases—such as the Levitt case, the Brent Walker case, the Guinness cases marks 2, 3 and 4, the Blue Arrow case and other high-profile serious fraud cases—shows very strongly that serious fraud is too serious a matter to be left to the normal system of prosecution. Just as we developed the Serious Fraud Office to prosecute, so we need to have a different system to try those cases, because they are far too complicated for the average person to understand.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Derek Spencer): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) on obtaining the debate, albeit not at the first time of asking. We had an assignation about 18 months ago in the middle of the night which we were not able to complete. I have listened to his points with interest, and he made them with his usual force and effectiveness.

The debate gives me an opportunity to confirm the Government's view that the Serious Fraud Office plays and will continue to play a successful part in combating and deterring financial fraud. Since the SFO was set up in April 1988, it has developed a unique body of skills and expertise, and I speak as somebody who has appeared as counsel in a number of large and heavy fraud cases over the years.

There is much ill-informed and sometimes malicious comment about the record of the Serious Fraud Office by those who have not taken care to look at the complete picture. Their attack upon it is seriously flawed. The reality is that, rather than being in decline, the Serious Fraud Office is expanding, and it is dealing with an increasing work load. The work load was 50 active cases when the Davie report was received more than a year ago, and the case load is now 64.

What is more, the number of cases in which the SFO is answering requests for assistance from foreign jurisdictions by virtue of the extension of its powers under the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 has increased significantly, and has contributed to the effectiveness of the office's work. The number of staff, both professional and support, has increased to accommodate the expansion: 32 new posts have been created, of which 13 have been filled to date. More are to come.

I do not wish to bake old bread and go over cases such as Levitt and Guinness, so I would draw the attention of my hon. Friend to more recent successes. In January this year, Deacon, a solicitor who defrauded business men in an elaborate advance fee fraud, was sentenced to nine years' imprisonment after he had been convicted. His co-defendant, Fuller, received a seven-year sentence. Van der Horst received a three-year sentence of imprisonment for corruption at the Southampton crown court in January, after he had admitted taking £1.6 million in bribes for ship repair contracts.

Graham Ford, the Sussex solicitor about whose case my hon. Friend spoke, received 10 years' imprisonment in December last year after pleading guilty to stealing £5 million of clients' money. In July last year, Mohammed Naviede, the former chairman of Arrows, was sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment for an estimated £100 million fraud on international banks. To put the record of the SFO in its true context, it is quite untrue to say that it is a failing or unsuccessful organisation.

In the brief time available to me, I shall deal with the main points that my hon. Friend has raised. It is intrinsic in the prosecution of complex and serious fraud that the investigation will be expensive. There is no avoiding that. The Conservative party, having taken the political step to ensure that serious and complex fraud is prosecuted with energy, has then to will the means of achieving that by voting appropriate sums of money not only for the investigation, but for the subsequent prosecution.

The investigation and prosecution involve the use of private sector firms of accountants on a case-by-case basis, as in the case of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International, and they involve the employment of extremely experienced Queen's Counsel, again on a case-by-case basis—members of the independent Bar, of high calibre and with appropriate skills and experience to prosecute such cases.

It follows from what I have just said that, if those cases are to be prosecuted effectively, a fair trial requires that the defendants have appropriate representation. There must be equality of arms. It is unrealistic to think that large sums of money can be expended properly in the investigation and prosecution of offences but that justice can be done without appropriate recompense for those instructed to appear on behalf of the defence.

My hon. Friend has referred to the record of the SFO. It has prosecuted 147 cases to date, and convictions have been recorded against 62.3 per cent. of all defendants. In more than 75 per cent. of those cases, at least one defendant, usually the principal defendant, has been convicted. I am sure that my hon. Friend will agree that that is an impressive and enviable record. The answer that I have given him today should be taken in its full context.

Criticisms about the amount of legal aid expenditure and whether individuals in particular cases are entitled to the legal representation they receive are easy to make. The Legal Aid Board has at its disposal effective weapons to inquire into whether legal aid has been properly granted or not.

Another complaint from my hon. Friend is that large sums of money disappear, and at the end of the day no one is convicted. That is so in certain circumstances, but I am sure that he would agree that there can be misjudgment, mismanagement and financial catastrophe on a large scale, just as there can be dishonesty on a large scale. The mere fact that there has been a financial catastrophe on a grand scale does not necessarily show that there has been dishonesty.

My hon. Friend's final point related to trial by jury, and he repeated what others have said before him: that in such trials juries cannot understand the case that is put in front of them. Although many of the cases are by definition complex, it is the execution of fraud that is complex, whereas the central notion and principle behind it is often perfectly simple and can be expressed in a few words.

In 1986, recommendation 82 of the Roskill report stated that trial by jury should be replaced by trial by judge and two lay members. However, Lord Roskill would be the first to acknowledge that, since his report of 10 years ago, immense strides have been taken to improve the presentation of serious and complex fraud cases. The judge in the recent Deacon case, which involved loss to the Belling pension fund, praised its presentation and the use of information technology.

In Serious Fraud Office cases, it is becoming routine—rather than exceptional—for use to be made of information technology. It is used in the retrieval of documentation and in the presentation of graphics to the jury—showing the way in which the fraud operated, often in just a few seconds. Information technology is used so that counsel can highlight, on their screens, the important pieces of evidence, and they are supplied with virtually an instantaneous transcript of the evidence. This is a quantum leap forward in the conduct of such cases.

Before hon. Members repeat the contention that such cases cannot be understood by juries, I invite them to go to the Serious Fraud Office to see a presentation—which I have had the benefit of seeing—that shows how such cases are conducted. I extend that invitation to my hon. Friend, who I am sure will find it interesting and instructive. I suggest that it will cause him to reassess his criticism that juries cannot understand what is going on in those cases. Juries often have a very good nose for fraud. The sole issue before the jury is: what was the defendant's state of mind at the time; was he being dishonest?

There is a case for considering modes of trial other than trial by jury. However, such consideration must be edged with caution and not taken lightly. A number of questions have to be considered, particularly whether any replacement for the judge and jury will be any better than the existing procedure. Very often, when an issue in the case is the jury's perception of banking practice and financial institutions, and whether someone was turning a blind eye to what was going on, its members are remarkably independently placed to form such a judgment. It might not be easy to find people who are willing to sit on fraud panels.

It is also important to consider how to draw a distinction between, on the one hand, justifying a special tribunal for serious and complex fraud cases, and, on the other, not having a similar tribunal for other complicated cases. It is incorrect to believe that the only complicated cases involve fraud—other cases, such as multi-handed robberies and child abuse, are lengthy and may involve a detailed analysis of complicated medical or technical evidence, such as in cases involving manslaughter.

The issue is by no means clear; it requires great thought and examination. Certainly, my hon. Friend could say that there has probably been a shift of view since Roskill reported. Certain people who were then of the opinion that trial by jury was the only way to try these cases may, with the benefit of further experience, have shifted their view, although I doubt that they have finally come to the conclusion that such change needs to be made and that we must get rid of trial by judge and jury in most cases.

The Government have resolved to re-examine the issue and will do so in a careful and measured way, as my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General has already explained to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at five minutes past Three o'clock.

TRANSPORT

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Drivers)

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect of new regulations for drivers of heavy goods vehicles on the work prospects of drivers who wear spectacles; and if he will make a statement. [12913]

Mr. Norris: We estimate that some 3,000 drivers will be unable to renew their entitlement to drive large goods and passenger-carrying vehicles when the new eyesight regulations are introduced. It is not possible to estimate how many of these will lose their job or how many will find some other work with their present employer. The work prospects of those who wish to take up the driving of these vehicles will not be affected.

Bus-to-rail Connections

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to improve bus-to-rail connections. [13107]

Mr. Norris: The Government recognise the importance of ease of interchange for people using both buses and trains. By maximising private sector involvement, through our policies of privatisation and deregulations, we expect to see connections improve as bus and rail operators respond innovatively to passenger demand and seek to generate custom. The winning franchisee for South West Trains has committed itself to introducing a number of dedicated bus links to SWT stations. In the publication PPG 13: "A guide to better practice", which we published last October, we stressed the need for local authorities to consider both the location and the attractiveness of bus to rail and bus to bus interchanges when developing their transport strategies.

Rail Services

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport from which railway stations rail services have been withdrawn in 1995. [13133]

Mr. Watts: Passenger rail services were withdrawn from five stations during 1995—Attercliffe Road and Brightside in South Yorkshire and Godley East, Miles Platting and Park in Greater Manchester. The services at these stations immediately before closure were nine trains per week day for Attercliffe Road and four for Brightside; one train a week at Godley East, five trains per week day at Miles Platting, and three per weekday at Park. All were very lightly used.

Vehicle Inspectorate (Enforcement Activities)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many rolling road brake testing machines there have been in operation within the Vehicle Inspectorate in each of the last five years; [13234]

(2) if he will list the targets set out for the Vehicle Inspectorate regarding traffic and vehicle reinforcement for each of the last 10 years; [13242]

(3) if he will list the number of immediate and delayed prohibitions imposed by the Vehicle Inspectorate on heavy goods vehicles for each year from 1984 to 1994; [13282]

(4) how many inspections have been undertaken by his Department on tankers contracted by Yorkshire Water in the Yorkshire area; and how many were found to be defective; [13239]

(5) how many traffic examiners and vehicles examiners have been employed as a result of the extra £350,000 invested in the Vehicle Inspectorate in the last year; [13241]

(6) if he will list the procedures that have to be followed by officers from the Vehicle Inspectorate and the police following an accident involving heavy goods and passenger carrying vehicles. [13233]

(7) if he will list the number of (a) prosecutions brought and (b) convictions in magistrates courts for (i) tachograph and hours offences and (ii) mechanical illegalities. [13273]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate executive agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 5 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions relating to enforcement activities within the Vehicle Inspectorate (VI).

The number of roller brake testers in operation within VI in each of the last 5 years was

1992: 193

1993: 193

(191 roller brake testers are in use at February 1996).

Additional roller brake testing capacity is available in vehicle operators' (designated) premises, primarily for annual statutory testing purposes. This capacity has increased by 43 roller brake testers over the past 3 years.

The number of immediate and delayed prohibitions issued from 1984 to 1994 is shown in the attached Table 1.

The key targets for enforcement activities are shown in the attached Table 2. Previous to 1991, performance on 5 activities was measured against targets related to the number of operators and vehicles. The targets were:

a) MOT Inspections—the equivalent of 1.5 routine visits per year per garage on the broad assumption that there would be one visit. The additional effort would be spent in applying extra checks on garages where it was evident that attention was necessary.

b) HGV Premises—the number of visits would equate to one visit per operator every 5 years. After the initial visit following granting or consideration of a licence, subsequent visits would depend upon need relative to evidence of poor maintenance or substantial changes in the nature of operation.

c) HGV Spot Checks—the equivalent of 20% of the HGV population examined per year (including vehicles examined at operators' premises).

d) PSV Premises—the equivalent of one visit every 5 years with each operator being visited when the licence was being granted or considered. Subsequent visits would be based upon evidence of poor maintenance or a considerable change in operating circumstances.

e) PSV Spot Checks—the equivalent of 30% of vehicle population (including vehicles examined at operators' premises).

All heavy goods vehicles have an annual statutory roadworthiness examination and are subject to roadside checks conducted by VI regardless of the nature of the goods carried. We do not have separate information for tankers carrying water which are checked as part of this normal routine. However, we have carried out special roadside checks on water tankers in the Yorkshire area; total of 203 vehicles were checked between October and December, 29 immediate and 19 delayed prohibitions were issued.

The number of additional posts created because of additional funding provided to VI is 11.5 traffic examiners and 2.5 vehicle examiners.

In accidents involving HGVs or PSVs, a VI vehicle examiner, on notification from the Police, will arrange to inspect the vehicle at the accident site, if possible, or at a suitable location that allows a full examination of the vehicle to be carried out. Particular attention is paid to safety critical systems eg brakes, steering, tyres and suspension, and any defects which the examiner considers may have contributed to the accident recorded. When the examination is complete, the relevant information is entered on VI's accident database. The examiner may issue an immediate or delayed prohibition if, in his opinion, the vehicle is unfit for service. The Police may also request a written factual statement of his findings which can be produced as evidence in Court. In "Special Interest" accident cases eg serious accidents involving passenger carrying vehicles or serious multiple collisions with several fatalities, the procedures are the same although in the case of coaches a detailed examination of the coach interior will be carried out to establish possible causes of passenger injury eg crushing by seats, normally by specially trained teams.

Separate statistics for prosecutions are only currently available for drivers' hours and overloading. All other offences, including tachograph and mechanical illegalities, are counted under a general heading and we cannot provide separate information

The detailed breakdown for drivers hours offences for 1994/95 is as follows.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what qualifications are required by personnel who carry out the maintenance of brakes and other safety critical parts on heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles. [13237]

Mr. Norris: Responsibility lies with goods and passenger vehicle operators to ensure their vehicles are roadworthy; there is no legal obligation for maintenance personnel to hold a relevant qualification. However, when applying for a licence, operators make a formal declaration to the traffic commissioner that they will

"undertake to make proper arrangements so that motor vehicles and trailers, including hired vehicles and trailers, are kept fit and serviceable." Advice on how this should be achieved is set out in the "Guide for Maintaining Roadworthiness" which incorporates the procedures necessary to satisfy the requirements for traffic commissioners.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals his Department has to investigate incidents of wheel loss involving heavy goods vehicles; and what funding his Department has made available to investigate this problem. [13240]

Mr. Norris: The Department of Trade and Industry contributed £35,000 to a study of wheel loss which resulted in a 1989 report by the Institute of Road Transport Engineers and led to a British Standard—BS AU 50: Part 2: Section 3:1994—and a British standard code practice—BSAU50 Part 2: Section 7a 1995. The code of practice is referred to in the Department's "Guide to Maintaining Roadworthiness" for operators of heavy vehicles.

An information leaflet, outlining various aspects of the problem and suggesting ways of overcoming some of the difficulties, was produced by the Department at the time of the IRTE report. We plan to update the leaflet to draw attention to the code of practice.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what controls his Department has put in place to prevent the sale of inferior brake pads and linings and other safety critical replacement parts for heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles. [13236]

Mr. Norris: None. However, discussions in Europe have resulted in a proposal for the control of replacement brake pads and linings which is expected to be incorporated in the braking directive 71/320/EEC. We shall consider taking advantage of these initiatives to introduce into the UK controls for replacement pads and linings. Decisions on the control of other replacement parts will continue to be taken on a case by case basis.

Vehicle and Traffic Computer Information

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the last five years the expenditure by the Vehicle Inspectorate and the traffic areas specifically on computerisation of enforcement intelligence. [13232]

Mr. Norris: The expenditure on computerisation of enforcement intelligence by the traffic areas is as follows:

1992–93: £131,000

1993–94: £46,000

(1995–96: year to date £3,400).

The initial set-up cost of the Vehicle Inspectorate's enforcement roadworthiness database in 1991–92 was £379,000. Subsequent running costs are not identified separately from all other computer running costs.

Brake Testing Machines

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many portable air brake testing machines are currently in use for the purpose of detecting air leaks in commercial vehicle breaking systems at roadside vehicle checks. [13235]

Mr. Norris: None

Disabled People (Bus Access)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines and advice he has issued to (a) manufacturers and (b) purchasers of buses about access for disabled people since the introduction of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [13188]

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport has set up working groups with both manufacturers and operators of buses to discuss the regulations that will be drawn up under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995.

We will also shortly be publishing the first in a series of information bulletins which will report the progress we are making in implementing the transport provisions of the Act. Bulletins will be circulated widely to manufacturers and operators, as well as to local authorities and to disability organisations. When regulations are made under part V of the Act we will issue separate detailed guidance to all those affected.

Vehicle and Traffic Examiners

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicle examiners and traffic examiners were employed by his Department in (a) 1989, (b) 1990 and (c) 1991. [13244]

Mr. Norris: The number of vehicle examiners and traffic examiners employed for 1989, 1990 and 1991 were:

	Vehicle examiners	Traffic examiners[1]
1989	480	213
1991	477	204

[1] Figures include traffic examiners, senior traffic examiners and enforcement managers.

Vehicle Crashes

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of vehicles weighing (a) 3.5 to 7.5 tonnes, (b) 7.5 to 17 tonnes and (c) more than 17 tonnes which were involved in crashes producing (i) fatalities, (ii) serious injuries and (iii) minor injuries in each of the last 10 years. [13238]

Mr. Norris: The information requested is shown in the following table.

Number of heavy goods vehicles[1] involved in injury road accidents: by accident severity: Great Britain: 1994

	Accident severity
	Fatal	Serious	Slight	All injury accident
All heavy goods vehicles involved	633	2,924	11,009	14,566
Of which, gross vehicle weight known[2]
3.5 to 7.5 tonnes	80	417	1,597	2,094
7.5 to 17 tonnes	65	406	1,551	2,022
More than 17 tonnes	411	1,571	5,353	7,335
Total known	556	2,394	8,501	11,451

[1] Goods vehicles over 3.5 tonnes gross vehicle weight.

[2] The police record heavy goods vehicles as such as on the STATS19 road accident report form.

However, the exact gross vehicle weight is only known for those cases where a link can be made with the vehicle details held by DVLA.

Railtrack Staff

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many members of staff are employed by Railtrack to oversee safety on the railways; how many of these have been appointed within the last year; how many people employed in this capacity have left the employment of Railtrack in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [13218]

Mr. Watts: I understand that Railtrack's safety and standards directorate currently employs 103 permanent staff and 12 temporary staff. During the last 12 months, six staff in this capacity have been appointed and eight staff have left the employment of Railtrack.

Rail Franchise Agreements

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the franchise agreements and related documents for the LTS Rail, Great Western Trains and South West Trains passenger rail franchise. [13589]

Mr. Watts: Copies of the franchise agreements for Great Western Trains and South West Trains have today been placed in the Library, together with the disabled, senior and young persons railcard schemes, the staff travel scheme, the ticketing and settlement agreement, the Association of Train Operating Companies' LRT scheme, the Travelcard agreement and the through-ticketing (non-travelcard) agreement. Certain provisions of these documents have been deleted in line with section 73 of the Railways Act 1993.

The franchise agreement for the LTS rail franchise will be placed in the Library in due course.

Railtrack (Privatisation)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the eligible amounts for capital allowances on plant and machinery and on industrial building in respect of the qualifying assets transferred to Railtrack which will be transferred to the private sector. [13747]

Mr. Watts: The amounts of capital allowances allocated to Railtrack PLC in respect of property transferred to it from the British Railways Board on 30 March 1994 are as follows:

in relation to plant and machinery: £521,536,242

in relation to industrial buildings: £618,530,990

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

International Trials

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's relations with the Dutch legal authorities in relation to international trials in The Hague. [12000]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: No. if the hon. Gentleman is referring to the Libyan proposal to hold in The Hague the trial of those accused of the Lockerbie bombing, we have made clear to the Dutch and other Governments our view on holding the trial in a third country.

Prisoners of Conscience

Mr. Fachett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department circulates country-specific lists of prisoners of conscience to other Departments whose Ministers are about to undertake visits aborad; if he encourages Ministers from outside his Department to raise such cases on visits; and if he will make a statement. [13221]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We frequently raise cases of individual political prisoners with our Governments. When a reliable, country-specific list is available, and is likely to be an effective means of alerting another Government to our concerns, Ministers from other Departments due to visit the country in question may be briefed accordingly and encouraged to make use of it.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

UNICEF

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was Britain's contribution to UNICEF in each of the last five years, at constant prices; and what is the planned contribution for 1996–97. [12578]

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

£ million

	Core contribution at cash prices	Core contribution at constant 1995–96 prices
1991–92	9.00	10.09
1992–93	9.50	10.23
1993–94	9.50	9.94
1994–95	8.50	8.73
1995–96	8.50	8.50

We plan to contribute £8.5 million to UNICEF's core budget in 1996–97.

In addition to its annual core contribution, the ODA also makes ad hoc contributions to UNICEF's supplementary and emergency activities. These figures are as follows:

£ million

	Contribution at cash prices	Contribution at constant 1995–96 prices
1991–92	4.75	5.33
1992–93	4.50	4.85
1993–94	13.60	14.23
1994–95	17.10	17.57

TREASURY

Corporation Tax

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the percentage of information on the Inland Revenue's Corporation's tax pay and file system which (a) is unreliable, (b) is inaccurate, (c) is not updated and (d) omits interest charges. [11121]

Mr. Jack: The Inland Revenue continually assesses the performance of the CT pay and file system. There are no significant problems with the reliability and accuracy of the information which the system handles.

A recently identified software problem in the updating of information used by collectors of taxes—including information on interest charges—is scheduled to be fixed early this month.

Office for National Statistics

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the cost of market research undertaken on the name of the new office for national statistics; what were the options considered for the name of this agency; what market research was undertaken; if he will publish the results of this market research; and if he will make a statement; [11629]

(2) what is his estimate of the expenditure by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on market research associated with the renaming of the combined Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and the Central Statistical Office; and if he will make a statement. [13172]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have asked the director of the Central Statistical Office to write to the hon. Member and will arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 5 February 1996:

The Economic Secretary has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Questions on the cost of market research undertaken in selecting the name of the new Office for National Statistics.

2 The choice of name for the new agency formed by the merger of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and the Central Statistical Office is particularly important. Individuals and businesses who will supply the new agency with its data have to recognise it as a safe guardian of data. It must also be widely recognised by users of statistics.

3 In terms of public confidence, the new agency must be identified with professionalism, integrity and independence from governmental control of statistical processes.

4 The existing names of the two organisations had created a measure of confusion in the public's mind as to the roles and functions of each organisation. It is important to create a simple, easily identifiable identity for the new agency. The new name also had to be carefully chosen so as to avoid conflicts with the roles and responsibilities of the territorial statistical services in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

5 To help in the difficult task of choosing a name for the new agency that would do all these things, a small scale market research consultancy was commissioned in 1995. This tested possible names amongst a range of users and other interested groups to identify the connotations of various terms, including "Official", "National" and "Government".

6 The clear findings of the market research were that there were strong benefits in using the terms "National" or "UK" rather than "Official" or "Government". This strongly influenced the choice of "Office for National Statistics" as the name for the new agency.

7 Almost all the work associated with publications design, design of a new logo and style of new office stationery was concluded in-house. The total money expended on consultancy advice was £4,250.

8. The research was significantly different from the large scale quantitative enquiries normally carried out by the CSO and is therefore not suitable for publication.

Incomes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the percentage year on year change in real personal disposable income in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) the United States of America, and (e) Japan since 1979. [11936]

Mrs. Angela Knight: UK figures can be found in table 4.1 of the UK national accounts. For the remaining countries, figures on a comparable basis are available in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development publication, "National Accounts", various issues. These publications are in the House of Commons Library.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money in 1995 prices the nuclear industry has received from the Exchequer in grants, subsidies and debt write-offs in each year since 1966. [12470]

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

British Energy

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the sum that the proposed sale of British energy will raise for the Exchequer. [12473]

Mr. Jack: The proceeds of the British energy sale will depend on a variety of factors, including market conditions at the time of the sale. The Government never release estimates of proceeds from forthcoming sales as such information would be market sensitive.

Privatised Companies' Debt (Sale)

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the sale of part of the Government's holding of privatised companies' debt. [14018]

Mr. Jack: The following bonds were offered for sale.

Issuer	Face value £ million	Coupon (Per cent.)	Maturity
National Grid	150	12.895	March 2001
Norweb	76	12.365	September 2008
Norweb	77	12.661	September 1999
SWEB	80	12.365	September 2008
Northern Electric	55	12.661	September 1999

I am pleased to report that the sale was successfully completed on 2 February. Three of the issuers, National Grid, Norweb and SWEB have purchased their bonds for early redemption. BZW has sold the Northern Electric bond on behalf of the Treasury.

Payment will be made to the Exchequer on 9 February. The net proceeds from the sale will total £538 million.

Departmental Property

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the annual cost to his Department and his Department's agencies and non-departmental public bodies of their empty and under utilised properties for (a) 1979–80, (b) 1989–90, (c) 1991–92, (d) 1993–94, (e) 1994–95, (f) 1995–96 and (g) 1996–97. [11450]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 30 January 1996]: The properties occupied by the Treasury, the Central Statistical Office, the Paymaster agency and the Valuation Office formed part of the Government's civil estate until 1990 and then the Government's common user estate. Information relating to the costs of holding CUE space vacant were given my hon. Friend Under-Secretary of State for the Environment on 31 January, columns 648-49.

From 1 April 1996, Departments and their agencies assume responsibility for the CUE vacant space. The cost of such vacant space to the Treasury and the agencies responsible to the Chancellor of the Exchequer is estimated to be £574,000 for 1996–97. The Treasury is making every effort to dispose of the empty property as efficiently as possible.

The Royal Mint is responsible for its own property. It has not incurred, and does not envisage incurring, any costs in respect of vacant space for the years in question.

Inter-agency Co-operation

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on co-operation between the Inland Revenue, the Contributions Agency, and Customs and Excise since 19 September 1995. [12540]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 1 February 1996]: Excellent progress continues to be made on co-operation between the Inland Revenue, the Contributions Agency and Customs and Excise. A number of measures have been implemented since 19 September 1995, including the successful launch of a telephone helpline pilot in Scotland for employers and VAT traders; a joint leaflet to help those setting up in business on their own; and new arrangements being piloted in the North of England to give new businesses a single form to register with all three departments. Peter Wyman—head of tax at Coopers and Lybrand and a member of the deregulation task force—has accepted an invitation to oversee work on joint working between the Inland Revenue and the Contributions Agency to bring in an external perspective. All three departments are continuing to work closely to identify other areas which will streamline their relationship with business.

Unemployment

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage of people unemployed for (a) up three months, (b) three to six months, (c) six to nine months, (d) nine to 12 months, (e) one to two years, (f) two to three years, (g) three to four years, (h) four to five years and (i) five years and over who get a job in the following month. [13084]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 1 February 1996]: The following table shows the percentage of claimants unemployed on 9 November 1995, in the UK, who left claimant unemployment in the following month for each unemployment duration band. No information is available on the destination of claimants who cease to claim unemployment-related benefit.

Percentage of UK Claimants Unemployed on 9 November 1995 who left the claimant count in the following month

Duration on 9 November 1995	Percentage in the following month (ie. before 14 December 1995)
Up to 3 months	17.8
Over 3 and up to 6 months	12.4
Over 6 and up to 9 months	11.8
Over 9 and up to 12 months	8.7
Over 1 and up to 2 years	9.5
Over 2 and up to 3 years	7.4
Over 3 and up to 4 years	4.7
Over 4 and up to 5 years	4.3
Over 5 years	2.7

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many persons, according to the latest available information, are employed under contract for (a) zero hours per week, (b) one to eight hours, (c) nine to 15 hours, (d) 16 to 24 hours, (e) 25 to 30 hours, (f) 31 to 40 hours, (g) 41 to 50 hours, (h) 51 to 60 hours, (i) 61 to 70 hours, (j) 71 to 80 hours and (k) more than 80 hours per week; and what percentage of the total work force each group represents. [13169]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 31 January 1996]: The available information from the labour force survey is as follows:

Basic usual hours[1] worked by employees in Great Britain (summer 1995, not seasonally adjusted)

Basic usual hours worked per week[1]	Number of employees (thousands)	As a percentage of all employees
0	n/a	n/a
1 to 8	968	4.4
9 to 15	1,394	6.3
16 to 24	2,095	9.5
25 to 30	1,355	6.1
31 to 40	13,154	59.7
41 to 50	2,069	9.4
51 to 60	571	2.6
61 to 70	159	0.7
71 to 80	69	0.3
more than 80	83	0.4

[1] Hours usually worked in their main job, excluding meal breaks and overtime.

n/a not available, estimate below 10,000.

Cyclical Social Security

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what definition his Department has of cyclical social security; and if he will indicate each category of person included with spending on each category in 1994–95, and a forecast of 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98. [13616]

Mr. Roger Evans: I have been asked to reply.

Cyclical social security is defined as unemployment benefit and income support paid to people of working age. From October 1996 it will cover jobseeker's allowance and income support to people of working age.

The client group definition for cyclical social security is as follows:

"Unemployed" includes Unemployment Benefit (JSA from October 1996) plus IS to the unemployed.

"Short term sick" is IS to people who are sick for up to six months and who do not receive a disability pension.

"Long term sick and disabled" is IS paid to disabled people and people who are sick for more than six months.

"Families" is IS to lone parents.

"Widows and others" is IS paid to people who do not fall into the other client groups.

Cyclical Social Security client group expenditure

£ millions

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Unemployed	6,583	6,522	6,473	6,468
Short term sick	429	457	478	503
Long term sick and disabled	2,218	2,290	2,364	2,460
Family	3,992	3,770	3,623	3,836
Widows and others	379	420	468	531
Total	13,602	13,459	13,400	13,800

Notes:

1. Totals may not sum due to rounding.
2. 1994-95 estimated outturn; 1995-96 to 1997-98 planned expenditure.
3. These figures are currently being updated and will be available in the 1996 Departmental report which will be published at the end of March 1996.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Coal Properties

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much revenue he expects to be generated from the remaining sales of British Coal properties. [13258]

Mr. Page: The disposal of its property is a matter for British Coal. It would not be appropriate to speculate on what the eventual proceeds might be.

Domestic Electricity Consumers (Discount)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what number and percentage of domestic electricity consumers will not receive the National Grid discount because they live in mobile homes; and if he will provide an age breakdown of the affected consumers. [13551]

Mr. Page: My Department does not keep this information.

The National Grid discount is being made by the regional electricity companies to their 21 million domestic customers.

Fireworks

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to restrict the use of category 3 fireworks to those operating under licence from the local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [13491]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have no plans to restrict the use of category 3 fireworks to organisers of fireworks displays. Category 3 covers a wide range of firework types, some of which are not suitable for use in small spaces. For this reason, category 3 fireworks are required to be clearly marked as "display" fireworks, carry instructions for use and indicate the safe distance for spectators. This allows people to make choices and purchase fireworks to suit their own circumstances.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the average price for a kilowatt hour of electricity in each of the organisations for Economic Co-operation and Development countries; and if he will make a statement. [13738]

Mr. Page: The information requested is given in the table and relates to the annual average prices for 1994. Data for all countries include any duties or taxes payable which are non-recoverable.

pence per kWh

	Industrial electricity	Domestic electricity
Austria	4.68	10.79
Belgium	3.84	11.44
Canada	2.47	3.90
Denmark	4.10	11.70
Finland	3.38	5.72
France	3.45	9.75
Germany	5.98	11.57
Ireland	3.97	8.00
Italy	6.11	10.27
Japan	11.25	16.19
Luxembourg	n/a	8.32
Mexico	2.73	4.49
Netherlands	3.71	7.48
New Zealand	2.34	4.36
Norway	n/a	4.36
Portugal	7.54	10.60
Spain	5.20	11.31
Sweden	2.41	5.53
Switzerland	6.89	8.52
Turkey	5.01	4.94
United Kingdom	4.42	8.00
United States	3.06	5.46

Note:
Data for Australia and Greece are not available.

International Energy Agency.

Electricity prices for both industrial and domestic consumers in the UK have fallen, in real terms, by 10 and 7 per cent. respectively since privatisation of the electricity supply industry. The above table show that United Kingdom prices are among the lowest in the industrialised world and are generally lower than our main European competitors. Further reductions in UK prices during 1996 are likely to improve the UK's position even more.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the average price for a kilowatt hour of electricity charged to consumers in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [13739]

Mr. Page: In 1995, the average standard tariff charge for a kilowatt hour of electricity in the United Kingdom was 7.3p. Domestic customers also pay a quarterly standing charge. In 1995, the average standing charge in the UK was £10.39. The standard tariff and standing charge quoted do not include VAT.

In 1995, the average price paid by industrial electricity consumers per kilowatt hour was about 4.5p.

Domestic electricity prices in the UK have fallen, in real terms, since 1990. The average price of electricity is now 7 per cent. lower, in real terms excluding VAT, than it was before privatisation. Domestic consumers will benefit from further reductions during 1996. The National Grid rebate, tightened distribution price controls and a reduction in the fossil fuel levy, mean that average domestic electricity bills in 1996 should be around one fifth lower, in 1995 prices, than in 1995.

Since privatisation, industrial electricity prices have fallen by 10 per cent. in real terms. Industrial electricity prices are now at their lowest level, in real terms, than at any time since records began in 1970. Reduction in distribution charges and the fossil fuel levy will also benefit industrial customers during 1996.

Research and Technological Development

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the total sums allocated to (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each other EU state under the European Union's framework programme for research and technological development in each of the years from the establishment of the programme. [13364]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Payments from European Community expenditure programmes are not allocated to member states in the legislation supporting the programmes.

Framework IV, which runs from 1994–98 is the EU's main research and development programme. It has a budget of 13.1 billion ecu—approximately £10.9 billion. It is administered by the European Commission, which receives applications and manages the project selection process. The budget is not pre-allocated in any way among member states. Projects are selected on the basis of scientific excellence. UK researchers have participated strongly in successive framework programmes.

Official Receiver

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 12 December 1995, Official Report, column 600, what contracts have been awarded with regard to the functions of the official receiver. [13112]

Mr. Oppenheim: Following the conclusions of the initial and financial evaluation of the six tenders received for the case administration work of official receivers, I have agreed to an extension of the timetable to allow additional discussions to take place with those bidders most likely to be able to offer increased value for money. It is now my intention to make an announcement on the outcome of this exercise before the end of February.

Company Procedures

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 12 December 1995, Official Report, column 600-01, what progress he has made with the British Bankers Association on a binding code of practice. [13113]

Mr. Oppenheim: The British Bankers' Association has accepted the invitation to develop a code of practice.

Departmental Publicity

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) of 26 January, Official Report, column 424, how much has been spent by his Department on publicity and media relations for each year since 1990, including staff costs and how many press officers have been employed by his Department in each year since 1979. [13114]

Mr. John M. Taylor: (a) Expenditure from centrally managed budgets on publicity and media relations, including staff costs, has been as follows:

1992–93: £13,002,000

1994–95: £10,685,000

(b) Some 19 press officers are currently employed in the Department's Press Office. Corresponding figures for previous years are as follows:

1995: 19

1993: 19

The numbers of press officers before 1993 are not separately identifiable.

Departmental Running Costs (Limits)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 20 December, Official Report, column 1265, when he expects the MINIS process currently being used to seek savings in all areas of the Department's running costs completed. [13591]

Mr. Lang: The MINIS 96 process is continuing on schedule. I expect to publish the outcome for the financial year 1996–97 by May 1996. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

European Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how he ensures that the negotiating brief for his officials discussing EU legislation takes fully into account the need to minimise the burdens on United Kingdom business. [13685]

Mr. Page: Official guidance on how officials are to apply deregulatory principles when negotiating EC regulations are contained in the booklet "Getting a Good Deal in Europe". This guidance has also been supplemented by the recent publication of guidance on the preparation of compliance cost assessments which stresses that the likely burdens on business highlighted by UK compliance cost assessments of EC proposals should be integral to the UK's negotiating strategy.

Copies of both these guidance booklets have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade after which date National Power and PowerGen can dispose of sites owned at the time of privatisation without a share of the proceeds going to Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement. [12856]

Mr. Page: The provisions of the property clawback regime will continue to apply to all of the privatised electricity companies until 31 March 2000.

Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which power stations or other sites have closed or become surplus to requirements since privatisation by (a) PowerGen and (b) National Power; which of such sites have been sold; and what Her Majesty's Government have received in each instance. [12855]

Mr. Page: Detailed questions about the classification, use or sale of sites are a commercial matter for the companies. Since 1990, under the property clawback provisions which apply to all the privatised electricity companies HM Government have received £0.56 million and £0.89 million from National Power and PowerGen respectively.

Combat-induced Post-traumatic Stress Disorder

Mr. McNamara: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research is or has been undertaken by the Medical Research Council into combat-induced post-traumatic stress disorder. [12905]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Medical Research Council is not currently carrying out, and has not carried out any research into combat-induced post-traumatic stress disorder.

HEALTH

Private Health Care (Referrals)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS patients were referred to private health care by NHS doctors in 1995–96. [12938]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Psychiatric Hospitals

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the number of medium secure beds provided in each year since 1985 by each private psychiatric hospital, analysed by location and health authority; and what is the average current cost of such beds as compared with equivalent NHS beds; [12297]

(2) how many medium secure psychiatric hospital beds there have been in each region in each year since 1985; [12296]

(3) how many of the patients currently in medium secure provision in each of the private psychiatric hospitals live within their health authority catchment area; and how many come from homes outside the area. [12298]

Mr. Bowis: The tables show the number of purpose-built medium secure places in each region. Since 31 March 1995 a further 160 places have opened. There are also about 450 places nationally in interim secure psychiatric units, many of which are of medium secure standard. The other information requested is not available centrally.

Purpose-built medium secure places by region

Hospital-at-home Schemes

Sir Timothy Sainsbury: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of patients now being treated under hospital-at-home schemes annually. [12697]

Mr. Bowis: Information concerning hospital-at-home schemes is not collected centrally, however health authorities and national health service trusts are continuing to show interest in such developments. Recent initiatives include the expansion of the Peterborough hospital-at-home scheme to include paediatric services and the introduction of a new hospital-at-home scheme funded by East Sussex district health authority and established by collaboration between the South Downs Health and Brighton Healthcare NHS trusts. Further information is available from the chairman of the North West Anglia Health Commission and the chairman of the South Downs Health NHS Trust respectively.

Public Health Laboratory Service

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Public Health Laboratory Service abandoned work on hospital disinfectants; and if he was consulted on that decision. [13132]

Mr. Horam: The Public Health Laboratory Service has not abandoned work on hospital disinfectants. Its central public health laboratory maintains a continuing expertise in this field. CPHL gives expert advice in response to numerous enquiries, and has in hand a number of specific projects such as testing disinfectants which are suspected of contamination and, for the World Health Organisation, tests of systems currently used for the asepsis and safety of vaccines.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many scientists are employed in the Public Health Laboratory Service; and what number it is planned will be made redundant. [13130]

Mr. Horam: The Public Health Laboratory Service employs 224 scientists. Consultations on four redundant posts have recently been completed and are still proceeding on a further two scientists' posts.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors underlay the decision that the Public Health Laboratory Service would no longer be represented on EC committees engaged in writing procedures for testing disinfectants. [13131]

Mr. Horam: The Public Health Laboratory Service continues to have an input to European consideration of matters relating to the testing of disinfectants. A PHLS representative sits on the British Standards Institute technical committee IH/57 "Chemical Disinfectants and Antiseptics", which links directly with its European counterpart.

Family Planning

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the medical centres (a) dealing with abortion, (b) providing contraceptive advice and (c) with in vitro fertilisation facilities. [12983]

Mr. Horam: Information on medical centres dealing with abortion or providing contraceptive advice is not available centrally.

On 11 October 1995 the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority published "The Patients' Guide to Donor Insemination and IVF Clinics". The publication contains information on treatments offered by licensed centres. Copies are available in the Library.

Alcohol Information Leaflets

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to make funds available for the reprinting of alcohol information leaflets; and if he will make a statement. [12996]

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to make money available to assist local alcohol advisory services to rewrite and reprint information leaflets, to reflect the recent changes in the Government statement on weekly guidelines for alcohol consumption. [13560]

Mr. Bowis: We recognise that the recommendations in the report of the interdepartmental group on sensible drinking need to be communicated effectively to the public. We are funding the Health Education Authority to do this.

Cardiac Services, London

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who is responsible for strategic planning of London's cardiac services; and what is his current plan. [13260]

Mr. Malone: The strategic planning of cardiac services in London—as elsewhere—is a matter for purchasing authorities and national health service trusts working together to ensure that comprehensive services are provided to meet patients' needs both now and in the future, taking into account national planning and priorities guidelines.

Plans for developing specialist services in London are set out in "Making London Better" including an independent review of cardiac services, which was published in July 1993. Its recommendations have contributed to planning the future configuration of these services in the capital. Copies of the documents are available in the Library.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what proportion of the hospitals listed as providing specialist treatment for cardiac patients in the 1993 London implementation group report of the cardiac speciality review (a) have since closed and (b) are in the process of closure. [13245]

Mr. Malone: The independent review of the 14 tertiary cardiac centres in London, published in July 1993, is only part of a range of available advice taken into account in considering the future configuration of these services in the capital. In April 1995, decisions were announced on the concentration of cardiac services in south east London at St Thomas's hospital and in east London at the Royal London hospital site at Whitechapel. Since then, cardiac services provided in outdated accommodation at the Brook hospital have transferred to Guy's hospital and St. Thomas's hospital. The Brook hospital closed in November 1995. There are no immediate plans for the closure of other hospitals named in the report.

Junior Doctors' Hours

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many newly qualified doctors have joined the NHS in each year since 1979; and how many hours newly qualified doctors work each week on average. [13267]

Mr. Malone: Information on the numbers of newly qualified doctors joining the NHS is not held centrally. However, the normal route is for them to become pre-registration house officers. Figures for these are shown in the table.

Number of pre-registration house officers in England as at 30 September each year since 1979

Year	Number
1980	2,650
1981	2,720
1982	2,710
1983	2,830
1984	2,770
1985	2,840
1986	2,810
1987	2,790
1988	2,860
1989	2,940
1990	3,020
1992	3,040
1993	3,090
1994	3,020

Figures are rounded to the nearest '10'.

Again, figures for the average number of hours worked each week by junior doctors, whether or not newly qualified, are not held centrally. However, returns from regional task forces on junior doctors' hours indicate that under 1 per cent. of PRHOs were contracted for hours above the December 1994 limits and under 2 per cent. in total remain above the target to be reached by December 1996. These limits are set out in the "New Deal on Junior Doctors' Hours," a copy of which is placed in the Library.

Secure Places

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made by local authorities involved in providing the 170 additional secure places required for criminal justice purposes; and when he expects all the additional places to be available. [13818]

Mr. Bowis: The first additional places became available in December of last year. Further new places will come on stream throughout 1996 leading to around 100 additional places being completed by the end of this year and the balance by mid-1997.

Details of the new places being provided within the capital development programme are shown in the table.

Methylphenidate

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what discussions his Department has had with the drug company Ciba regarding (a) the production and (b) distribution of the drug methylphenidate; and if he will make a statement; [13700]

(2) how much methylphenidate is produced annually; and if he will make a statement; [13698]

(3) what further steps he is taking to control the (a) production and (b) distribution of the drug methylphenidate; and if he will make a statement; [13693]

(4) what guidance he has issued to general practitioner fundholding practices regarding the drug methylphenidate; and if he will make a statement; [13699]

(5) what assessment he has made of the effects of the drug methylphenidate; and if he will make a statement; [13692]

(6) what representations he has received on the drug methylphenidate; and if he will make a statement. [13694]

Mr. Malone: Methylphenidate—Ritalin—has been assessed by the normal procedures for licensing of medicinal products in the United Kingdom to ensure its efficacy, safety and quality. As for all medicines, there is continuous monitoring of safety after marketing by the Medicines Control Agency. Methylphenidate is not manufactured in this country. It is available as a prescription-only medicine under the controls of schedule 2 of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. Any discussions between the licensing authority and the marketing authorisation holders are treated in confidence. There are no plans for further controls on the availability of methylphenidate.

Methylphenidate—Ritalin—is licensed for use under the supervision of a specialist in childhood behaviour disorders. No guidance has been issued regarding prescribing by a general practitioner in a fundholding practice, but this may be done by mutual agreement as part of a joint protocol of care with such a specialist. The Department of Health has received representations in the form of four parliamentary questions and a small amount of correspondence.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) on what basis the decision was taken to make the drug methylphenidate available as a controlled drug through general practitioners; [13697]

(2) what consultations took place prior to the decision to make the drug methylphenidate available as a controlled drug through general practitioners; on what basis it was previously available; and if he will make a statement. [13696]

Mr. Malone: I understand from the Home Department that methylphenidate, in conformity with the United Nations convention on psychotropic substances 1971, has been a controlled drug under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 since it came into force. It can therefore be prescribed by general practitioners.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the number of prescriptions dispensed for the drug methylphenidate since it became available; and if he will provide a breakdown by (a) general practitioner fundholding practice and (b) health authority for (i) the nations and (ii) regions of the United Kingdom. [13695]

Mr. Malone: The Department has a duty of confidence relating to the use of information derived from patient records and, following our usual practice, the information requested cannot be supplied at this level of detail because it is confidential.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department collects on (a) travel expenses and (b) overseas visits made by trust personnel. [13751]

Mr. Malone: The National Health Service Executive collects annual information on the total staff travelling and subsistence expenditure by each trust. Information is not held centrally on overseas visits by trust personnel.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department maintains on (a) sickness levels and (b) employee dismissals in trusts. [13750]

Mr. Malone: None.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of BSE were confirmed in cattle (a) under two years of age, (b) between two and three years, (c) between three and four years, (d) between four and five years, (e) between five years and six years, (f) between six and seven years and (g) seven years and over for each breed of cattle in the United Kingdom, for each year since 1985. [12177]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Tables showing the number of cases of BSE by breed and age and by year of the disease for Great Britain and Northern Ireland are being placed in the Library of the House.

Cyclamates

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for each European Community country the permitted amount of cyclamates which were granted with effect from 1 January; what were the figures 12 months ago; and if he will make a statement. [12865]

Mrs. Browning: From 1 January 1996, all member states were required to permit the use of cyclamates in table-top sweeteners and in certain foods up to specified maximum levels in accordance with European Parliament and Council directive 94/35/EC of 30 June 1994 on sweeteners for use in foodstuffs—OJ No. L237, 10.9.94, p.3). Details concerning the maximum permissible levels of use of cyclamates in those foods are given in the annex to that directive.

Prior to the 1 January 1996 the use of sweeteners in foods was not subject to Community legislation and national rules applied in each member state. While precise details are not available, it is understood that the use of cyclamates was authorised to varying degrees in Germany, Denmark, Belgium, the Netherlands, Spain, Italy, Greece and Portugal. Although these sweeteners were not permitted for food use in the United Kingdom because of uncertainties over their safety, the Department of Health's independent expert committee, the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment, has recently advised on the basis of the results of new studies, that there are no longer any health concerns preventing their use.

I have arranged for the COT's statement to be deposited in the Libraries of both Houses.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in how many cases in September 1995 animal export health certificates were presented to his officials at Dover where the certificates or their accompanying schedules had not been completed in accordance with his Department's instructions to local veterinary inspectors; and if he will make a statement. [12637]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 30 January 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Nottingham, East (Mr. Heppell) on 26 October 1995, Official Report, column 751. Subsequent returns have identified two further minor deficiencies in documentation of which one was resolved locally and the other was referred back for resolution to the divisional veterinary manager for the area from which the animals originated.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether all consignments of animals for further fattening and calves destined for export from Brightlingsea between 18 January and 25 October 1995 arrived at the port with completed export certificates; and if consignments were unloaded from their respective vehicles and loaded into the MV Caroline with the same accompanying certificates. [12541]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 1 February 1996]: All consignments of animals for export from Brightlingsea, with one exception, arrived with completed export health certification although a number of minor irregularities were identified and resolved. The sole exception related to one certificate for slaughter sheep which was not signed and stamped by a LVI and the consignment had to be re-certified by a LVI at the port. All consignments were loaded on to the vessel in such a way as to ensure that individual consignments of animals remained segregated, each with the same accompanying health certification.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many consignments of sheep for further fattening and calves were issued with an export health certificate for exit through the port of Brightlingsea between 18 January and 25 October 1995. [12542]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 1 February 1996]: Export health certification is not specific to a port, but 384 consignments of sheep and 664 consignments of calves were exported from the port in this period. It is not possible to given separate figures for sheep for slaughter and for further fattening except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the anomalies in respect of the implementation of health export certificates for calves between (a) Holland, (b) Belgium, (c) France, (d) Italy and (e) the United Kingdom. [12916]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 1 February 1996]: All certificates for export of live animals to other EC member states are drawn up to ensure that they meet the necessary animal health requirements.

PRIME MINISTER

Prime Minister's Question Time

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the occasions since 9 June 1995 when answers given at Prime Minister's Question Time were subsequently corrected or otherwise qualified. [13669]

The Prime Minister: This is a matter of public record.

Crime Rates

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 773, if he will set out the basis of his statement that crime is falling for the first time in 40 years. [13721]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) on 1 February 1996, Official Report, columns 1120–21.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Pendle Borough Council

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the organisations located within the boundaries of Pendle borough council that received grants from the Duchy's benevolent fund in (i) 1994 and (ii) 1995. [13144]

Mr. Freeman: I am not a trustee of the benevolent fund and thus do not have details of donations. However the Secretary of the fund has provided the following information:

Year	Fund	£
1994	Burnley and Pendle Greenspace	400
	A handicapped lady in Nelson	250
1995	A young person in Earby	200
	Mansfield High school Brierfield	400
	Barnoldswick Park Rovers FC	450
	Pendle Duke of Edinburgh's award team	1,000
	Colne parish church	500

Donations are also made to other charities which may assist causes or individuals within the boundaries of Pendle borough council.

Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what cost savings he expects to accrue from the contracting out of the principal civil service pension scheme; [12932]

(2) what representations he has received from members of the principal civil service pension scheme concerning the contracting out of the scheme; and what percentage of those representations have been in favour of the contracting out proposals; [12936]

(3) when the decision to contact out the principal civil service pension scheme was taken; [12934]

(4) what the level of investment in the administration of the principal civil service pension scheme has been since 1992; [12933]

(5) how many members there are in the principal civil service pension scheme; [12937]

(6) if he will make a statement on the conclusion of the efficiency scrutiny into the principal civil service pension scheme, published in December 1992, with particular reference to administration of the scheme; [12931]

(7) what discussions his Department has had with the current administrators of the principal civil service pension scheme with respect to the contracting-out of the principal civil service pension scheme. [12935]

Mr. Willetts: The efficiency scrutiny of administration of the principal civil service pension scheme identified the administration function as suitable for market testing and recommended that departments should be encouraged to pursue this. All the recommendations of the scrutiny were accepted, including those directed at raising standards of service quality and delivery to scheme members. New pensions administration software is being developed at a cost of some £1.2 million. This will facilitate the market testing process and make it particularly effective. Employing departments have been fully involved in the development of the new software, as they have with other aspects of implementation of the efficiency scrutiny recommendations.

There are some 520,000 active members of the PCSPS. Some 544,000 former civil servants or their dependants are in receipt of a pension, and there are approximately 240,000 former civil servants with pension benefits preserved for payment at pension age.

It is not possible to specify in advance the savings which result from subjecting particular activities to competition, but I have no reason to doubt that market testing PCSPS administration will identify cost savings consistent with the average saving of 21 per cent. that has resulted from the £2.6 billion worth of activities reviewed under the competing for quality programme in the three years to March 1995.

My predecessor, my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington (Mr. Horam), announced in a written answer on 17 October 1995, Official Report, columns 184–85, that an order under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 opening up administration of the PCSPS to the private sector would be laid in this Session of Parliament. Various representations that had been made were taken fully into account in the decision to open up to competition the administration of the PCSPS. The Council of Civil Service Unions and the Civil Service Pensioners' Alliance have been formally consulted. I can assure scheme members that occupational pension arrangements for civil servants will continue to be provided through the PCSPS and that the scheme will continue to be managed and controlled by the Office of Public Service. It is scheme administration that is to be market tested.

Deregulation

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which regulations have been repealed under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994; and which of them applied to firms with (a) under 100 employees, (b) under 50 employees and (c) under 10 employees. [13099]

Mr. Freeman: Two orders have been enacted under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994. They contain a number of measures to assist the greyhound industry and building societies. Both measures benefit industry as a whole and were not targeted specifically at small businesses.

A further 19 proposals have been laid before the Parliamentary Committees which will ease burdens on a wide range of industrial sectors including Scottish salmon fishers and private companies.

European Directives

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the interdepartmental review of guidance on gold plating is planned to be completed; and which Departments have been involved. [13617]

Mr. Freeman: It is expected that the interdepartmental review of guidance on gold plating will be completed by Easter. All Departments with responsibility for implementing EC directives are involved in the review.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on what date it became Government policy not to gold plate EC directives; and how may (a) existing pieces of legislation have been reviewed and (b) changes to United Kingdom law have been made since that date. [13635]

Mr. Freeman: This Government's long-standing policy on the implementation of EC directives in the UK has been to avoid the addition of unnecessary burdens. Government Departments keep existing legislation under review in the light of this policy.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying sorties were booked in 1995 by non-United Kingdom based aircraft from each foreign air force. [12893]

Mr. Soames: The number of sorties booked in the United Kingdom low flying system in 1995 by non-United Kingdom-based foreign aircraft were as follows:

	Number
Belgium	154
Denmark	99
France	139
Germany	111
Holland	164
Italy	115
New Zealand	1
Norway	45
Portugal	21
Switzerland	4
USA	53
Total	906

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the pilots of the four Italian air force AMXs involved in an aircraft proximity incident near Teesside airport on 12 July 1994 were (a) given a pre-flight briefing by RAF personnel on the rules of the United Kingdom low flying system and (b) interviewed by the Royal Air Force personnel following the report of the incident; and how many formal approaches seeking a report from the Italian pilots were made to the Italian authorities by the Civil Aviation Authority personnel. [13255]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows: (a) yes; (b) no. The Civil Aviation Authority advised that it has no records of any formal approaches to the Italian authorities.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions are given to Royal Air Force Chinook crews concerning the safety aspects of prolonged cruising flight at heights of less than 300 ft above ground level. [13211]

Mr. Soames: To maintain essential skills for operational low flying, it is routine for RAF Chinook crews to train below 300 ft above ground level. Normal RAF rules for low flying apply and Chinook crews receive training, both in the simulator and in the aircraft, to cope with emergencies which might arise.

Arms Sales (Saudi Arabia)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of Sir Colin Chandler in respect of arms deals with the Government of Saudi Arabia; and if he will make a statement. [13102]

Mr. Arbuthnot: While head of defence sales, from 1985 to 1989, Sir Colin Chandler discussed the sale of British defence equipment with many countries including Saudi Arabia.

Munitions Dumping

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Huddersfield of 19 January, Official Report, columns 844–45, for what reasons complete records of past Ministry sea dumping operations are not available. [13382]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is contained in correspondence between my Department and the House of Commons Defence Committee, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all (a) ships sunk and (b) aircraft ditched off the coast of the United Kingdom since 1966 which records list as carrying (i) chemical weapons, (ii) toxic wastes and (iii) conventional explosives and munitions; and if he will make a statement on the environmental impact of these wrecks. [13352]

Mr. Soames: There are no records of either accidental or deliberate sinkings of RN ships or ditchings of military aircraft carrying these materials.

Tornado Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the accident involving a Royal Air Force Tornado GR.1 on 11 January. [13212]

Mr. Soames: A RAF board of inquiry is conducting a detailed investigation into the cause of this accident and a copy of a summary of its findings will be placed in the Library of the House in due course.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the nationality of each of the crew involved in the mid-air collision between two Tornado F.3 aircraft on 10 January. [13213]

Mr. Soames: The crews were British.

Air Misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates, aircraft types and nationalities, locations, risk classifications and causes of air misses involving military aircraft in United Kingdom airspace from 1 January 1994 to the latest available date. [13207]

Mr. Soames: Information on air misses in the UK is published by the Civil Aviation Authority three times a year in the joint air miss working group compendium, copies of which are routinely placed in the Library of the House.

Aircraft Proximity Incident (Perth)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British military personnel, and from which units, were on board the Portuguese air force helicopter involved in an aircraft proximity incident at Perth airfield on 6 June 1994. [13254]

Mr. Soames: There is no record that any British military personnel were on board.

Italian Air Force (Exchange Visits)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates of exchange visits by aircraft or crews from No. 56 Squadron Royal Air Force to units of the Italian air force since 1992. [13214]

Mr. Soames: Aircraft and crew from No. 56 Squadron have taken part in exchange visits to units of the Italian air force on the following occasions since 1992:

10–12 October 1994: to Aviano

17–19 March 1995: to Grossetto

21–27 April 1995: to Ghedi

22 June: to Grossetto

4–6 July 1995: to Gioia Del Colle

Official Residences

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what decision has been made about the future of the official service residence, Haymes Garth; and if he will make a statement. [14019]

Mr. Soames: Haymes Garth will be sold on the open market. Thereafter, the air officer commanding in chief, personnel and training command will be accommodated in an existing quarter adjacent to his headquarters which is presently occupied by the air officer training. Disposal will follow AOT's vacation of the quarter on completion of his tour of duty.

Land Mines (Bosnia)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the dangers of anti-personnel land mines for implementation force troops in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement. [12274]

Mr. Soames: IFOR estimates that up to 5 million land mines, including anti-personnel mines, may have been laid in Bosnia. Under the terms of the peace agreement, the clearance of mines and related devices is the responsibility of the consenting parties themselves. IFOR's role is limited to monitoring and co-ordinating this programme, except where there is a serious threat to life or where clearance is necessary to allow IFOR to complete assigned tasks. In a tragic incident on 28 January, three British service men were killed when their armoured vehicle triggered a mine while on patrol.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of staff employed by his Department or related agencies in each of the travel-to-work areas of Carmarthen, South Pembrokeshire, Haverfordwest, Fishguard and Cardigan on (a) 31 March 1979, (b) 31 March 1990, (c) 31 March 1992, (d) 31 March 1995, (e) the latest available figure and (f) the estimate for 31 March 1997. [13298]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Historical information is not available in the form requested. However, data are available for 1 April 1995 and 1 April 1998. Details are:

Travel to work area[1]	1 April 1995	[2]1 April 1998
Carmarthen	750	740
South Pembrokeshire	1,050	873
Haverfordwest	1,021	870
Fishguard	992	852
Cardigan	540	468

[1] Travel to work area is defined as a radius of 25 miles.

[2] 1 April 1998 figures are a forecast based on current plans and could be subject to change.

1. Figures are for civilian and service personnel.

Gulf War

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if all individuals that served in the Gulf war will now qualify for medical assessment following his recent announcement. [13754]

Mr. Soames: All service and ex-service personnel who think that they are suffering some form of illness as a result of their service in the Gulf war are entitled, upon referral by a service medical officer or general practitioner, to be seen under the medical assessment programme run by my Department.

Equal Treatment Directive

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, (1) pursuant to his answer of 23 January, Official Report, column 139, if he will list the measures taken by his Department to implement article 7 of the equal treatment directive; and when each was taken; [13587]

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the documents showing how article 7 of the equal treatment directive has been implemented by his Department. [13588]

Mr. Soames: Members of the armed forces were brought within the scope of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 on 1 February 1995, the effective date of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 (Application to Armed Forces etc.) Regulations 1994 (SI 1994/3276). Sections 4 and 6 of the SDA have the effect of implementing article 7 of the equal treatment directive. Copies of all these documents are already held in the Library of the House.

Royal Flight

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many flights are charged to the Privy Purse when the aircraft of B2 (the Royal Squadron) return to base between the outward and return journey by the passenger. [13684]

Mr. Soames: My Department does not levy a charge for the positioning or recovery of flights associated with private travel in aircraft of No. 32 (The Royal Squadron) by those entitled members of the royal family.

ENVIRONMENT

European Commission Meeting

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what matters relating to the environment were discussed at the European Commission weekly meeting on 24 January. [12683]

Mr. Clappison: The agenda for the weekly Commission meeting is a matter for the Commission rather than my Department. I understand, however, that at the meeting on 24 January the Commission adopted its review of the fifth environmental action programme.

Wind Farm, Forest of Bowland

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the possibility of a wind farm in the forest of Bowland area of outstanding natural beauty. [12597]

Sir Paul Beresford: None.

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish (a) the proposed or actual total external support in 1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97 and (b) the proposed or actual spending limit, taking into account the revision of Somerset's spending limit during 1995–96 for each of the seven counties of the south-west plus Kent, Oxfordshire and Warwickshire. [11827]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information is given in the following tables.

[2] Cap limits implied by provisional criteria for 1996–97, announced on 31 January 1996.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was (a) the per capita and (b) the total standard spending assessment in both current and real terms for Hereford and Worcester county council for (a) social services, (b) education and (c) total council expenditure in (i) 1992–93, (ii) 1993–94, (iii) 1994–95, (iv) 1995–96 and (v) 1996–97. [12070]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information is as follows:

Newbury Bypass

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment the Health and Safety Executive has made of whether health and safety arrangements made by contractors and security companies employed to clear the route of the Newbury bypass are sufficient to minimise risks to the public. [12745]

Sir Paul Beresford: Health and Safety Executive inspectors are working closely with the contractors, security company, the Highways Agency, police and local authorities and are monitoring site activities to ensure that risks to the health and safety of the public are minimised.

Right to Buy (Discounts)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each year since 1980–81 the total value of discounts to public sector tenants in England exercising their right to buy. [13090]

Mr. Clappison: Figures for discounts given to council tenants exercising their right-to-buy were not collected by the Department before 1994, nor were such data collected in respect of new town tenants. However, information is available for the total value of discounts allowed from all sales of council dwellings for owner-occupation in England and this is shown in the table:

Value of discounts allowed on completed disposals by local authorities and New Towns

England	1980–81 to 1994–95 £ million
1981–82	926.4
1982–83	1,316.4
1983–84	960.2
1984–85	885.1
1985–86	914.8
1986–87	1,089.9
1987–88	1,557.0
1988–89	2,688.2
1989–90	2,865.2
1990–91	1,800.2
1991–92	1,167.9
1992–93	880.1
1994–95	918.4

The number of public sector sales for owner-occupation during this period was about 1.450 million, and 85 per cent. of such sales resulted from tenants exercising their right-to-buy.

Whales

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many whales have become stranded and have died around the shore of the United Kingdom in each year since 1990; what research he has commissioned into the causes; and what advice he has issued to local authorities on the disposal of the carcases. [13143]

Mr. Clappison: The numbers of whales, including dolphins and porpoises, recorded as stranded around the United Kingdom since 1990 are shown in the table.

The marine mammals stranding project, funded by the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office, includes post mortems to study gross pathology, bacteriology and virology. Results of post mortems have been used to consider contaminant levels and incidences of bycatch in fishing nets.

The project co-ordinators and veterinarians offer advice to local authorities on disposal of carcases according to individual circumstances including the location, the size of carcase, and matters affecting public health and safety.

Numbers of whales (including dolphins and porpoises) stranded and perished around the shores of the United Kingdom since 1990

Departmental Property

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, columns 648–50, if he will provide a breakdown of the total costs of holding common user estate space vacant in 1995–96, to show how much of the cost is due to space vacated by each Government Department. [13742]

Sir Paul Beresford: Vacant space is managed by Property Holdings as an entity. Once space has been surrendered to Property Holdings in accordance with the established rules, the identity of the former occupant or occupants becomes unimportant. In consequence, financial information on vacant space costs does not identify the last occupant. This information is therefore not available.

Water Companies (Delayed Payments)

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the cost to council tax payers of water companies' delaying payment for works undertaken on their behalf by local authorities. [13201]

Sir Paul Beresford: None. Any arrangements between local authorities and water companies are a matter for the individual parties concerned.

Planning (Warminster)

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those (a) organisations and (b) individuals who have made representations to his Department concerning planning application no. W95/0535 at Folly lane, Warminster. [12928]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State has received representations from

(a) MAFF, and

(b) WD Gregory (enclosing petition containing 365 signatures)

Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Burton

Mrs. R. D. Irwin

Mrs. P. M. Robertson

Standard Spending Assessment (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the standard spending assessment in each year since 1990–91 for (i) Buckinghamshire county council, (ii) Aylesbury Vale district council, (iii) Chiltern district council and (iv) Wycombe district council. [13351]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information is given in the table.

Table to show the total SSA for the years 1990–91 to 1996–97 inclusive

	Total SSA local authority

Government Accommodation

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of Government accommodation in (a) the SW1 postal district of London and (b) the remainder of the United Kingdom is currently vacant. [13741]

Sir Paul Beresford: Property Holdings is responsible for the whole of the Government common user (office) estate in which Government Departments and their agencies are housed. At 31 December 1995:

(a) The total area of the CUE offices in SW1 was 856,377 sq metres of which 66,271 sq metres was vacant. (7.7 per cent.)

(b) The total area of the CUE was 7,496,713 sq metres of which 1,017,304 sq metres was vacant (13.6 per cent.) When the SW1 area is excluded from the national figure, the CUE area of the remainder of the United Kingdom reduces to 6,613,336 sq metres of which 951,033 sq metres (14.4 per cent.) was vacant.

Furs

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to implement European Union regulation 3254/91 requiring a ban on the import of furs from animals caught in leghold traps; and if he will make a statement. [13590]

Mr. Clappison: The UK wishes to see leghold traps phased out as quickly as possible, and has strongly supported the EU regulation introduced in 1991 for this purpose. We have expressed our disappointment with the Commission's proposal to postpone the ban on import of furs caught by leghold traps, and have urged it to bring forward stronger measures. However, the 1991 regulation requires the Commission to determine which countries have met the conditions to import furs into the Community. Since this has not been done, and the necessary implementing measures have not been adopted, there is some doubt as to whether member states would be acting lawfully if they attempted to implement a fur import ban on 1 January 1996. In view of this, and the absence of routine controls in intra-Community trade, the Government have reluctantly concluded that it would not be appropriate to implement the ban.

Rough Sleepers, London

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of deaths of rough sleepers during the very cold spell over Christmas and the new year; if he will estimate the number who died from causes directly attributed to the cold weather; and if he will make a statement. [9970]

Mr. Curry [holding answer 22 January 1996]: This information is not held centrally.

Council Houses

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses in the United Kingdom are currently unfit for habitation. [10501]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 23 January 1996]: The 1991 English house condition survey found 307,000—7.7 per cent.—local authority dwellings in England to be unfit under section 604 of the Housing Act 1985, as amended by schedule 9 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. Scotland does not operate a comparable standard of fitness. The figures for Wales and Northern Ireland may be available from the respective Secretaries of State.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Transsexuals)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the guidelines for the treatment of transsexuals in prison; what plans he has to review these; and what is the time scale for the review. [12842]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 5 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about what guidelines there are for the treatment of transsexuals in prison, what plans there are to review them and what is the timescale for any review.

No formal guidelines have been issued to Prison Service establishments on the care, management and treatment of transsexuals in prison. Clinicians have, however, always been able to call on advice from the Prison Service's directorate of health care to assist them in dealing with individual cases.

The general principles underlying such advice were set out in letters to you of 29 June 1994 and 22 May 1995, from the former Director General, copies of which will be placed in the Library of the House.

The directorate of health care does intend to draw up some formal guidelines to assist clinicians in the field, who may have to deal with transsexuals. It does however, have many competing priorities for its resources and I cannot say when the work will be completed.

Young Offenders

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of (a) boys and (b) girls to the age of 18 years who are at present serving prison sentences in England and Wales (i) for murder and (ii) for manslaughter of children. [12851]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 5 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking, what is the number of (a) boys and (b) girls to the age of 18 years who are at present serving prison sentences in England and Wales (i) for murder and (ii) for manslaughter of children.

The latest information is for 30 January 1996 and is given in the attached table.

Population of persons aged under 18 years[1] currently serving prison sentences in England and Wales for murder of children and manslaughter of children, by sex, on 30 January 1996[2]

Offence	Boys	Girls
Murder of children	3	—
Manslaughter of children	—	1
Total	3	1

[1] The age interpretation used is where age is currently under 18, convicted of murder/manslaughter of someone who was also under 18.

[2] Includes those in Prison Service establishments and local authority secure accommodation.

British Citizenship (Hong Kong)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the deadline for applications from Hong Kong residents for British citizenship; and what arrangements govern applications made after that date. [13145]

Mr. Kirkhope: Applications from principal beneficiaries for the governor's recommendation for registration as a British citizen under section 1(1) of the British Nationality (Hong Kong) Act 1990 were to be made before 31 March 1994 or, in the case of an application made in response to an invitation from the governor, before the date specified in the invitation. Applications for recommendation for registration as a British citizen as the spouse or minor child of a principle beneficiary under section 1(4) are to be made before 31 December 1996. Thereafter, the sole avenue to British citizenship for Hong Kong residents who do not already hold that status will be by way of an application for registration or naturalisation under the British Nationality Act 1981. Such applications are not subject to any deadline.

Civil Defence Grant

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in respect of civil defence grant allocations for the financial year 1996–97 for each metropolitan fire and civil defence authority, each metropolitan borough, each London borough, each county council and each unitary authority, the expenditure approved by him for grant aid at a rate of 100 per cent. on (a) emergency planning staff, (b) other employees' expenses, (c) rent, rates and premises service charges, (d) other premises-related expenses, (e) offices expenses, (f) departmental recharges, (g) miscellaneous supplies and services and (h) training and exercising costs and the expenditure on activities eligible for grant aid at a rate of 75 per cent.; and if he will make a statement. [13106]

Mr. Sackville: Civil defence grant is provided to local authorities as a contribution towards their expenses in meeting their civil defence responsibilities. The following table sets out the total approved expenditure for 1996–97 in respect of each fire and civil defence authority, metropolitan district, London borough, county council and unitary authority. I regret that it would be possible to provide a meaningful breakdown of this expenditure for all the authorities in the nine categories requested only at disproportionate cost.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 56, if he will make a statement on the outcome of the cases of Tamil asylum seekers involved in the incident of 13 February 1989. [13095]

Mr. Kirkhope: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave him on 22 January 1996, Official Report, column 56. If he would care to provide further details of the incident he has in mind to enable the cases to be identified, I will arrange for inquiries to be made.

Prison Population

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the projected prison population for England and Wales for (a) 30 June 1996, (b) 30 June 1997, (c) 30 June 1998 and (d) 30 June 1999. [13279]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. George Howarth, dated 5 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question asking for the projected prison population of England and Wales for 1996–99.

The latest long term prison population projections were published in Home Office Statistical Bulletin 4/95 'Projections of the Long Term Trends in the Prison Population to 2002', a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. The next update of the long term projections is due to be published in spring 1996.

Revised short term projections that cover a period of 18 months were produced in October 1995, based on an assessment of current trends. The population is expected to be about 52,700 by June 1996.

Prison Service Costs

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the planned expenditure on the Prison Service for (a) capital and (b) running costs in (i) 1996–97, (ii) 1997–98 and (iii) 1998–99. [13386]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A.J. Pearson to Mr. Jack Straw, dated 5 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the planned expenditure on the Prison Service for the next three years.

The provision agreed in the 1995 Public Expenditure Survey is given below.

The figures shown are for conventional capital funding. We are now exploring the scope for private finance of capital investment.

£ million

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Current	1,404	1,389	1,433
Capital	117	110	112
Total	1,521	1,499	1,545

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give figures for each prison establishment showing (a) the projected current expenditure for 1995–96, (b) the projected current expenditure for 1996–97 and (c) both the percentage and absolute change in each case. [12766]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 30 January 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 5 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about projected current expenditure for each prison establishment.

Private Prisons

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to revise the existing contracts for private prisons in respect of cost reductions in the state sector. [13277]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 5 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the revision of contractual requirements for the contractually-managed prisons in regard to cost reductions in the public sector.

No decision has been taken about whether the services provided by contractually-managed prisons should be changed. However, consideration is being given to whether this can contribute to the Prison Service's cost-reduction strategy for 1996–99.

Resettlement Grants

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have (a) applied for and (b) been granted a resettlement grant to meet their repatriation costs to their country of origin; what has been the average cost of such grants; and how many were to non-United Kingdom citizens. [13735]

Mr. Kirkhope: Resettlement grants are not available under the voluntary repatriation scheme run by the International Social Service of the United Kingdom on behalf of the Home Office. The scheme provides limited financial assistance towards travel and baggage costs. A total of 7,390 applications have been received under the scheme between 1972 and 1995 inclusive, and 2,545 individuals have been assisted financially during that period. The average cost per individual assisted in 1994–95 was £1,200. British citizens are not eligible for assistance.

Ethnic Minority Business Advisory Group

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the ethnic minority business advisory group was established; how many times it met; what were the results of its meetings; and what factors led to its being disbanded. [13100]

Mr. Kirkhope: The first meeting of the ethnic minority business advisory group was held on 8 December 1992. There were four more meetings. It provided a forum in which issues of concern to ethnic minority businesses could be raised with mainstream business support organisations and relevant Government Departments. The transfer of the ethnic minority business initiative grant scheme into the single regeneration budget and the establishment of the Government offices for the regions, which moved the focus of activity from central to regional level, were the principal factors in the disbandment of EMBAG.

Holloway Prison

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the annual expenditure on education at Her Majesty's prison Holloway for each of the past 10 years, the total weekly teaching hours available and the number of teachers in post; and if he will make a statement. [12272]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 31 January 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 5 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about education expenditure at Holloway Prison.

Women Prisoners

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date the Prison Service first issued instructions for the use of restraints on women prisoners attending hospital; and if he will list the dates of subsequent instructions issued. [12420]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 31 January 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 5 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking on what date the Prison Service first issued instructions for the use of restraints on women prisoners attending hospital, and the dates of subsequent instructions.

The policy on the use of restraints on all prisoners in hospital, including women prisoners, is a long standing one. Guidance on the use of restraints under Prison Rule 46 was set out in a variety of circular instructions, standing orders and letters to individual governors. These instructions were issued over many years.

The Security Manual, which codified security instructions was first issued in autumn 1991. A section bringing together instructions on handcuffing, including handcuffing of women prisoner generally and prisoners of either sex in hospital was added in October 1992. Amendments in April 1994 gave further guidance about handcuffing women. In April 1995 an amendment to the manual gave guidance about complying with medical requests when handcuffing women prisoners attending hospital, including for childbirth. In November 1995 a letter was sent to governors which reiterated the policy that women in labour and childbirth should not be restrained.

On 18 January, the Home Secretary Announced a revised policy to the House. This took into account the meeting I had with representatives of the Royal College of Midwives on 15 January. Instructions reflecting the new arrangements were sent to governors on 19 January.

Release of Offenders

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on informing police authorities of the release of offenders convicted of manslaughter and murder. [13004]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 1 February 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Ms Ann Coffey, dated 5 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General, to reply to your recent Question about the policy on informing police authorities of the release of offenders convicted of manslaughter and murder.

The current procedure for informing the police of the final discharge of all prisoners on completion of sentence is that on or about 28 days before discharge, the establishment where the prisoner is serving completes a Form 99. This form is then sent to the National Identification Service (formerly National Identification Bureau) at New Scotland Yard.

The form gives all personal details of the prisoner, including, if known, his CRS number. Details of the present conviction, offence, committing courts and sentence are also included as is the discharge address, if known.

The relevant instructions to establishments to carry out this procedure are contained in Prison Service Standing Order 11 (Discharge of Prisoners), paragraph 11 and Prison Service Circular Instruction 40/1992, paragraph 8.

Under the arrangements introduced in April 1995 governing the release on temporary licence of prisoners, the Prison Service must notify the police about such releases in cases where the post trial report prepared by the police indicates that notification is required. Post trial reports are completed on any offender serving a custodial sentence (of any length) involving sex, violence or drugs and in respect of any prisoner serving a custodial sentence of 12 months or more.

The notice of temporary release is faxed to the Force Intelligence Bureau (FIB) of the police service in whose area the prison is located, at least 5 working days before the temporary release is due to take place. The force FIB will then relay the information either to the police service which originally dealt with the offences and/or the police service to which the prisoner will be going on temporary release.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the (a) mean, and (b) median income for (i) single male pensioners who are aged (1) 65 to 69, (2) 70 to 74, (3) 75 to 79 and (4) 80 years and over, (ii) single female pensioners in groups 1 to 4, (iii) pensioner couples who are in groups 1 to 4, (iv) all pensioners who are (5) aged 60/65 years to 74 years and (6) aged 75 years and over and (v) all pensioners. [12155]

Mr. Heald: The available information is in the tables:

Notes:

1. Income figures are gross income before housing costs.

2. A pensioner unit is defined as a single person over State Pension Age (SPA) or a couple where the husband, or head, is over SPA.

3. Due to insufficient sample sizes reliable estimates of further age breakdowns for single male pensioners are not available at Table 1.

Child Rearing Costs

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 23 January, Official Report, column 213, if he will list the specific evidence evaluated by his Department which supported his conclusion concerning the relative costs of bringing up children by lone parents and by couples. [13398]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 30 January, Official Report, columns 745-46.

There is a wide range of research on the costs of a child. There is no consistent evidence of a difference in these costs for lone parents and couples, other than a potentially greater need for child care for working lone parents.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the locations which provide the temperature information upon which decisions on severe weather payments are based. [13300]

Mr. Roger Evans: All weather stations and the areas they cover are listed in the schedules to the Social Fund Cold Weather Payments Regulations, a copy of which is in the Library. The weather station at Whithorn, which is listed in the regulations, has closed. The weather station at Dumfries has been used to cover the postcode areas specified for Whithorn.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of staff employed by his Department or related agencies in each of the travel-to-work areas of Carmarthen, South Pembrokeshire, Haverfordwest, Fishguard and Cardigan on (a) 31 March 1979, (b) 31 March 1990, (c) 31 March 1992, (d) 31 March 1995, (e) the latest available figure and (f) the estimate for 31 March 1997. [13293]

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the class 1A national insurance contributions collected though (a) the Contributions Agency and (b) the Inland Revenue for (i) 1993–94 and (ii) 1994–95. [13744]

Mr. Heald: The information requested is in the table.

£ million

	Estimated total of class 1A collection	Actual contributions agency (APM) collection	Estimated inland revenue portion
1993–94	419	246	173

1. Figures shown for Contributions Agency class 1A collection via the alternative payment method—APM—for both financial years are actual collection totals.

2. Figures shown for total class 1A collection and the Inland Revenue portion are based on provisional estimates provided by the Government Actuary's Department and are subject to change.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library the report undertaken by the Contributions Agency of a random sample of employers to provide information on error rates in the collection of national insurance mentioned in the report of the Comptroller and Auditor General on the national insurance fund 1993–94. [13746]

Mr. Heald: The report, referred to in the 1993–94 report of the Comptroller and Auditor General on the national insurance fund report, was produced by the Department's analytical services division in August 1994. I have today arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Upper Waiting Hall Exhibitions

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to timeshare to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall. [13376]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 18 March to Friday 22 March 1996.

Lobby Journalists

Mr. Parry: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has to require lobby journalists to declare their salaries, employers' pension contributions, allowances and other forms of income as a condition of their retaining lobby passes. [13701]

Mr. Newton: I have no such plans.

WALES

Public Transport

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives his Department is pursuing to encourage the use of public transport in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [10705]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: County councils have been given powers to promote the use of public transport in their areas. Grant assistance is available to them from the Welsh Office in the form of transport grant for major projects; revenue support grant and non-domestic rate income; and grants for public transport operators in the rural areas under the rural transport innovation scheme. Other support can be given under the strategic development scheme and the bus priority scheme, the most recent examples of which I announced on 4 January. They include:

£6.8 million over three years to help Rhondda Cynon Taff and Cardiff councils to improve rail links between the valleys and Cardiff;

£1.3 million to complete rail signalling between Pontypridd and Taffs Well;

£150,000 for a traffic signalling project to improve bus journey times between Pontypridd and Caerphilly; and £52,000 for a bus-only route at Swansea.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each unitary authority area and for Wales as a whole in 1996 prices the estimated revenue cost of local government reorganisation for 1996–97; and if he will make a statement. [12429]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the costs of reorganisation to each local authority is not held centrally.

My right hon. Friend will provide supplementary credit approvals totalling £41,394,000 to unitary authorities for 1996–97 to cover a proportion of councils' expenditure on compensation, accommodation and information technology.

The figures for accommodation and information technology are broken down as follows:

Council	Information technology £	Accommodation £
Aberconwy and Colwyn	348,219	600,000
Anglesey	338,546	1,000,000
Blaenau Gwent	562,180	217,000

Wrexham	424,512	1,440,000
The Vale of Glamorgan	668,710	—
Total	11,764,250	6,271,750

No such breakdown is available for compensation costs in 1996–97. SCAs will be authorised upon receipt of audited claims for actual expenditure, up to a limit of £23,538,000.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales under what terms and conditions additional resources will be made available to local authorities in Wales for the year 1996–97; and under what criteria these resources will be distributed. [12885]

Mr. Hague: I refer to the answer which I gave to the right hon. Member for Conwy (Sir W. Roberts) on 30 January, Official Report, columns 682-83.

Agricultural Marketing and Processing

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the amount of aid for agricultural marketing and processing by each county and for Wales as a whole for each of the last three years. [12813]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The amount of aid offered for agricultural marketing and processing schemes is as follows:

County	1993–94 £	1994–95 £	[1]1995–96 £
Clwyd	255,000	73,033	74,250

[1] Up to 31 December 1995.

These figures represent the offers which the Welsh Office made to companies in these years. There is a slight time lag between offers being made and expenditure being incurred.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of staff employed by his Department or related agencies in each of the travel-to-work areas of Carmarthern, South Pembrokeshire, Haverfordwest, Fishguard and Cardigan on (a) 31 March 1979, (b) 31 March 1990, (c) 31 March 1992, (d) 31 March 1995, (e) the latest available figures and (f) the estimate for 31 March 1997. [13297]

Mr. Hague: The information is as follows:

[2] Excludes temporary staff—(ie, staff employed for less than three months).

Welsh Joint Education Committee

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what accreditation role he has with respect to the setting of standards by, and response to, requests for (a) remarkings and (b) independent review of the Welsh Joint Education Committee. [13740]

Mr. Hague: Requests for remarking are matters for consideration by individual examination boards. Individual appeals relating to GCSE, A and AS-level examinations can, with the support of the examination centre concerned, be made to the Independent Appeals Authority for School Examinations. These arrangements apply to the Welsh Joint Education Committee, as they do to other GCSE, A and AS-level examination boards.

Training for Work Programmes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, columns 820–22 if he will give comparable figures for non-vocational qualifications levels for those undertaking training for work for (a) 1993 and (b) 1994. [13760]

Mr. Hague: The information requested is contained in the following table. The figures quoted are for complete financial years—that is April to March—whereas the figures quoted in my answer of 31 January were for the period 27 March 1995 to 3 December 1995, the latest then available. Finalised figures for 1995–96 will be available in September 1996.

Conservation Schemes

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the annual expenditure figures and forecasts for the (a) countryside access scheme, (b) environmentally sensitive areas, (c) farm conservation grant scheme, (d) farm woodland premium scheme, (e) habitat scheme, (f) nitrate sensitive areas, (g) moorland scheme, (h) organic aid scheme and (i) countryside stewardship for each year between 1990–91 and 1997–98. [13633]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is set out in the following table.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 17 January 1996 to the hon. Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Sweeney), Official Report, columns 624-25, (1) if he will set out the rights of those farmers not wishing to sell or lease their land to the Land Authority for Wales as compensatory feeding grounds for those lost behind the Cardiff bay barrage; [11906]

(2) if he will name each of the farms in the proposed compensation area east of the River Usk for the loss of inter-tidal feeding grounds at Cardiff bay; and whether they (a) have been bought by voluntary means, (b) are under negotiation for voluntary purchase, (c) are under negotiation for management agreement of (d) are expected to be bought by compulsory order; [11907]

(3) what estimate he has made of the length of time required to complete the arrangements for the setting up of the bird reserve east of the River Usk to compensate for the loss of feeding grounds at Cardiff bay on the basis of (a) voluntary purchase of the requisite farm, (b) management agreements with land owners and (c) compulsory purchase; and if he will make a statement. [11904]

Mr. Hague [holding answer Thursday 25 January]: These are operational matters for the Cardiff Bay development corporation. The chief executive has replied and a copy of his letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Access Centres

30. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received relating to access centres for children of separated parents; what was his response; and if he will make a statement. [11788]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have recently received an enquiry about the funding of access and child contact centres in connection with the Government's proposals for reform of divorce law and the legal aid system. Under the Government's proposals, services providing mediation in disputes relating to family matters may become eligible to receive funding through the legal aid system. If centres consider that they provide such services, it may become open to them to apply for such funding.

Contact centres play a valuable role in facilitating contact with children following family breakdown, and can provide a variety of services. There are at present a range of local family centres, some of which are run by charitable organisations, which receive funding from the voluntary sector and from local authorities.

Legal Aid

35. Mr. Merchant: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much was spent on state-funded legal aid in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other European Union member states in the last year for which figures are available. [11793]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Excluding administration costs, in 1994–95 the net cost of legal aid in the United Kingdom was £1.4 billion. It is not possible to make direct comparisons with other EU member states since the legal systems are different and the coverage and nature of their legal aid schemes vary considerably.

36. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost of legal aid received by asylum seekers in the last financial year for which figures are available. [11794]

Mr. Evans: No separate figures are kept for the legal aid costs attributable to asylum matters alone. In 1994–95, total legal aid expenditure for advice and assistance on immigration and nationality cases was less than £14.6 million, representing just over 1 per cent. of the total cost of legal aid.

37. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has recently received about legal aid. [11796]

Mr. Evans: I have received many representations about the legal aid scheme.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to broaden the eligibility rules for legal aid; and if he will make a statement. [11795]

Mr. Evans: The Lord Chancellor published a Green Paper setting out proposals for the reform of legal aid in May 1995. Both financial eligibility and merits assessment are being examined as part of this process. The Lord Chancellor intends to make an announcement on the future of the Green Paper proposals in the spring.

Census Returns

38. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what arrangements he is making for continued public access to the census returns following the closure of the Public Record Office, Chancery Lane. [11797]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Following the closure of the Public Record Office, Chancery lane, public access to the census returns now consulted there will be continued at another central London site, for which negotiations are proceeding.

Divorce

39. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what recent representations he has received on the question of fault in divorce law reform. [11798]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have received a large number of representations relating to the question of divorce law reform. The records kept do not specify how many of these raised the issue of fault.

40. Mr. Sims: To ask the parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to make additional funding available for mediation services. [11799]

Mr. Evans: The Government have no plans to make additional funding directly available to mediation services. However, under the proposals set out in the Family Law Bill, it is intended that legal aid will be made available for mediation to eligible parties in appropriate cases.

Mrs. Elaine Steele

41. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what sums of legal aid were expended in the case of Elaine Steele of Workington. [11800]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Legal aid payments to counsel and solicitors for the criminal proceedings with which Mrs. Steele was faced totalled £31,436.09. In a civil case for which Mrs. Steele was granted legal aid, a final bill has not been received, and the legal aid costs have not yet been assessed.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the number of staff employed by his Department or related agencies in each of the travel-to-work areas of Carmarthen, south Pembrokeshire, Haverfordwest, Fishguard and Cardigan on (a) 31 March 1979, (b) 31 March 1990, (c) 31 March 1992, (d) 31 March 1995, (e) the latest available figure and (f) the estimate for 31 March 1997. [13296]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested for 31 March 1979 and 31 March 1990 is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. For the periods 31 March 1992 and 31 March 1995 no staff were employed in the Lord Chancellor's Department or related agencies in south Pembrokeshire, Fishguard or Cardigan. For Carmarthen and Haverfordwest the information is set out in the table.

The remaining parts of the question relate to information on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Heubner to Mr. Nick Ainger, dated 5 February 1996:

NUMBER OF STAFF EMPLOYED IN TRAVEL-TO-WORK AREAS OF CARMARTHEN, SOUTH PEMBROKESHIRE, HAVERFORD WEST, FISHGUARD AND CARDIGAN

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of staff employed in these areas.

The Court Service does not hold information about staff employed in travel-to-work areas, and it could be collated only at a disproportionate cost. However, at present there are no Court Service staff employed in Fishguard, South Pembrokeshire or Cardigan and there are no plans for staff to be employed in these areas in the future. There are 24 members of Court Service staff, 21 full time and 2 part-time, employed in Haverfordwest and Carmarthen and it is estimated that 22 full time members of staff will be employed in these areas on 31 March 1997.

Probate Offices

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many interviews took place at each probate office in England and Wales in each year from 1990 to 1995; and if he will make a statement. [13494]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Heubner to Mr. David Lidington, dated 5 February 1996:

NUMBER OF PROBATE OFFICE INTERVIEWS 1990–1995

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to the above Question about the number of Probate Office interviews in the years 1990–95.

I attach a schedule which details this information. As the table accompanying this letter is too long to be printed in the Official Report, arrangements will be made for a copy to be deposited in the Library of the House.

Probate Offices

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the probate offices which the court service plans to close; and if he will make a statement. [13495]

Mr. Evans: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. David Lidington, dated 5 February 1996

PROPOSED CLOSURE OF PROBATE OFFICES

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question about Probate Offices.

The recommendation that a number of Probate Offices should close follows a review of the locations in England and Wales where a probate service is provided to personal applicants. A public consultation about these proposals began on 23 January 1996 and will conclude on 1 March 1996. Full consideration will be given to all comments received during the public consultation before the Lord Chancellor decides whether to proceed with these proposals.

The Probate Offices recommended for closure are:

Coventry
Kidderminister
Wolverhampton
Lichfield
Crewe

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has for probate registries and probate offices to open to the public on Saturdays. [13496]

Mr. Evans: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. David Lidington, dated 5 February 1996:

PLANS FOR PROBATE REGISTRIES AND PROBATE OFFICES TO OPEN ON SATURDAYS

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question about probate registries and offices.

There are no plans to open any Court Service offices, including Probate Registries and Probate Offices, to the public on Saturdays.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Access to Work

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many of those successfully applying for access to work over the past year were employed when applying; and how many were unemployed. [13135]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. David Blunkett, dated 5 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the numbers of employed and unemployed people successfully applying for Access to Work.

During the period January to December 1995 there were 9,393 new Access to Work beneficiaries. Of these 7,566 were employed and 1,827 were unemployed. For these purposes we count as "unemployed" those who did not have a job when they applied for Access to Work, and newly employed people who had gained that employment with help from Access to Work.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of access to work funding was given to those who (a) were employed when the applied for assistance and (b) were previously unemployed. [13134]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. David Blunkett, dated 5 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the proportion of Access to Work funding given to those who were (a) employed and (b) unemployed when they applied for assistance.

The Employment Service does not collect information about the proportion of funding given to employed and unemployed applicants. However, during the period January to December 1995, 81 per cent. of new Access to work beneficiaries were employed and 19 per cent. were unemployed. For these purposes we count as "unemployed" those who did not have a job when they applied for Access to Work, and newly employed people who had gained that employment with help from Access to Work.

I hope this is helpful.

Workstart

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what evaluation studies were carried out by her Department into the success of the workstart pilots; and if she will place copies in the Library. [13408]

Mr. Forth: I plan to publish the evaluation report on the current pilots, located in the west midlands and the north-west, at the end of this year. The evaluation reports of the initial pilots were published on 12 December 1994 and copies are available from the Library.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will update the estimates given in the Department of Employment press release of 6 April 1995 on (a) the effect on public revenues of the workstart pilots and (b) the estimated numbers who will benefit from the scheme in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 and (iv) 1998–99. [13410]

Mr. Forth: The two workstart pilots which began in April 1995 will continue to help long-term unemployed people into jobs until the end of March 1996. By then, it is estimated that those pilots will have helped some 800 people at an estimated final cost of £1.02 million.

Jobfinder Grant Scheme

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will update the estimates given by the Department of Employment press release of 29 November 1994 on (a) the effect on public revenues of the jobfinder grant scheme and pilots and (b) the estimated numbers who will benefit from the scheme in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 and (iv) 1998–99. [13407]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Chris Smith, dated 5 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question which seeks an update on the estimated effect on public revenues and the number of people who will benefit from the Jobfinder's Grant in each of the following years 1995–96, 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99.

The table below sets out the expenditure and number of opportunities for this programme.

Expenditure £ million	3.0	5.0	5.0	5.0
Opportunities	13,000	25,000	25,000	25,000

[2] Plan.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what evaluation studies were carried out by her Department into the success rate of the jobfinder grant pilots; and if she will place copies in the Library. [13406]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fodgen to Mr. Chris Smith, dated 5 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the Jobfinder Grant pilots.

The following evaluation study has been carried out into the success of the Jobfinder Grant pilots:

Evaluation of the Jobfinders' Grant
Demonstration Pilot Project
by Joanne Moore, Peter Dickinson
The Research Partnership
September 1995

This report will be lodged in the House of Commons Library. It is currently available from the Research and Evaluation Division, Employment Service, Rockingham House, 123, West Street, Sheffield.

I hope this is helpful.

Jobmatch Scheme

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment is she will update the estimates given in the Department of Employment press release of 29 March 1995 on (a) the effect on public revenues of the jobmatch pilots and (b) the estimated numbers who will benefit from the scheme, giving figures for (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 and (iv) 1998–99. [13405]

Mr. Forth: The jobmatch programme started in April 1995 and is a three-year pilot. The total budget for 1995–96 is £5 million, and will benefit an estimated 3,000 people. The programme budget in 1996–97 will be £4.359 million, and for 1997–98, £4.354 million. In each of these years, jobmatch should continue to benefit an estimated 3,000 people.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what evaluation studies were carried out by her Department into the success of the jobmatch pilots; and if she will place copies in the Library. [13404]

Mr. Forth: "A Qualitative Study of Jobmatch", which sought to provide early feedback on the progress and operation of the pilots has been carried out. Copies of this report will be placed in the Library in March. Further evaluation of jobmatch is currently being conducted.

Class Sizes (Greater Manchester)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children in primary schools in the Greater Manchester area were educated in class sizes of 40 and above in 1994–95; and what proportion this figure represents of all primary children educated in classes of this size in the United Kingdom. [13165]

Mr. Robin Squire: In January 1995, 1,595 pupils were being taught in single-teacher classes of 40 or more pupils in maintained primary schools in Greater Manchester area. This represented 9 per cent. of pupils in single-teacher classes of 40 or more in maintained primary schools in England.

Information about schools in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland respectively.

Student Debts

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate she has made of the average debt of students on completion of their studies in (a) 1992, (b) 1993, (c) 1994 and (d) 1995. [13166]

Mr. Forth: Information on total student indebtedness is not collected centrally. I have asked the chief executive of the Student Loans Company to write to the hon. Member providing the approximate average debt to the Student Loans Company of borrowers entering repayment status on 1 April of each of the years listed.

Work Trials

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what evaluation studies were carried out by her Department into the success of work trials; and if she will place copies in the Library. [13413]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Chris Smith, dated 5 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the evaluation of work trials.

The following evaluation reports have been published by the Employment Service into the success of work trials:

CEI Consultants Ltd (1990), Evaluation of Work Trials, volumes 1 and 2, July, CEI.

DVL Smith Business Research (1993), Evaluation of Work Trials—Employer Survey, November, DVL Smith.

These reports are available from the House of Commons Library.

I hope this is helpful.

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what evaluation studies were carried out by her Department into the success of the job interview guarantee scheme; and if she will place copies in the Library. [13411]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Chris Smith, dated 5 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the Evaluation of the Job Interview Guarantee Scheme.

The following evaluation studies have been carried out into the success of the Job Interview Guarantee Scheme:

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme:
Analysis of monitoring information
By Kay Pattinson
RED Report No. 58 November 1990

Job Interview Guarantee Evaluation:
Report on a survey of JIG participants
British Market Research Bureau Limited
May 1992

Job Interview Guarantee Evaluation:
Report on survey of JIG employers
British Market Research Bureau Limited
May 1992

These reports are available from the House of Commons Library.

I hope this is helpful.

Work Scheme Costs

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if she will update the estimates given in Cm. 2805 on (a) the effect on public revenues of work trials and (b) the estimated numbers who will benefit from the scheme in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 and (iv) 1998–99. [13414]

(2) if she will update the estimates given in Cm. 2805 on (a) the effect on public revenues of the job interview guarantee scheme and (b) the estimated numbers who will benefit from the scheme in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 and (iv) 1998–99. [13412]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Chris Smith, dated 5 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about updating the estimates given in Cm. 2805 (the Departmental Report) for the effect on public revenues and the estimated number of people who will benefit from Work Trials and Job Interview Guarantee (JIG) Scheme in each of the following years 1995–96, 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99.

The tables below set out both expenditure and the number of opportunities for each of the programmes in a similar format to the 1995 Departmental Report to allow comparisons to be made.

Work Trials

	[1]1995–96	[2]1996–97	[2]1997–98	[2]1998–99
Expenditure £ million[3]	1.8	2.4	2.4	2.4
Opportunities	30,000	40,000	40,000	40,000

[2] Plan.
[3] This expenditure only represents the programme expenditure for Work Trials which is used for paying participants travel and other expenses. Work Trials is also supported by administrative running costs for ES people.

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme

	[1]1995–96	[2]1996–97	[2]1997–98	[2]1998–99
Expenditure (£ million)[3]	0.9	1.3	1.3	1.3
Opportunities	300,000	300,000	300,000	300,000

[2] Plan.
[3] Programme expenditure is used to fund Job Preparation Courses. Running Cost expenditure for the other elements of JIG are not included in this table.

Education SSA (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the education standing spending assessment for Buckinghamshire county council for each year since 1990–91; and if she will make a statement. [13350]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is set out in the list. The figures are in cash terms and therefore unadjusted for local education authorities' loss of responsibility for certain functions, notably most further education 1993–94, and for the reform of inter-authority recoupment in 1995–96.

1990–91 £206.348 million

1991–92 £241.804 million

1992–93 £259.972 million

1993–94 £242.179 million

1994–95 £249.922 million

1995–96 £244.491 million

1996–97 £252.855 million

Universities

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many vice-chancellors have been sent a formal invitation to meet her to discuss (a) their institutions and (b) the university sector. [13347]

Mr. Forth: It is not generally my right hon. Friend's practice to send individual vice-chancellors formal invitations to meet her. She does meet them and visit universities from time to time at their invitation and she has regular contact with their representative bodies. She wrote to the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals on 1 February inviting them to meet her shortly.

Older Workers

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the evaluation of the Government's policy to promote the skills of the over-45's in the workplace will (a) be completed and (b) be published. [13261]

Mr. Forth: The evaluation of the Department's campaign for older workers, which includes a survey of employers' policies, practices and attitudes towards older workers, will be (a) completed by the end of April and (b) published during September 1996.

Information Technology (Consultation)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has for consulting the teaching profession before the moratorium on curriculum changes ends on the effect which the increasing use of information technology, both in school and in the home, will have on the national curriculum and assessment methods. [13558]

Mr. Robin Squire: None. There was widespread consultation about technology during Sir Ron Dearing's review of the national curriculum. One outcome was that information technology became a national curriculum subject on its own; this was generally welcomed. The School Curriculum and Assessment Authority has a programme for monitoring the implementation of the revised national curriculum subject orders, including IT, during the moratorium period. It will consider, in the light of evidence received as part of this monitoring programme, whether there is a need for further review when the moratorium expires.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the number of staff employed by his Department or related agencies in each of the travel-to-work areas of Carmarthen, South Pembrokeshire, Haverfordwest, Fishguard and Cardigan on (a) 31 March 1979, (b) 31 March 1990, (c) 31 March 1992, (d) 31 March 1995, (e) the latest available figure and (f) the estimate for 31 March 1997. [13294]

Mr. Robin Squire: The only part of the Department with staff in these areas is the Employment Service, for which this information is not available either in the form requested or before 1994. Full-time equivalent ES staff numbers of 14 April 1995, the nearest available to 31 March 1995, and for 12 January 1996, are shown in the following table. The estimate for March 1997 is not yet available.

	12 January 1996	14 April 1995
Cardigan[1]	17	19
Carmarthen	20	19
Haverfordwest[2]	27	29
Milford Haven	17	17
Pembroke Dock[3]	27	28
Total	108	112

[1] Cardigan includes Llandysul ES jobcentre.

[2] Haverfordwest includes Fishguard ES jobcentre.

[3] Pembroke Dock includes Tenby ES jobcentre.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Concessionary Fares Scheme

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are currently issued with travel passes under the concessionary fares scheme in Northern Ireland, broken down by category. [12695]

Mr. Moss: This information is not currently available, but has been collected since July 1995 in respect of new passes issued.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had, and with which bodies, over the possibility of making travel passes issued under the concessionary fares scheme in Northern Ireland valid in the Republic of Ireland and vice versa. [12696]

Mr. Moss: There have been no discussions on this issue at ministerial level. However, officials were involved in discussions with the Department of Social Welfare in the Republic of Ireland about the establishment of the Republic's free cross-border travel scheme for senior citizens, which came into effect on 1 July 1995. That scheme entitles concessionary pass holders in either Northern Ireland or the Republic to travel free on a journey from any point within one jurisdiction to any point within the other.

Fishing Industry (Portavogie)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the impact of the weather conditions in the past two months on the fishing industry in Portavogie; what proposals he has for severe weather compensation for the fishing fleet; and if he will make a statement. [12515]

Mr. Ancram: In November and December the total value of fish landed in Portavogie was lower than in recent past years, which is partly due to the reductions of vessels based at Portavogie of which 30 have been decommissioned since the UK introduced decommissioning schemes in 1993. However, the total value of landings in 1995 is only marginally less than that in 1993 and is in keeping with an overall general decline in the value of landings at Portavogie. There are no plans to give severe weather compensation. The vagaries of the weather is one of the several factors which fishermen have to take into account in the evaluation of their operations on a longer-term basis.

Arms Decommissioning

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what have been the costs of the Mitchell decommissioning body; what public money the Government paid towards those costs; and what arrangements have been made with the Eire Government for sharing those costs and in what proportions. [12823]

Sir John Wheeler: The cost of providing office accommodation, equipment and furnishings in Belfast and Dublin for the international body on decommissioning is being met by the British and Irish Governments separately; all other costs are being met jointly and equally by the two Governments. It is not yet possible to give details of the costs; but as soon as they are available I shall write to the hon. and learned Gentleman.

Cultural Traditions Group

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will require the Cultural Traditions Group to include the word "Fowkgates" in its logo. [12824]

Mr. Ancram: No. I am aware that the Cultural Traditions Group is keen to give greater expression to the Scottish strand in Northern Ireland's cultural heritage and I will give it every encouragement in this respect.

Firearm Certificates

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the adult male population in Northern Ireland holds a firearm certificate. [12845]

Sir John Wheeler: At 30 November 1995, 88,092 persons held firearm certificates issued under the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. A male/female breakdown of this figure could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, it represents approximately 15.65 per cent. of the adult population[1] of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he has taken, or proposes to take, to reduce the number of people who hold a firearm certificate. [12847]

Sir John Wheeler: The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has not taken, nor is he proposing to take at this time, any measures specifically aimed at reducing the number of people who would otherwise be permitted to hold firearm certificates. The current review of the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 aims to ensure that the law strikes the right balance between individual and public safety and the maintenance of order, and reasonable expectations of those who wish to use firearms in a responsible and legitimate manner.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many holders of firearm certificates have used their weapons in incidents which led to their facing criminal charges in the past five years. [12848]

Sir John Wheeler: This information is not available in the form requested and to obtain it would incur disproportionate cost. However, the Chief Constable has advised that the number of incidents in which licensed firearm holders have used their own guns in the commission of a crime, within the past five years, is negligible.

Planning (Donaghadee)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what factors led to the woodlands known as "The Walks" at Moat street, Donaghadee being white zoned; and if he will review that decision. [12826]

Mr. Moss: The woodlands, which are within the development limits of Donaghadee, are not zoned for a specific use but are referred to as "white land" in the North Down and Ards area plan 1984 to 1995. The Department proposes to commence preparation of a new plan for the Ards borough council area later this year, which will involve the review of existing land use zonings, development limits and planning policies.

Employment

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the change in the number of people annually who will (a) not get action for community employment in North Down and (b) not obtain alternative employment as a result of proposed budget reductions. [12829]

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Mr. Robert McCartney, dated 5 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency to reply to your questions about the Action for Community Employment (ACE) programme.

(a) The Agency estimates that in North Down there will be 74 fewer places available for ACE workers in 1996/97 than were available in 1995/96;

(b) This is impossible to judge precisely. However, the performance of the Northern Ireland economy provides good cause for optimism. Unemployment is at its lowest level for 14 years and employment at record levels. Job vacancies being notified by employers to the Training and Employment Agency's local offices are at record levels—currently standing at 7,500. The opportunities for jobseekers to find work are better now than they have been for some considerable time.

I hope that you find this reply useful. I will of course be pleased to provide further information if you would find it helpful.

Family Credit

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average hourly wage earned by family heads in receipt of family credit in (a) Northern Ireland, (b) England, (c) Scotland and (d) Wales. [12545]

Mr. Moss: The average hourly wage earned by family heads in receipt of family credit in Northern Ireland, England and Scotland and Wales at 31 January 1995, the latest date for which comparable data are available, are shown in the table.

Average hourly wage earned by family heads in receipt of Family Credit[1]

Child Support Agency

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the operation in Northern Ireland of the review procedure of the Child Support Agency. [12546]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Child Support Agency under its chief executive, Patrick Devlin. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from P. Devlin to Rev. William McCrea, dated 5 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your question about the operation in Northern Ireland of the review procedure of the Child Support Agency.

The procedures used by the Agency in reviewing child maintenance assessments are governed by the provisions of the Child Support (NI) Order 1991; the Child Support (Maintenance Assessment Procedure) Regulations (NI) 1992 and the Child Support (NI) Order 1995.

Where either parent is not satisfied with a decision of a Child Support Officer he or she may ask for it to be reviewed. The case is then reconsidered by a different Child Support Officer who may refuse to review the decision; or may review and confirm or review and revise the assessment.

If either party remains aggrieved by the decision of a Child Support Officer in respect of a review or a refusal to refuse an assessment, he or she may appeal to a Child Support Appeal Tribunal.

During the period 6 April 1995 to 18 January 1996 the Agency reviewed 2273 maintenance assessments. In the same period the Agency referred 78 appeals to the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS).

I hope you find this information useful.

Child Rearing Costs

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the current costs of bringing up children to (a) lone parents and (b) couples. [12547]

Mr. Moss: Where a lone parent is in employment there is a potentially greater need to pay for child care. Apart from this, there is no consistent evidence that the financial requirements of a lone-parent household in bringing up a child are different from those of a two-parent household.

Suicides

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many suicides there have been in the Province in each of the last 10 years. [12548]

Sir John Wheeler: The number of deaths registered as suicides in the Province in each of the last 10 years is set out in the list. Deaths are recorded according to date of registration and not by date of occurrence.

Social Security (Fraud)

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many fraud investigation officers were employed in social security offices in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years; [12549]

(2) what priority has been given to tackling fraud in the social service reforms. [12550]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a response to be given.

Letter from Alec Wylie to Rev. William McCrea, dated 1 February 1996:

I have been asked to reply to your recent questions on fraud investigation officers and social security fraud.

You asked for information on the number of fraud investigation officers employed in social security offices in each of the last 10 years. I'm sorry that records are only available from the 1988/89 financial year and I have set these out in the attached table. I should explain that wile these officers cover social security office areas they are managed centrally by the Agency's Fraud and Prosecutions Unit in a regional office structure and not by SSO management.

You also wished to know the level of priority given to tackling fraud in social security benefits. I would wish to assure your that providing safeguards against fraud and abuse in the social security system has been and continues to be one of the Agency's top priorities. This stems from the main aims and objectives set out in the Agency's Framework Document and annual Business plans and through my responsibilities as an Accounting Officer. Each year the Agency is set targets for benefit savings from anti-fraud work and these have increased from £7.84m in 1991/92 to £14m for 1995/96. Despite the difficult security conditions in which our investigation officers have had to operate, the Agency has met all its fraud savings targets up to the end of 1994/95 and has saved some £44m in total.

Recently, responsibility for formulating the policy for social security fraud has been transferred from the Department to the Agency and at the beginning of January this year the Department issued a corporate statement on fraud to all its business areas. The statement contains a set of principles which include the duty to ensure that steps are taken to prevent, deter and detect fraud and, where appropriate, to prosecute offenders. The Agency is in the process of developing a new security strategy for social security benefits which will shift the focus of fraud work from detection and investigation to prevention of offences before they occur. An important element of the new anti-fraud strategy is the introduction of a benefit payment card which will provide a much more secure payment system as well as more efficient accounting arrangements.

Finally, the Social Security Agency will continue to review its operational procedures, savings targets and objectives to ensure that they meet our main aim that only the right amount of benefit is paid to the right person.

I hope this explains the position for you but I would be happy to provide you with any further information you may require.

School Curriculum

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the quality and diversity of the curriculum in school education. [12551]

Mr. Ancram: For pupils aged four to 16, the Northern Ireland curriculum provides a broad range of subjects offering high-quality programmes of study and ensuring a curriculum of appropriate breadth, balance and depth. The requirements for all compulsory subjects—apart from the statutory core syllabus for religious education, the content of which has not been reviewed—have recently been reduced to give teachers and pupils at all ages more flexibility to study subjects and topics in which they are interested beyond the requirements. The revised programmes will come into effect from September 1996, and I am confident that teachers will welcome them.

For pupils aged 16 to 19 in schools, there is no compulsory curriculum beyond religious education; each school with a sixth form offers a range of subjects according to its own strengths and students' needs. The Dearing review will be reporting within the next few months on ways to strengthen, consolidate and improve the national framework of qualifications for young people aged 16-plus which of course also applies in Northern Ireland.

Stormont Parliament Building

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress made in restoring the Chamber at Stormont and other parts of the Parliament building damaged or destroyed by fire. [12919]

Mr. Moss: The first priority, after the weatherproofing and salvage had been carried out, was to ensure that the Chamber was structurally sound. This was achieved by demolishing unstable masonry and repairing damaged roof structural steelwork. This was completed in October 1995. The condition of the structure continues to be monitored to establish when conditions have stabilised sufficiently to allow the commencement of the interior fit out of the Chamber. Work is well under way to restore those other areas of the building damaged by the fire and to refurbish the remainder of the building. The contract should be completed by spring 1997.

Suckled Calves (Prices)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the price paid for suckled calves in the main Northern Ireland markets in actual and in real terms over each of the last 25 years or for as long a period as is readily available to him. [13447]

Mr. Ancram: Estimates of prices paid for suckled calves in a sample of the main markets in Northern Ireland in each of the last 25 years are given in the table, in current prices and in real terms.

Potatoes

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to ensure that diseased potatoes from elsewhere in the European Community are not imported into Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [13448]

Mr. Ancram: Council directive 77/93/EEC, implemented in Northern Ireland by the Plant Health Order (Northern Ireland) 1993, sets out the plant health requirements which have to be met before potatoes can be moved into Northern Ireland.

Commission directive 93/17/EEC, implemented in Northern Ireland by the Seed Potatoes (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1994, provides a series of measures which set high-quality standards for seed potatoes being imported into Northern Ireland.

More recently, as a result of outbreaks of the potato disease brown rot in the Netherlands, the EU has laid down requirements to be met by the Dutch authorities to prevent the spread of the disease, Commission decision 95/506/EC. The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland used enabling powers provided by this Commission decision to require the pre-notification of all Dutch potatoes being imported into Northern Ireland. Should any Dutch potatoes be imported they will be subject to detention, inspection and testing.

Mr. Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report the tonnage of seed potatoes exported from Northern Ireland to (a) Great Britain and (b) elsewhere from the (i) 1994 crop, (ii) 1995 crop, or his estimate of the 1995 crop, (iii) 1985 crop and (iv) the 1975 crop. SCOTLAND

Positive about Disabled People Symbol

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for his Department and each of the agencies for which he is responsible if it uses the Employment Services's positive about disabled people symbol for (a) external recruitment and (b) internal recruitment and promotion. [11911]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None of my departments or agencies currently use the Employment Services's positive about disabled people symbol. However, my Department and agencies are giving further consideration to becoming symbol users.

Scottish Grand Committee (Costs)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost to public funds to his Department of each meeting of the Scottish Grand Committee in the current Session, and what estimate he has made of the cost of each meeting which is due to take place; and if he will itemise the costs. [12016]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The cost of hiring venues, catering, security and use of equipment and so on, is borne by the House authorities. Scottish Office officials supporting Ministers in connection with Committee meetings do so as part of their normal duties and no additional staff costs are incurred.

Agriculture Department

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many full-time members of staff are currently employed by the Scottish Office Agriculture Department in Edinburgh; and at what grades are they employed. [12306]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers and grades of staff employed on a full-time basis in the agricultural divisions of the Scottish Office Agriculture, Environment and Fisheries Department who are based in Edinburgh are shown in the table. The table reflects the position as at 1 January 1996.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to vet private health companies which tender for contracts to run NHS services under the Government's private finance initiative. [12611]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All private sector organisations wishing to become involved in NHS schemes must, under European procurement legislation, pass through a prequalification stage under which their financial position, legal status and competence to carry out the task are explored. All companies which succeed in reaching tender stage of a project will have demonstrated their soundness in all these areas. It is the responsibility of NHS trusts and health boards to establish the suitability of prospective partners.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent on the management allowances of general practitioner fundholding practices; and how much this represented for each GP fundholder practice in operation in each financial year since the introduction of GP fundholding for each health board area in Scotland. [12505]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Expenditure on management allowances for general practitioner fundholding practices in Scotland in the period 1990–91 to 1994–95 is set out in the table. Details of management allowances for individual GP fundholding practices are not held centrally.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial support is available to general practitioner fundholding practices from (a) Scottish health boards, (b) his Department and (c) the NHS Management Executive in addition to management allowances paid to general practitioner fundholding practices. [12509]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In addition to the management allowance, GP fundholders can receive reimbursement for the purchase of computer systems required for fundholding purposes. This provision allows for GP fundholders to receive 75 per cent. of the cost of computer hardware and 100 per cent. of the cost of the software.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the maximum level of the management allowances payable to general practitioner fundholding practices has been set at in each financial year since the introduction of fundholding; and what additional expenditure incurred by general practitioner fundholders the management allowances is supposed to cover. [12513]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table.

Management expenses are defined in the National Health Service (Fund-Holding Practices) (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1995 as:

(a) the cost of employing staff in connection with the management of the allotted sum;

(b) the cost of training members of the practice or their staff in connection with the management of the allotted sum;

(c) the cost of either—

(i) employing or engaging (as an assistant or deputy) a registered medical practitioner to provide general medical services to the patients of a member of the practice who is engaged in the management of the allotted sum, or

(ii) paying a member of the practice for his time in connection with the management of the allotted sum;

(d) the cost of acquiring office equipment (excluding computers) required for the purposes of the management of the allotted sum;

(e) the upkeep and running costs of office equipment required for the purposes of the management of the allotted sum, including computer hardware and software running costs;

(f) the cost of specialist advice required in connection with the management of the allotted sum; and

(g) the cost of minor internal modifications to any premises from which the members of the practice carry on their practice which are required to provide office accommodation for staff employed in connection with the management of the allotted sum.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been retained out of surplus in their budgets by each general practitioner fundholding practice in Scotland at the end of each financial year. [12508]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what responsibility health boards and the NHS Management Executive have in respect of monitoring the use made of general practitioner fundholding practices of any surpluses retained by their practices at the end of the financial year. [12510]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under the National Health Service (Fundholding Practices) (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1995, it is the responsibility of health boards to be satisfied that expenditure by GP fundholders on audited savings is for the benefit of the patients of the members of practice and represents value for money.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioner fundholding practices have been in operation, giving the number of patients covered by general practitioner fundholding practices; and what percentage this represented of the health board's total population for each financial year since the introduction of general practitioner fundholding for each health board area in Scotland. [12506]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

[1] GP practices which were 'live' fundholders for all or part of the financial year, ie excludes practices in the preparatory stage of fundholding. There were none in the year ended 31 March 1991.

[2] All patients on the lists of practices, as defined above, including those living outwith the health board area, as at 1 April immediately following the end of the financial year.

[3] Patients, as defined above, as a percentage of all patients of all principals contracted to the health board, as at 1 April immediately following the end of the financial year. Includes patients living outwith the health board area and excludes patients who reside in the health board area but are on the lists of principals contracted to other health boards.

Edzell Base

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what studies he has commissioned regarding the effects of closure of Edzell base on the local economy; and if he will make a statement; [13687]

(2) what forms of (a) financial and (b) other assistance from his Department will be available to address the effects of the closure of Edzell base; [13691]

(3) what additional finance he has provided to (a) Edzell base and (b) the local economy during the transition phase to closure; and if he will make a statement. [13686]

Mr. Kynoch: The Scottish Office has assisted in planning for the rundown through membership of the Ministry of Defence joint working group and the Edzell task force. In addition, the Scottish Office contributed to the costs of a consultancy study, assessing the likely impact of the closure, which has been commissioned on behalf of the task force. The need for additional finance from the Scottish Office or any other source to address the effects of the closure of the Edzell base can be assessed only once the consultancy report has been considered and proposals to tackle any problems have been developed. The task force will be considering the consultants' draft report shortly.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whom he has met to discuss the closure of the Edzell base; what alternative uses have been proposed for the base after its closure; and if he will make a statement. [13689]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend has not been involved in any meetings specifically concerned with the closure of the RAF base at Edzell. However, he is represented by officials on the Ministry of Defence joint working group, which is considering issues related to the disposal of the base. In addition, a Scottish Office official chairs the Edzell task force, which is considering the need for measures to address the impact of the closure on the local economy. Several possible alternative uses for the base have been proposed by members of the public and bodies with an interest in the area. The task force provides an appropriate forum in which to consider these suggestions.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates he has made of (a) the employment and (b) other economic effects arising from the closure of Edzell base. [13688]

Mr. Kynoch: When the closure was announced in July 1995, Scottish Office economists prepared a rough estimate, based on limited provisional information, of the likely impact of the closure on local employment and unemployment. This suggested a reduction in employment of about 400 and a likely increase of about 270 in registered unemployment in the Brechin and Montrose travel-to-work area. Consultants commissioned on behalf of the Edzell task force are currently preparing more refined estimates, based on the results of local surveys, and the preliminary indication is that the initial estimates overstate both the loss of jobs and the impact on unemployment.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has made to the United States authorities regarding the retention of infrastructure, buildings and other assets after the closure of the Edzell base. [13690]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend has made no direct representations to the United States authorities regarding the retention of infrastructure, buildings and other assets after the closure of the RAF base at Edzell. However, my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces wrote to the United States ambassador in July 1995 on a range of issues, including the infrastructure to be retained at Edzell, relevant to minimising the impact of the closure. On behalf of my right hon. Friend, I also wrote to the ambassador in July expressing my support for the approach taken in the letter from my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces. The response from the ambassador confirms my expectation that the United States authorities will adopt a flexible approach on these issues.

Scottish Office Media Monitoring

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 94, if he will list those agencies or companies which submitted tenders for (a) the trial media monitoring service and (b) the long-term media monitoring service. [12740]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1996]: Tenders have been invited for a press cuttings service. This service is the identification, selection and compilation of any articles in daily or Sunday newspapers on matters for which the Scottish Office is responsible. It is not possible to identify those press cuttings agencies which have either provided this service on a trial basis or submitted tenders, as this information is classed as restricted-commercial.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 94, if he will list the independent press cuttings agencies which have been providing a trail media monitoring service to the Scottish Office since October 1995; and what has been the cost to date of such expenditure, including the tender process. [12739]

Mr. Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1996]: This information is classed as restricted-commercial.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 94, to whom the companies and agencies engaged in media monitoring activities will be directly responsible on a daily basis; and if he will make a statement. [12771]

Mr. Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1996]: The company which wins the contract will, like the company at present providing the service on a trial basis, be responsible on a daily basis to the head of the secretariat in the information directorate of the Scottish Office.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 94, on what dates he invited the tenders for the media monitoring service on (a) a trial and (b) long-term basis; and what form the invitations took. [12741]

Mr. Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1996]: Tenders for providing the press cuttings service for a period of three years—with the possibility of an extension to five years—were issued on 8 December 1995 and are in accordance with standard invitation to tender documents used by the Scottish Office.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 94, what guidance was given to the press cuttings agencies which have been providing a media monitoring service since October 1995 to ensure that the media monitoring activities were limited to coverage of official Scottish Office activities. [12769]

Mr. Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1996]: I understand that the agencies which have provided a press cuttings service on a trial basis were asked in writing to select only articles on matters for which the Scottish Office is responsible.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 94, if he will make a statement on the criteria to be used in selecting the companies or agencies, during the current tender exercise, to provide the media monitoring service to the Scottish Office. [12743]

Mr. Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1996]: The criteria will be the price, the delivery of the service, the quality of the service, experience of similar contracts and customer service.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 94, if he will make a statement on the criteria which were used in selecting the press cutting agencies to provide the trial media monitoring service to the Scottish Office. [12742]

Mr. Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1996]: I understand that both companies approached the Scottish Office offering to provide a press cuttings service. It was decided to offer both companies a trial period to evaluate the quality of their service against that of the in-house one and to ensure value for money.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, columns 94, what conventions or guidelines apply to outside agencies or companies engaged in media monitoring activities on behalf of the Scottish Office; and if he will make a statement. [12770]

Mr. Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1996]: When the contract is awarded, the successful company will provide the press cuttings service in accordance with the tender specification and will comply with Scottish Office terms and conditions of contract.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 94, if he will publish the remit which was given to the press cuttings agencies which have been providing a media monitoring service since October 1995. [12744]

Mr. Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1996]: The companies have been asked to provide cuttings from daily and Sunday newspapers on articles on matters for which the Scottish Office is responsible and to deliver the cuttings to St. Andrew's house, Edinburgh or Dover house, London by specified times.

Highlands and Islands Veterinary Services Scheme

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of expenditure on the highlands and islands veterinary services scheme in 1994–95; and what is the estimated expenditure in 1995–96 and 1996–97. [12574]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 1 February 1996]: In the financial year 1994–95 a total of £231,717 was expended on the Highlands and Islands veterinary services scheme. Planned provision in 1995–96 and 1996–97 is just under £300,000.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many practices have resigned from the highlands and islands veterinary services scheme since 1 January 1995. [12575]

Mr. Forsyth [holding answer 1 February 1996]: There have been no resignations from the highlands and islands veterinary services scheme since 1 January 1995.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when it was decided to fund the new Scottish ambulance communication system through a private finance initiative; when tenders were sought on this basis; when they were submitted to the Scottish Office; how many were received; and when he expects the result of this to be announced. [12958]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 February 1996]: Recognising that private sector capabilities and skills might more effectively manage the installation and operation of modern telecommunications systems, early replacement of the remaining old ambulance radio system was included as a key element of a procurement exercise initiated in October 1994. This open procurement, conducted under European Community rules, resulted in keen competition. The proposals of three potential suppliers were evaluated and subjected to field trials in early 1995, following which detailed contract negotiations have continued with a single consortium. It was invited to submit a tender on 28 December 1995; this was submitted on 15 January 1996 and it is expected that a decision will be announced at the end of February.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the decision to equip the Scottish ambulance service with a new command and control communication system was announced; and when he expects it to be fully operational. [12957]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 February 1996]: The decision to provide a new radio system, and associated command and control computer system for the Scottish ambulance service was announced to the Scottish Grand Committee on 7 March 1989, Official Report, column 4. The radio system became operational in the Grampian region in December 1993 and was successfully linked to the command and control system in March 1994. Extension of the system to Highland region and the western isles was completed by the end of 1994; present installation work in Tayside is nearing completion.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many incidents there have been in each year since 1988 when ambulances have been unable to be contacted in emergencies because they were out of contact with the control headquarters. [12959]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 February 1996]: A comprehensive record of the numbers of such incidents is not maintained by the Scottish Ambulance Service NHS trust. Ambulance performance for emergency calls is measured in terms of the time taken for an ambulance to reach the patient. Performance against response time targets has improved consistently across Scotland including in those areas where the new radio communications system has still to be installed.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

15. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many prizes have been paid out by the national lottery. [11772]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To date, the total number of prizes that have been paid out by the national lottery is 315,155,491. Of this amount, 73,730,101 are from the on-line game, and 241,425,390 from instants.

16. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what recent representations she has received on the subject of the size of national lottery jackpots. [11773]

Mrs. Bottomley: I have received a number of representations on the size of national lottery jackpots.

17. Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many art galleries have been awarded funds from the national lottery. [11774]

Mr. Sproat: Twenty art galleries throughout the United Kingdom have received grants from the national lottery totalling £58.6 million.

20. Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans her Department has to enable small, rural communities to apply for national lottery funds. [11777]

Mrs. Bottomley: The Government and the distributors want to see lottery funds going to communities throughout the UK. The proposals I announced on Monday 22 January, Official Report, columns 41–42, would enable the national lottery to support projects giving greater access to the arts and sport, including in rural areas.

22. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many museums have been awarded funds from the national lottery. [11779]

Mr. Sproat: Forty-one museums throughout the United Kingdom have received grants from the national lottery totalling £38.5 million.

23. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what further discussions she expects to have with Camelot regarding the national lottery. [11780]

Mrs. Bottomley: I plan to visit Camelot's operations centre in Watford on 22 February.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement on recent developments in the national lottery. [11764]

Mr. Sproat: The changes which I propose to make are a natural development of the national lottery. I intend to make it possible for the distributors to support new initiatives particularly aimed at youth, talent, access and participation. I shall be encouraging the arts councils to make awards that help innovation—for example, to aspiring new playwrights or composers.

Sport (Young People)

18. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps she is taking to promote sport among young people. [11775]

Mr. Sproat: The Government published the sports policy statement "Sport: Raising the Game" last July which detailed plans for improving the opportunities for young people to take part in sport. The Department of National Heritage, the Department for Education and Employment and the Sports Council are now implementing the initiatives outlined in the document.

Arts (Business Sponsorship)

19. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps she is taking to promote business sponsorship of the arts. [11776]

Mr. Sproat: My Department actively encourages private sector support of the arts, particularly through its pairing scheme which to date has brought in more than £96 million in new money to the arts since it was introduced in 1984. My right hon. Friend recently announced changes to the scheme which will now be even more attractive for longer-term sponsors and initiatives that aim to attract new and younger audiences.

Millennium Projects

21. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many projects in Wales have been, or are being, considered by the Millennium Commission. [11778]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the first round of the competition, the commission received 31 full applications for grant for millennium schemes in Wales including three umbrella projects that incorporate projects in Wales. Of these, 10 projects have been awarded grants totalling £35 million, one is under negotiation and one has been granted an extended deadline to submit further information for consideration in February.

In the second application round the commission has received 71 outline proposals from organisations in Wales. The closing date for full applications is 12 February.

24. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she expects to (a) receive a further edition of proposals from Imagination Group Ltd. concerning the forthcoming millennium exhibition in London, (b) make those proposals and any further decisions public and (c) publish the terms and conditions of any agreement or contract with that company. [11782]

Mrs. Bottomley: The Millennium Commission expects to receive in the next few days the result of additional work undertaken at its request by Imagination Group Ltd. so that the commission can make a decision regarding the two potential sites for the national exhibition, Greenwich and the national exhibition centre. It is hoped that an announcement will be made within the next few weeks. Terms and conditions of any contract would not be negotiated in detail until mid-1996.

The Millennium Commission makes all funding decisions entirely independently of Government, and conditions of contract relating to grants are a matter for the commission.

25. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans have been made to celebrate the millennium. [11783]

Mrs. Bottomley: Twenty per cent. of the net proceeds from the national lottery is distributed by the Millennium Commission to projects which celebrate the year 2000 and the beginning of the new millennium. To date, £336 million has been committed to 303 awards, including four landmark projects. The commission will soon announce details of the site for a year-long exhibition, to be held throughout the year 2000, as part of the UK-wide millennium festival.

Sport Broadcasts (Digital Technology)

26. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if her Department has examined the likely impact of digital technology on the broadcasting of sporting events; and if she will make a statement. [11784]

Mr. Sproat: More channels will mean that there will be more opportunities for the coverage of sport on television, giving viewers more choice.

Welsh National Opera House

27. Mrs Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many representations she has received on the funding of the Welsh national opera house. [11785]

Mr. Sproat: The decision on this project was, of course, a matter for the Millennium Commission.

Olympic Games (Televising)

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what action she is taking to prevent a single broadcaster buying up exclusive rights to televise the Olympic games. [11762]

Mr. Sproat: The Government have said that, with the exception of listed sporting events including the Olympic games which cannot be shown live on pay-per-view, sporting bodies should in general be free to sell their broadcasting rights in the interests of their sport. We are strongly aware of the public debate on this issue and are keeping it under close review.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 6 February 1996

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Steen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the level of public funds granted in the last five years in legal aid to (a) people living abroad and (b) foreigners living in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement as to what checks are made by the Legal Aid Board as to the verifying the accuracy of financial statements made by (a) and (b) and their financial position in their own countries. [13499]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Information on legal aid expenditure granted to people living abroad is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information on the nationality of applicants for legal aid is not separately recorded. It is therefore not possible to say how much legal aid was paid in respect of foreign nationals.

Applications from people living abroad and foreigners living in the United Kingdom are subject to the same tests as applications from British citizens resident in England and Wales.

WALES

Community Hospital Project (Porthmadog)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress on the community hospital project, to be based at Porthmadog, since the meeting on 26 January between representatives of the Gwynedd community health trust and Welsh Office officials. [12884]

Mr. Hague: The trust is finalising its outline business case for the proposed hospital in light of comments made by my officials. Producing a satisfactory business case is a matter for the trust in discussion with its main purchasers.

Arts Projects

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many letters he has received (a) from organisations and individuals in Wales and (b) from hon. members representing Welsh constituencies concerning adverse effects following on the failure to secure millennium fund backing for the national opera house/Lyric theatre in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [12902]

Mr. Hague: The numbers of letters received in each category are:

(a) fewer than a dozen.

(b) two

Exel Logistics

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultation he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority concerning changes to the specification of the materials management contract awarded to Exel Logistics in the course of the market testing of the authority, subsequent to the publication of the specification and exclusively for Exel Logistics and without informing other bidders. [13794]

Mr. Hague: None. There have been no changes to the specification.

Cardiff Bay

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 624, and the letter to the hon. Member by the chief executive of the Cardiff Bay development corporation of 29 January, under what statutory authority the Land Authority for Wales uses its compulsory purchase powers on behalf of another non-departmental public body. [13907]

Mr. Hague: The Land Authority for Wales compulsory purchase powers are provided subject to my authorisation, under section 104 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980.

Internet

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to eliminate his predecessor's name and text from the Welsh Office Internet entry; if he will update the contents in the Welsh Office Internet box; and if he will make a statement. [13982]

Mr. Hague: I have no immediate plans to remove the text of my Department's brochures from the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency's Government information service.

Medical Staff (Suspensions)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) consultants, (b) junior doctors and (c) general practitioners have been suspended on full pay in each of the last three years. [13983]

Mr. Hague: This information is not available centrally. However, with effect from 1 April 1995 employing authorities/trusts must notify the Department when a consultant has been suspended on full pay for six months. There have been no such notifications since then.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Saudi Arabia (Arms Deals)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role of Andrew Green in respect of arms deals with Saudi Arabia during his terms of office there; and if he will make a statement. [13097]

Mr. Hanley: All senior Foreign Office officials are required to promote British exports. Mr. Green was engaged in such work during a posting to Riyadh as deputy head of mission from 1985 to 1988. I am confident that he will continue to uphold British interests admirably during his forthcoming posting as our ambassador to Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role of David Gore-Booth in respect of arms deals with Saudi Arabia during his term of office in that country; and if he will make a statement. [13075]

Mr. Hanley: All heads of mission are required to promote British exports. Ambassador Gore-Booth has done so extremely effectively.

Gedhun Chokyi Nyima

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to (a) the Chinese Government and (b) the Dalai Lama on his visit to London in July in respect of the whereabouts of Gedhun Chokyi Nyima. [13171]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary raised a range of human rights issues with the Chinese during his visit to Peking in January. In particular, he expressed our concerns about reports of abuses in Tibet. The whereabouts of Gedhun Chokyi Nyima and his tutor was raised during the recent EU-China human rights dialogue which took place in Peking from 21 to 24 January. The Dalai Lama has also expressed his concerns.

Law of the Sea Convention

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the necessary procedures in respect of ratifying the agreement of, and acceding to, the United Nations law of the sea convention described in his answer of 20 July 1994, Official Report, column 236, will be completed; and when it is Her Majesty's Government's intention to ratify and accede. [13572]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The legislation we intend to have in place before accession will be complete when the orders on privileges and immunities for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and the International Sea-Bed Authority, and the Merchant Shipping (Prevention of Pollution) Order 1995, have been made. These were approved by Parliament on 24 and 25 January. A number of other necessary procedures are outstanding. Once these are complete, we will be in position to accede to the UN convention on the law of the sea and to ratify the part XI implementation agreement.

Sudan

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions Her Majesty's Government have initiated with (a) the European Union, (b) the Commonwealth and (c) the United Nations regarding moves to achieve peace in Sudan. [13632]

Mr. Hanley: Moves to achieve peace in Sudan have centred on the initiative launched in 1994 by the Inter-Governmental Authority on Drought and Development, including Kenya and Uganda, which we have fully supported. The UK has also played an active part in stimulating a critical dialogue between the EU and Sudan. At the UN, the UK has been active in securing the passing of resolutions critical of Sudan's human rights record.

Kosovo

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what account is being taken of the situation in Kosovo in determining diplomatic recognition of Serbia by the European Union. [13444]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Member states of the European Union, in considering recognition of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, are taking full account of the situation in Kosovo. The development of good relations between the FRY and the EU and the FRY's position within the international community after recognition would depend, inter alia, on full respect for human rights, including minority rights, and the granting of a large degree of autonomy for Kosvo within the FRY.

International Criminal Court

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received on and what is his policy regarding the establishment of an international criminal court. [13631]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have received a wide range of representations on this subject.

Following the ad hoc committee meetings to discuss this issue, a preparatory committee has been set up to undertake work in March and in August on a draft statute for an international criminal court. We have made it clear that our support for the establishment of a court is dependent, among other things, on its being a court of last resort for certain serious crimes where states are unable or unwilling to act and also on its being generally accepted by the international community.

The final decision as to whether to become party to the statute establishing such a court will only be taken once we know what the statute will look like.

Kashmir

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of current relations between India and Pakistan concerning Kashmir; and if he will make a statement. [12462]

Mr. Hanley: We remain concerned that the issue of Kashmir damages relations between India and Pakistan. We continue to urge both parties to show restraint and resolve their differences through peaceful negotiation. We are disappointed that the talks between India and Pakistan in Islamabad in January 1994 have yet to be continued.

Pakistan

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of the 24 January, Official Report, column 227, how many people have been killed in Karachi and Sindh between 1 January and the latest available date. [12485]

Mr. Hanley: The official Pakistani police figures for killings in Sindh and Karachi from 1 January, up to and including 30 January, are:

Sindh (including Karachi): 178

Karachi: 86

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has made to the Government of Pakistan about child bonded labour in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [13368]

Mr. Hanley: We regularly express our concerns to the Government of Pakistan about child and bonded labour. We welcome recent steps they have taken to improve the situation, such as widening access to schooling and the establishment of rehabilitation centres. However, we recognise that much remains to be done.

China

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he raised the cases of (a) Wei Jingsheng, (b) Tong Yi and (c) Dai Xuezhong during his visit to China; and if he will make a statement. [13220]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 5 February 1996]: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary raised our concerns about a range of human rights issues during his recent visit to Peking. In particular, he mentioned the case of Mr. Wei Jingsheng and urged his early release. He also asked for a response to the list of individual cases handed over during Foreign Minister Qian's visit to the UK in October 1995; Tong Yi was included in that list.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Pay

Mr. Tracy: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has to review the arrangements for the pay of hon. Members and Ministers. [14237]

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has today written to Sir Michael Perry, the chairman of the Senior Salaries Review Body, in the following terms:

"As you know, changes in the structure of civil servants' pay mean that new arrangements need to be found for determining Members' pay from 1997 onwards.

I would be grateful if you and your colleagues on the Senior Salaries Review Body, under your standing terms of reference, undertake a comprehensive review, with the following remit.

'The Senior Salaries Review Body is asked to undertake a comprehensive review of the level and structure of Parliamentary pay and allowances and to make recommendations for the future. The review should cover each of the following terms:

(i) the salary of Members of the House of Commons;

(ii) the salaries of Ministers and other office-holders;

(iii) all allowances, comprising the Office Costs Allowance, Motor Mileage Allowance, Additional Cost Allowance and the London Supplement;

(iv) the severance pay and pension arrangements for MPs and Ministers;

(v) the rates of Peers' expenses allowances and the Secretarial Allowance for Ministers and other paid office-holders in the House of Lords; and

(iv) a linkage to provide the basis for annual uprating in future years without the need for Parliamentary decision.'

I realise that such a review will be time consuming and needs to be fitted in with your other work. Nonetheless, I would be grateful if it could be completed in time for you to make recommendations, if at all possible, by the end of June."

ENVIRONMENT

Land (Yorkshire and Humberside)

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much land in Leeds, and Yorkshire and Humberside is currently recorded on the land registers; and how much has been sold since the inception of the land registers (a) in total and (b) on his direction. [10423]

Sir Paul Beresford: Since October 1989 local authorities and certain other public bodies have been required to compile and maintain registers of unused and underused land in their ownership. Local authorities have been asked to submit annually to the Department aggregated information from their registers.

The latest complete information on land held by local authorities in Yorkshire and Humberside is for March 1994. Information on land sold between 1989 and 1994 is incomplete. No directions have been issued over this period.

	Land recorded on land register at 31 March 1994 Hectare	Land sold between October 1989 and 31 March 1994 Hectare
Leeds	241.1	250
Yorkshire and Humberside (including Leeds)	2,799.1	1,030.3

Gritting Lorries

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority gritting lorries there were in (a) 1992, (b) 1993, (c) 1994 and (d) 1995; and if he will make a statement. [13168]

Sir Paul Beresford: This information is not held centrally.

Sewerage Pipes

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the sewerage undertakers which have decided to exclude plastic as an approved material for waste-water pipework; [13186]

(2) when he last met the representatives of (a) the pipe making industry, (b) the British Standards Institution and (c) the European Commission to discuss the specification for sewerage pipes. [13185]

Mr. Clappison: The specification for sewerage pipes is a matter for the sewerage undertakers.

Antarctic Ice Shelves

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what talks he has had with his EU counterparts regarding the disintegration of Antarctic ice shelves. [13271]

Mr. Clappison: British Antarctic Survey scientists, reporting recently in the scientific journal Nature, Vol. 379, about the disintegration of Antarctic ice shelves, were unable to determine whether this was a result of global climate change due to greenhouse gases or part of a long-term natural oscillation.

The Council of Environment Ministers at their last meeting in December noted that the recent findings of the intergovernmental panel on climate change concerning the threat of damage from climate change underline the necessity for urgent action at the widest possible level. If the disintegration of Antarctic ice shelves should prove to be due to greenhouse gas warming, the Council would need to consider what further action to take.

Water Abstraction (Conservation Areas)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has given the National Rivers Authority on the review of extant abstraction licences which may affect sites designated as special protection areas under the birds directive or as candidate special areas of conservation under the habitats directive. [13666]

Mr. Clappison: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock) on 23 January 1996, Official Report, column 198.

Job Advertisements

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many jobs have been advertised in each grade in his Department during the last three months for which records are available; and how many people have applied for each such job. [13832]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Department of the Environment, central, has advertised the following permanent administrative and specialist jobs during the last three months:

Type of Posts	Number applied
Senior planning officer x 2	62
Senior professional and technological officer x 3	97
Administrative officer, Hemel Hempstead x 1	26

My Department is currently advertising for two assistant librarians.

Water Companies (Profits)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the formula used by the water industry regulator to determine how much profit is given as returns to shareholders. [13909]

Mr. Clappison: The price cap system of economic regulation of the water industry places a limit on prices, rather than controlling profits or dividends. The regulator monitors the dividends paid by the regulated businesses to their group companies. It is for the group companies to decide on the level of dividends paid to shareholders.

Wind Turbines

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what response he has made to the Countryside Commission's call of 15 January for a review of planning policy guidance 22 in relation to the location of wind turbines; [13702]

(2) what representations his Department has received about the proposed location of 16 wind turbines on Gunson Height in Furness, Cumbria. [13703]

Sir Paul Beresford: My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Construction, Planning and Energy Efficiency has met and written to the chairman of the Countryside Commission explaining how the contents of PPG22 already deal with the environmental concerns raised by the commission in relation to wind turbines.

A planning application together with an environmental assessment for 16 wind turbines on Gunson Height has been made to South Lakeland district council, which is carrying out the usual consultations. So far as is known, no representations have been made direct to my Department at this stage.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the local authorities which will benefit from the area cost adjustment in 1996–97 and (b) the amount by which each such authority will benefit in that year. [13944]

Sir Paul Beresford: A table listing the contribution to SSAs from the area cost adjustment has been placed in the Library.

The contribution of the area cost adjustment is not the same as the amount an authority would gain or lose if there was not an area cost adjustment in the standard spending assessment system. If the area cost adjustment were removed, it would be necessary to revise the analyses on which the SSA formulae are based, and we would wish to consult the local authority associations on what would then be the most appropriate formulae.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the planned yield from council tax in England for the financial year from 1995–96 to 1998–99 based on the view of local authority behaviour taken in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1996–97" expressed in (a) millions of pounds, (b) in pounds divided by the band D council tax base used for 1995–96 tax setting and (c) in pounds divided by the total number of chargeable dwellings in England in 1995–96; [13972]

(2) what is (a) the Treasury's estimate of the likely increase in the total yield of council tax in England in 1996–97, expressed in pound million and as a percentage based on the view of local authority behaviour taken in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1996–97", (b) the detailed worked mathematical calculation that informs that estimate, (c) the Treasury's estimate of the increase in aggregate budgets as adjusted for the purposes of 1996–97 capping, expressed in millions of pounds and as a percentage based on the view of local authority behaviour taken in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1996–97" and (d) the planned increase in aggregate Government total external support for local authorities in England in 1996–97, compared to 1995–96 total external support adjusted for 1995–96 community care special transitional grant and further changes in local authority responsibilities, expressed in millions of pounds and as a percentage. [13973]

Mr. Gummer: The Government do not set plans for the yield of council tax, which depends upon decisions made by individual authorities. The figures in chapter 4 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", HC 30, which relate to 1996–97 and preceding years only, show an estimate of the contribution of council tax, net of council tax benefit, to the total of general Government revenues.

The costs of council tax benefit fall largely to the Exchequer. In order to reduce the chance that local authorities' budgeting decisions will have an adverse effect on the public finances. Estimates of council tax growth are set on the pessimistic side.

The table shows the calculation of gross council tax yield for England consistent with chapter 4 of HC 30. The calculation takes account of estimates of the council tax base, the assumed average level of council taxes and the average council tax collection rate.

Estimated council tax base before collection rate adjustment (million band D equivalents)	16.50	16.55
Assumed average band D council tax level, £	609	656
Percentage estimate of assumed collection rate	97.2	97.4
Estimated yield gross of council tax benefit, £ million	9,780	10,574
Estimated increase in gross yield £ million	—	794
Per cent.	—	8.1
Gross yield divided by 1995–96 tax setting tax base, £	—	659
Gross yield divided by 1995–96 chargeable dwellings, £	—	538

No separate estimate is made of the increase in aggregate budgeted local authority revenue expenditure in England.

Aggregate external finance has been increased by £549 million (1.6 per cent.) above the 1995–96 level, adjusted for community care special grant and other changes in local authority responsibilities.

Nuclear Electric plc

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new discharge authorisations will be required following the separation of Nuclear Electric plc from Nuclear Electric Ltd. from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; how many have been granted; and what is the timetable for the remainder. [13292]

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 2 February 1996]: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has received the following applications for new discharge authorisations submitted on behalf of the AGR and PWR Co. Ltd:

		Number of authorisations applied for
Power station	Type	Waste gases, mists and dusts	Liquid waste	Combustible wastes
Dungeness B	AGR	1	1	0
Hartlepool	AGR	1	1	1
Heysham 1	AGR	1	1	1
Heysham 2	AGR	1	1	1
Hinkley Point B	AGR	1	1	1
Sizewell B	PWR	1	1	1

AGR=Advanced gas-cooled reactor.
PWR=Pressure water reactor.

None of the authorisations has so far been granted. HMIP aims to publish its decision on each of the applications early in March 1996. Before the decision is published, the applicant has the right to appeal to the Secretary of State for the Environment under section 26 of the Radioactive Substances Act 1993, or request a hearing from the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under section 28 of the Act, with respect to a refusal of an authorisation or any limitations and conditions imposed. In addition, such local authorities or other persons whom the Secretary of State and the Minister consider appropriate may be afforded a hearing. No firm timetable for publishing the decision can therefore be given.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Knives (Sheffield)

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many knives were handed in in (a) the Sheffield area and (b) the Hallam constituency during the recent knives amnesty; and if he will make a statement; [13072]

(2) how many offences were committed in the Sheffield area for each of the last three years involving knives; and if he will make a statement. [13073]

Mr. Maclean: The running of the recent knives amnesty was an operational responsibility for chief officers of police and the information was collected by police force areas. The number of knives and potentially dangerous weapons handed in in the Sheffield area was 225. The information requested on the numbers of offences involving knives is not collected centrally.

Reconvictions

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the percentage of offenders convicted of offences carrying a discretionary life sentence who are reconvicted of a second offence of similar seriousness; what is the average sentence imposed on those reconvicted of offences carrying a discretionary life sentence; what is the average time served by those reconvicted for (i) all categories of such offences, (ii) manslaughter, (iii) rape, (iv) robbery, (v) buggery,

(vi) assault causing grievious bodily harm, (vii) aggravated burglary, (viii) firearms offences carrying life sentence as a maximum penalty and (ix) other offences carrying a maximum life sentence. [12909]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not collected routinely. A sample of those convicted of indictable offences in five weeks in 1993–94 included 600 offenders convicted of sexual or violent offences carrying a discretionary life sentence, 198—33 per cent.—of whom had previous convictions for such offences. A total of 169 of the offenders with previous convictions for such offences were given a custodial sentence, five of whom were sentenced to life imprisonment. The table shows the average sentence imposed, excluding life sentences, by offence group. Information is not available on sentences actually served by the offenders included in the sample.

Offence	Number sentenced to immediate custody on second or greater occasion	Average custodial sentence imposed (months)
Manslaughter	5	45
Rape	8	81
Robbery	92	42
Buggery	4	75
Wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm	31	49
Aggravated burglary	3	74
Firearms offences	1	48
Other offences	20	34
Total	164	46

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the average sentence served by (a) burglars and (b) drug dealers imprisoned for a third such sentence; [12911]

(2) what percentage of (a) burglars and (b) drug dealers receive a prison sentence on their third conviction for a similar offence. [12910]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not collected routinely. The results from a sample of those convicted of indictable offences in three weeks of 1993 are given in the table which shows the average sentence imposed. Information is not available on sentences actually served by the offenders included in the sample.

Sentencing of burglars and drug dealers[1] convicted for the third or greater time

Offence	Number convicted on a third or greater occasion	Percentage sentenced to immediate custody	Average custodial sentence imposed (months)
Burglary	1,135	43	11
Drug dealing[1]	8	75	30

[1] Based on drug trafficking offences monitored and reported in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Statistics of Drugs Seizures and Offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1994". These are offences of unlawful production of drugs other than cannabis, unlawful supply, possession with intent to supply unlawfully and unlawful import or export.

Police Authorities (Funding)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the (a) capital funding and (b) supplementary credit approvals awarded to police authorities for 1996–97. [12930]

Mr. Maclean: The information is listed in the table.

Police capital programme 1996–97

Prisons (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what capital expenditure for the financial year 1996–97 for prisons in England and Wales will be dropped or revised as a result of the recent cost reductions; and what proportion this represents of total capital expenditure. [13278]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. George Howarth, dated 6 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about what capital expenditure for the financial year 1996–97 for prisons in England and Wales will be dropped or revised as a result of the recent cost reductions; and what proportion this represents of total capital expenditure.

The provisional capital budget for 1996–97 was £204 million. The final settlement was £117 million, representing a fall of 43% from the provisional budget. The Prison Service is currently deciding which projects to start in 1996–97 within its capital allocation and which capital projects can be started under the Private Finance Initiative.

"Prevention of Illegal Working"

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of all the submissions he has received as a result of his consultation exercise on his document "Prevention of Illegal Working". [13346]

Miss Widdecombe: I have made available to the House a list of those who have responded in writing to the consultation document and a summary of the main points made in those responses. It is for those who responded to decide whether to make their submissions public.

Police (Publicity Costs)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the cost to his Department of the communications directorate campaign to publicise successful police operations. [13272]

Mr. Howard: The Department has no specific campaign to publicise successful police operations. Examples of good police work are included in press releases, articles and speeches to demonstrate successes in the fight against crime. The minimal costs involved cannot be identified separately.

Keith Mann

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what considerations led to Keith Mann being given category A status. [13383]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 6 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about what considerations led to Keith Mann being given category A status.

Category A is applied to those prisoners whose escape would be highly dangerous to the public or the police or the security of the state no matter how unlikely that escape might be; and for whom the aim must be to make escape impossible.

Keith Mann was convicted of arson in June 1993. He escaped from prison custody while awaiting sentence and was unlawfully at large until his re-arrest in April 1994. On arrest he was found to be in possession of what was reported by police to be material which could be used for making explosives and incendiary devices. He was subsequently charged with a number of offences including attempted arson, incitement to commit arson and having explosive substance under suspicious circumstances.

In accordance with procedures laid down in the Prison Service Manual on Security, Keith Mann was, on his reception into prison custody, reported to Prison Service headquarters as a potential category A prisoner. Having regard to the nature and circumstances of the alleged offence, information received from the police and in the light of an assessment provided by a specialist police adviser, it was decided that Mr. Mann should be provisionally classified category A pending conviction and sentence.

On 19 December 1994 at the Central Criminal Court, Mr. Mann was sentenced to fourteen years imprisonment for damaging property, attempted incitement to commit arson, attempted incitement to commit criminal damage, attempted incitement to steal and having explosive substance under suspicious circumstances. A review of his security category was completed by the Prison Service Category A committee in September 1995. It was decided that Mr. Mann should remain a category A prisoner but this decision was further reviewed following the outcome of his appeal against sentence. It was subsequently decided that Mr. Mann's security category could be downgraded to category B.

Traffic Police (Training)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of state for the Home Department if he will list the number of staff employed by the police (a) full time and (b) as part of the other duties to train traffic police in (a) tachograph and (b) construction and use regulations relevant to heavy goods vehicles. [13276]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not held centrally.

Juvenile Crime (Seaham and Peterlee)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles were convicted of (a) theft and (b) burglary in the Seaham and Peterlee courts each year since 1991. [13199]

Mr. Maclean: Information regarding cases heard at individual court buildings within a petty sessional division is not collected centrally. Data from 1991 to 1994—latest available—are given for the Easington petty sessional division in the table.

Number of persons aged 10 to under 18 years convicted in the Easington Petty Sessional Division of indictable offences of theft and handling stolen goods and burglary, 1991–1994

Offence	1991	1992	1993	1994
Theft and handling stolen goods	23	31	43	60
Burglary	36	28	39	58

Firearms (Durham)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many legally held firearms are held in the Peterlee sub-division of the Durham constabulary; of which type; and if he will list the figures for each of the last five years. [13229]

Mr. Maclean: Information received from the Durham constabulary indicates that a total of 1,495 firearms were covered by certificates in force on 31 January 1996 in the Peterlee sub-division—356 firearms, which includes rifles, pistols, revolvers, large magazine smooth bore guns and specially dangerous air weapons, and 1,139 shot guns.

Information for earlier years is not available apart from that contained in the answer given to the hon. Member's similar question on 21 January 1993, Official Report, column 332.

Stalking

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the law on stalking. [13269]

Mr. Maclean: The Government have recently completed an examination of the anti-stalking laws passed in the United States, Australia and Canada and are currently considering whether workable and effective legislation to combat stalkers can be introduced in the United Kingdom.

Entry Clearance Applications

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many entry clearance applications have been delayed because papers have been lost in transit between posts abroad and the immigration service in each of the last three years. [13478]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information requested is not held and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Police (Ethnic Minorities)

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total staff establishment from ethnic minorities for the police service in England and Wales by each grade or rank in (a) 1989 and (b) 1995; [13462]

(2) how many police officers in England and Wales were from an ethnic minority in (a) 1989 and (b) 1995. [13461]

Mr. Maclean: There were 1,306 police officers from an ethnic minority in England and Wales at the end of 1989. Records of the ranks held by these officers were not kept centrally. On 30 September 1995, there were 2,223 police officers from an ethnic minority in England and Wales, made up of 2,020 constables, 158 sergeants, 36 inspectors, eight chief inspectors and one superintendent.

Police Cautions (Burglary)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 708, on how many occasions since the publication of Home Office circular 18/1994, the police have sought the opinion of the Crown Prosecution Service as to whether a prosecution should be brought or a caution given in a particular case; [13429]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 708, on how many occasions each year the views of victims have been sought, in accordance with the guidance given at paragraph 7 of circular 18/1994, prior to or in contemplation of, the police issuing a caution to the perpetrator of an offence instead of initiating a prosecution. [13428]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not collected.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 708, how many times a caution was administered in respect of a most serious offence triable only on indictment in each year since 1992. [13433]

Mr. Maclean: The information is given in the table.

Number of persons cautioned for indictable only (excluding triable either way) offences in the Metropolitan Police Area and England and Wales, 1992–1994.

Area	1992	1993	1994
Metropolitan Police	186	236	222
England and Wales	1,735	1,599	1,542

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 708, what monitoring has been given to the correctness of issuing cautions for less grave offences, in accordance with paragraph 6 of circular 18/1994, since the publication of that circular; and if he will make a statement. [13430]

Mr. Maclean: There are no national arrangements for monitoring decisions to administer a caution, but in the course of examining forces' cautioning policy Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary looks, where appropriate, at sampled cases in order to determine whether the policy is being observed. Moreover, a number of forces have established monitoring arrangements on a local basis.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 708, how many times cautions have been given for crimes of (a) attempted murder and (b) rape, since the publication of circular 18/1994. [13432]

Mr. Maclean: The information is given in the table.

Number of persons cautioned for (a) attempted murder and (b) rape following the publication of the Home Office Circular 18/1994[1] in England and Wales 1994

Offence	1994 January–March	1994 April–December	Total 1994
Attempted murder	—	1	1
Rape	9	10	19
Man having unlawful intercourse with a woman who is a defective	2	3	5
Substantive rape	7	6	13
Attempted rape	—	1	1

[1] The Home Office Circular 18/1994 'The Cautioning of Offenders' was issued on 15 March 1994. Cautioning data held centrally only identify the month of the caution, not the date.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 708, (1) what action has been taken since the publication of Home Office circular 18/1994 to reduce the inconsistency between police forces about circumstances in which they consider it appropriate to administer a caution, that is referred to at paragraph 4 of that circular; [13424]

(2) what action has been taken since the publication of Home Office circular 18/1994 to minimise the differing perceptions between police forces as to the boundary between (a) informal warnings and formal cautions and (b) formal cautions and prosecutions; and if he will make a statement. [13427]

Mr. Maclean: Improving consistency between police forces in their disposal of cases was one of the main purposes of the circular. In March 1995, the Association of Chief Police Officers issued guidelines as to the weight which it was suggested should be attached to a range of offences. The guidance has been adopted by a substantial number of forces. It is too early to determine how far it has helped to improve consistency of decision making.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 708, to what extent all cautions are accurately recorded in accordance with paragraph 11 of Home Office circular 18/1994. [13426]

Mr. Maclean: Up to 1 November 1995 records of caution were generally kept only by the force that issued them. Since that date, records of all cautions for reportable offences have been entered by forces on to the Phoenix database of the police national computer.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 708, what monitoring of results in accordance with paragraph 4 of circular 18/1994 has been given to caution plus schemes. [13425]

Mr. Maclean: Most of the 24 forces which operate some form of caution plus scheme have established monitoring arrangements. The results are being evaluated as part of a research study which is now in progress.

Opposed Measures

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a list of all the measures approved by Parliament since 1979 on law and order, prison sentences, illegal drugs use and terrorism which were opposed (a) on Second or Third Reading, (b) in Committee and (c) on Report by Her Majesty's Opposition. [13120]

Mr. Howard: The list of measures which the Opposition have voted against on Second Reading includes:

the 1984 Police and Criminal Evidence Act, which strengthened police powers to stop and search suspects;

the 1986 Public Order Act, which gave the police more powers to deal with street disorder;

the 1988 Criminal Justice Act, which raised the maximum sentences for a number of serious crimes and gave the Attorney-General a right of appeal against over lenient sentences;

the 1991 Criminal Justice Act, which made parents more responsible for their children's actions and ensured that all prisoners serve at least half of their sentence in custody;

the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993, which introduced new measures to deal with bogus asylum seekers; and the annual renewal of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act every year since 1983.

A full list of all the measures approved by Parliament since 1979 on law and order at Second and Third Reading, in Committee or on Report by Her Majesty's Opposition is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The details of votes cast in parliamentary Divisions are a matter of public record, published in the Official Report.

Asylum Seekers

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information is exchanged between the Governments of all European Union states on asylum seekers; and what rules of confidentiality are applied. [13159]

Mr. Kirkhope: General information on asylum matters is exchanged through the Centre for Information, Reflection and Exchange on Asylum working group, established by the Council of the European Union. CIREA's discussions are normally confidential and do not include individual cases.

Discounts for Guilty Pleas

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards magistrates courts offering discounts for guilty pleas. [13118]

Mr. Maclean: In common with the Crown court, magistrates courts are required by section 48 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 to take account, when passing sentence, of the timing and other circumstances of a plea of guilty; and, where a discount is given, to indicate the fact This provision gave statutory force to existing practice; the principle that an early plea of guilty should attract a discount on sentence has long been reflected in the sentencing guidelines issued by the Magistrates Association.

The Government hope that this provision will help to make defendants who are guilty aware of the advantages of pleading guilty at an early stage.

Under-age Alcohol Sales

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many licence holders have been prosecuted in the Peterlee and Seaham courts for selling alcoholic liquor to persons who were under age in each year since 1991. [13465]

Mr. Kirkhope [holding answer 2 February 1996]: Information regarding cases heard at individual court buildings within a petty sessional division is not collected centrally.

Data for the Easington petty sessional division show no prosecutions for the offence of a licence holder selling or supplying intoxicating liquor to persons under 18—section 1 of the Licensing Act 1964—from 1991 to 1994.

Secure Training Centres

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the contracts for the secure training centres are being resubmitted to his Department. [13753]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 5 January 1996]: Tender proposals for the provision of the first two secure training centres at Gringley, Nottinghamshire and Cookham Wood, Kent, were received on 14 June 1995. Negotiations are continuing with the tenderers and as part of this process tenderers are being asked to revise certain aspects of their bids prior to the final assessment and selection of preferred bidders. Contracts will be signed as soon as possible once the terms of the contractual agreement have been finalised.

Visas (El Salvador)

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visas were granted to representatives of the army and police of El Salvador to visit the United Kingdom in 1995. [13197]

Mr. Hanley: I have been asked to reply.

One.

TREASURY

Tax Allowances

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many workers (a) in total, (b) who are single, (c) who are married and (d) with children do not claim the full value of their tax allowances due to low earnings; and if he will estimate the value of the unclaimed allowances. [9936]

Mr. Jack: The table shows the number of individuals in 1995–96 with some earnings from employment or self-employment, including individuals under 18 and pensioners, who have no income tax liability. Some of the people in the table have gross earnings in excess of the basic tax allowance but have no tax liability due to tax reliefs and deductions which can be set against taxable income. About 1.8 million of the 2.9 million non-taxpaying married individuals have taxpaying spouses.

Individual's marital status	Number millions
Single with no children	0.8
Single with children	0.3
Married with no children	1.3
Married with children	1.6
Total	4.0

The estimates are based on information projected from the 1993 family expenditure survey and are therefore provisional.

It is not possible to provide a meaningful total of unused allowances without a specification of the method to be used for combining allowances available at the marginal tax rate and those available at 15 per cent.

Taxpayers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the number and percentage of (a) basic rate and (b) higher rate taxpayers in each English county for the most recent year for which figures are available. [12604]

Mr. Jack: The table provides estimates for 1993–94, the latest available year for which information can be provided below the United Kingdom level.

Employment Statistics (Lancashire)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the average (a) weekly earnings, (b) total hours and (c) average hourly pay rates for all part-time (i) male and (ii) female workers in each borough in Lancashire. [12840]

Mrs. Angela Knight: It is not possible to provide data for county boroughs.

Earnings for part-time women workers in Lancashire are shown in the table. There are not enough part-time men workers in the sample to provide a reliable estimate.

Part-time women workers on adult rates, pay not affected by absence: April 1995

Lancashire
Average gross weekly earnings	£104.66
Hourly earnings excluding overtime	£5.08
Average total hours worked	19.6

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list on the basis of (i) the Government's unemployment benefit count and (ii) the labour force survey (a) the number in employment in the United Kingdom, (b) the number unemployed, (c) the number economically inactive and (d) the unemployment rates in the United Kingdom, for each quarter between 1979 and the end of 1984. [13076]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Estimates available from the labour force survey are shown in the table.

Economic activity in the United Kingdom

	In employment	Unemployed	Economically inactive	Unemployment rates (percentage)
Spring 1979	24,765,000	[2]1,490,000	15,924,000	5.7
Spring 1981	24,153,000	[2]2,583,000	16,274,000	9.7
Spring 1983	23,490,000	[2]2,957,000	17,065,000	11.2
Spring 1984	24,019,000	[3]3,030,000	16,794,000	11.2
Spring 1984[1]	—	[3]3,216,000	16,608,000	11.8

[1] Since 1984 the definitions used in the Labour Force Survey have been fully in line with international recommendations. Prior to 1984 the definition of unemployment was based on a one week job search period and from 1984 was based on a four week job search.

[2] The Labour Force definition of unemployment is based on a one-week job search period.

[3] The ILO (International Labour Organisation) definition of unemployment is based on a four week job search period.

Information from the monthly claimant unemployment count on levels and rates of unemployment in the United Kingdom can be obtained from the Nomis database accessed by the House of Commons Library.

Unemployment

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to produce figures on the number of individuals who have been out of work for more than six months, who do not appear in unemployment statistics. [13354]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Analyses of the number of people who have been out of work for more than six months are routinely available for both official measures of unemployment—the claimant count and the internationally standard ILO definition. Copies of the relevant publications can be obtained from the House of Commons Library.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchquer what projections his Department has made of the impact on employment of entry into economic and monetary union by Britain. [13440]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 25 January 1996, Official Report, columns 312–13.

Women's Earnings

Ms Jowell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the estimated number of women by region earning less than (a) £1.75 per hour, (b) £2 per hour, (c) £2.50 per hour and (d) £3 per hour in each year since 1990. [11492]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 31 January 1996]: The information requested is set out in the table.

Nolan Committee

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will refer to the Nolan Committee the issue of the financial links of people who are being considered for appointment as ambassadors. [13476]

The Prime Minister: There is no need to do so. This is already covered by the terms of reference.

Local Authorities (Equity Portfolios)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 1 February Official Report, column 1121, on the purchase by local authorities of shares in privatised companies, what duties are owed by councils and their advisers to council tax payers which constrain their ability to build very unbalanced portfolios, with special reference excluding certain classes of equities. [13942]

The Prime Minister: Local authorities are free to invest their funds how they choose, subject to their general duty of prudence and other matters set out in professional guidance issued by the accounting bodies. Where authorities place their general funds in investments which are not approved under regulations, receipts from the disposal of those investments are treated as capital receipts. Local authorities' use of capital receipts is controlled through the capital finance system.

Libya (Sanctions)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 46, what factors led to Her Majesty's Government being unable to estimate the cost to British trade of sanctions against Libya; and if he will make it his policy to implement structures to allow such estimates to be made in situations where sanctions are imposed in the future. [13222]

The Prime Minister: It is not possible to distinguish which elements in the overall fall in British exports to Libya over the past five years are attributable to the UN sanctions and which other factors such as the decline of the Libyan economy and lower oil prices.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 6 February. [12275]

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 6 February. [12277]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

HEALTH

Biomedical Research

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research his Department has carried out into characterisation of the enantioselective metabolism of metoprolol by CYP2D6 expressed in yeast; what results and conclusions have been arrived at to date; and if he will make a statement; [13071]

(2) what evaluation his Department has made of a template model of the CYP2D6 active site by experimental testing of compounds with a recombinant human CYP2D6; what results and conclusions have been arrived at; and if he will make a statement; [13069]

(3) what research his Department has carried out into the function of aspartic acid 301 in cytochrome P4502D6 catalyst; what results and conclusions have been arrived at to date; and if he will make a statement; [13068]

(4) what research his Department has carried out in respect of a differential regioselective metabolism of metoprolol by two human c.DNA-derived CYP2D6 proteins; what results and conclusions have been arrived at to date; and if he will make a statement. [13070]

Mr. Malone: None. Research commissioned within the Department's policy research programme is set out in "Centrally Commissioned Research Programme" and "Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commissions 1994–95", copies of which are available in the Library.

The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council. The MRC is an independent body receiving its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Personal Information

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the disclosure of personal medical records of individuals to outside agencies, with special reference to detective agencies; and if he will list the agencies to which such records have been disclosed in the last five years; [13416]

(2) was assessment he has made of the extent to which (a) general practitioners and (b) hospitals are selling personal medical records to private detective agencies; [13417]

(3) what representations he has received urging that measures be brought forward to prevent personal medical records being sold to private detective agencies; and if he will make a statement. [13401]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman) on 5 December 1995, Official Report, column 196. I have received correspondence from hon. Members and others about the confidentiality of health records and have answered a number of questions on this subject in the House. The information sought about disclosures to agencies outside the national health service is not available, but these are generally to agencies such as social services departments to enable joint care and treatment to be delivered effectively. The sale or disclosure of information to a detective agency, without a patient's consent, would be a breach of confidence and may be actionable under civil and criminal law.

Hypothermia

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths due to hypothermia were recorded in each of the health authority regions in each of the last five years. [13381]

Mr. Horam: The information is shown in the table.

Number of deaths with a mention of hypothermia (ICD[1] 991.6) by health region of usual residence, 1990–1994

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total value of all schemes currently agreed in the NHS for the financial year 1995–96 under the private finance initiative; and what is the target for 1996–97. [13247]

Mr. Horam: So far, in the financial year 1995–96, £116 million-worth of schemes, each over £1 million capital value, have been approved under the private finance initiative by the national health service executive for the NHS in England. This brings the total value since the launch of the PFI to over £220 million in England. This excludes schemes whose individual capital value is under £1 million, which are not recorded centrally. We do not impose a PFI target upon the NHS, but we expect that the sums will increase substantially in the coming year.

Secure Units

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of secure units available to accommodate juveniles who commit serious crimes, by region. [13176]

Mr. Bowis: The regional distribution of available secure units is shown in the table.

Social service inspectorate regions	Units
Northern	11
Central	[1]5
Southern	7
London	2
Total	25

[1] Includes Glenthorne centre in Birmingham run by the Youth Treatment Service.

In addition, two existing units in the Central region are temporarily closed for building work. Six new units are being constructed as part of the national development programme—two in Northern region, one in Central region, two in Southern region and one in Wales.

NHS (North Staffordshire)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the extent of underfunding in the NHS in North Staffordshire; and if he will make a statement. [13724]

Mr. Horam: North Staffordshire health authority's planned 1996–97 revenue allocation of £202.5 million represents a real terms increase of £2.5 million or 1.3 per cent., which was more than the national average.

This shows our commitment to bring North Staffordshire closer to its weighted capitation target of £206.2 million as soon as possible.

NHS Funding

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what replacement formula for resource allocation working party he uses to link NHS funding to local needs. [13723]

Mr. Horam: The RAWP formula was replaced by a new weighted capitation formula which uses forecast resident population figures which are then weighted for age, need and geographical variations in cost. The measure of need in the formula takes the form of two separate needs indices: one for general and acute services and the other for psychiatric services.

Cancer

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the United Kingdom have died of oral cancer since 1989; what are the figures for (a) lung, (b) breast and (c) prostate cancer; and how many of those who died were over the age of 60 years. [13788]

Mr. Horam: The number of deaths from oral, lung, breast and prostate cancer in the United Kingdom since 1989 are published in "World Health Statistics Annual", copies of which are available in the Library.

Opposed Measures

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a list of all the measures approved by Parliament since 1979 on patient care and choice and value for money which were opposed by Her Majesty's Opposition (a) on Second or Third Reading, (b) in Committee and (c) on Report; and if he will make a statement. [13121]

Mr. Horam: The list of measures which the Opposition have voted against includes:

The establishment of the general practitioner fundholding scheme—NHS and Community Care Act 1990

The abolition of regional health authorities—Health Authorities Act 1995

A full list is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Intensive Care

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many adult intensive care beds were available in each year from 1988–89 to 1990–91 in the (a) Northallerton, (b) York, (c) Scarborough, (d) Harrogate, (e) Bradford, (f) Airedale, (g) Calderdale, (h) Huddersfield, (i) Dewbury, (j) Leeds Western, (k) Leeds Eastern, (l) Wakefield, (m) Pontefract, (n) Barnsley, (o) Doncaster, (p) Rotherham and (q) Sheffield district health authorities. [13423]

Mr. Horam: The information is shown in the table:

Average daily number of available beds in intensive care wards other than for children or elderly patients

	1988–89	1989–90	1990–91
Northallerton	5	4	4
York	13	14	14

Note:
Boundary and organisational changes may mean that the data are not strictly comparable with the latest bed availability information.

Emergency Care

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review arrangements for emergency care of patients outside hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [13595]

Mr. Horam: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has asked the chief medical officer to undertake a review of the organisation and delivery of emergency care services outside hospital, to ensure that care delivered to patients is seamless across the primary, secondary and community care sectors. My hon. Friend the Minister for Health informed chairmen of national health service trusts and health authorities in a letter dated 10 January, copies of the subsequent guidance (EL96)3) issued to chief executives of NHS trusts and health authorities are available in the Library.

Long-term Care Leaflet

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of producing the leaflet on long-term care, "Moving into a Care Home". [13792]

Mr. Bowis: The cost of producing a leaflet on long-term care will depend on the arrangements for production, printing and distribution. These arrangements have yet to be finalised.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Places (Costs)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average cost of an (a) assisted place and (b) a place in the state secondary sector in (a) 1992, (b) 1993, (c) 1994 and (d) 1995. [13164]

Mrs. Gillan: The information requested is given in the following table for England. Data for the current year 1995–96 are not yet complete. The available figures are not directly comparable: those for maintained places exclude capital and certain other costs which may be subsumed in the assisted place figures.

	Average cost of assisted place[1]	Average cost of maintained secondary place[2]
Year[3]	£	age 11–15 £	post–16 £
1992–93	3,405	2,724	4,358
1993–94	3,544	2,775	3,864
1994–95	3,688	2,741	3,761

[1] includes remission of annual tuition fees and incidental expenses e.g. uniform and travel grants and meals.
[2] figures represent the recurrent national average education Standard Spending Assessment (SSA) per pupil.
[3] figures relate to academic years for assisted places and financial years for maintained secondary school places.

Youth Training Schemes (Greater Manchester)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many accidents and fatalities have occurred involving people placed on youth training schemes in the Greater Manchester area in the last five years. [13167]

Mr. Paice: A total of 445 accidents involving people placed on youth training programmes were reported within the area covered by the six Greater Manchester training and enterprise councils for the period 1 January 1991 to 31 January 1996. No fatalities involving people placed on youth training programmes were reported in this area during the same period.

School Selection Procedures

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of school selection procedures in individual (i) European Union and (ii) Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries. [13187]

Mrs. Gillan: My right hon. Friend is fully aware of the potential benefits of sharing information and good practice with our European Union and Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development partners in this and other areas.

Comprehensive Schools (Streaming)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what number and percentage of comprehensive schools currently use (a) streaming (b) setting by subject and (c) mixed ability teaching. [13490]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is not collected by the Department. However the Office for Standards in Education paper "Class Size and the Quality of Education" published in November 1995, a copy of which is in the Library, contains relevant information derived from the large sample of schools whose inspection data were available at that date. The report indicated that some 62 per cent. of secondary school classes were formed on the basis of ability—sets or streams. Further details are given in table 12 of the report.

Schools (Computers and Homework)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools have a computers and homework policy. [13557]

Mr. Robin Squire: Matters concerning homework are for individual schools to determine. The information is not collected centrally.

Manufacturing Apprentices (Greater Manchester)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total number of apprentices in manufacturing industry in the Greater Manchester area for each year since 1979. [13492]

Mr. Paice: The information is not available.

Overseas Students

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what annual income is generated by overseas students at United Kingdom universities. [13737]

Mr. Forth: The requested information is not held centrally. However, a recent report for the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals on the economic impact of international students in United Kingdom higher education estimated that in 1992–93 international students contributed at least £716 million to the UK economy.

Wages (Yorkshire)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if she will list the lowest wage advertised in Rotherham jobcentre for each month from June 1994 to the present time. [13573]

(2) what were (a) the lowest and (b) the highest wages advertised in each jobcentre in Yorkshire in each year since 1990. [13614]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Denis MacSnane, dated 5 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about wage rates advertised in Jobcentres in Rotherham and Yorkshire more widely.

The Employment Service does not keep a record of wage rates advertised by Jobcentres.

However, we did carry out research on vacancies in February 1994 which gave the following estimates for Great Britain, based on those vacancies for which wages and hours were given (ie not those open to an element of negotiation). These show that at that time 11% of vacancies were for hourly rates of pay of £2.50 or below, 47% for £2.51–£3.50, 27% for £3.51–£4.50, 8% for £4.51–£5.50 and 7% for over £5.50. Research on vacancy circulation is being carried out at present and is expected to be published by the summer. It is expected to give some further, limited information on wage rates of jobcentre vacancies.

I hope this is helpful.

University Students (Northumberland)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students in the Northumberland education authority commenced university in the current academic year; and what the figure was five years ago. [13487]

Mr. Forth: Centrally held information on student numbers is not available at local education authority level. The following table shows the number of new mandatory awards and discretionary awards made to higher education students by Northumberland local education authority in the academic year 1988–89 and in 1993–94, the latest year for which data are available.

New higher education awards made by Northumberland local education authority

Academic year	1988–89	1993–94
Mandatory awards	960	1,927
Discretionary awards	113	34
All new higher education awards	1,073	1,961

Primary Education (Greater Manchester)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to increase her Department's expenditure on primary education programmes in the Greater Manchester area. [13493]

Mr. Robin Squire: Within the programme of grants for education support and training allocations to local education authorities in the Greater Manchester area focused on primary education will increase by £270,000 in 1996–97. Other GEST grants relevant to all schools, and the £43.7 million increase in education standard spending assessments, may also be used to increase spending on primary education if that is these authorities' priority.

EU Task Force on Multimedia

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the names, countries and interests of the members of the EU task force on multimedia in education. [13556]

Mr. Robin Squire: This task force on educational software and multimedia is composed of officials from directorates general within the commission. I am writing to the hon. Member with the details.

Internet (Children's Access)

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what different approaches she has evaluated, with special reference to blocking software, for preventing children (a) at school and (b) at home from gaining access to unsuitable material via the Internet. [13924]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department has recently announced plans to evaluate Internet services for education, including software and other means of protecting children from undesirable materials. Similar evaluation is taking place under the Education Departments' super-highways initiative, which includes projects covering both schools and homes. The National Council for Educational Technology issued separate guidance for teachers and parents in February 1995.

School Places (Parents' Choice)

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent assessment she has made of the proportion of parents who gain a place at their first choice of school (a) nationally and (b) in Leeds. [13178]

Mrs. Gillan: This information is not collected centrally. Surveys commissioned by the Association of Metropolitan Authorities in 1992 and by The Times newspaper in 1993 suggested that some 90 per cent. of parents gained a place at their first choice school. No figures are available on the proportion of parents gaining a place at their first choice school in Leeds.

University Funding

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the change in funding to universities between 1989–90 and 1994–95 in constant prices. [13670]

Mr. Forth: Funding from the Department for Education and Employment for higher education, including maintenance grants to students, increased by more than 23 per cent. in real terms at 1993–94 prices during the period 1989–90 to 1994–95.

Jobcentres (Armed Forces Vacancies)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if she will make a statement concerning the use of jobcentres to advertise vacancies in the armed forces; [13366]

(2) what guidelines have been issued to the managers and staff of jobcentres concerning the proposal to advertise recruitment to the armed forces in jobcentres; if he will place a copy of these guidelines in the Library; and if he will make a statement; [13367]

(3) what training has been given to the staff of jobcentres in relation to the recruitment needs of the armed forces; and if he will make a statement. [13393]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 5 February 1996.

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about the use of Jobcentres in Armed Forces Recruitment.

Following the publication of the Defence Cost Study, "Front Line First" which proposed, amongst other things, the transfer of the initial stages of Forces recruitment to Jobcentres, the Ministry of Defence sought the help of the Employment Service in improving the cost-effectiveness of its recruitment into the three Services.

Six month recruiting trials were conducted in 1994/1995 in Liverpool, Edinburgh, Greenwich, Gloucester, Norwich and Swansea, of different ways in which Jobcentres could advise people about employment opportunities in the Forces and undertake the early stages of the recruitment process. The trials were completed successfully and although we will not be the sole source of recruits for the Forces, Jobcentres will in future play an important part.

Guidelines, outlining the new partnership arrangements were issued to my Jobcentres in November last year. These guidelines have recently been updated and are also in the process of being incorporated in our publication, the Guide to Job Broking, copies of which are available in the Library.

Briefing/training events were held for my Jobcentre people, in conjunction with Armed Forces Careers Office Project Managers', prior to the national implementation of these arrangements.

The Employment Service is keen to introduce jobseekers to all the options available to help them in their search for work and I believe that these new arrangements will both give unemployed people access to a wider range of opportunities and provide an effective service to the Armed Forces.

I hope this is helpful.

Pre-school Provision (Norfolk)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will estimate the capital cost of providing early years education for all four-year-olds in the county of Norfolk when (a) one quarter of such pupils attend nursery schools or classes as currently operated and half attend play groups under arrangements recognised by the Pre-School Education Alliance and (b) half attend each type of provision, together with the method of such funding and the type of accommodation to be provided. [13991]

Mr. Robin Squire: The capital costs of providing a nursery education place for all four-year-olds in Norfolk will depend on the circumstances of individual providers.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will estimate (a) the number of four-year-olds in the county of Norfolk whose parents or guardians will be eligible to apply for vouchers and (b) the number of full-time equivalent adults required to staff all providers at current statutory or recommended staff-pupil ratios for half-time pupils (i) when one quarter of the children are attending nursery schools or nursery classes as currently operated, and three quarters play groups operating under arrangements recognised by the Pre-School Education Alliance and (ii) when half attended each type of provision; and what is the annual salary bill in each case. [13996]

Mr. Squire: We estimate that the parents of some 9,300 four-year-olds in Norfolk will be eligible to apply for a nursery education voucher. The number of full-time equivalent adults required to staff all providers will depend on the number of providers and the size of the groups therin. The annual salary bill will depend on the salary costs of individual adults.

Nursery Education Vouchers

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if nursery education vouchers for parents of four-year-olds in receipt of income support, family credit or disability working allowance will be treated as income for the purpose of calculation of benefit. [11709]

Mr. Roger Evans: I have been asked to reply.

The answer is no.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those regulations laid since 1990 which have required compliance cost assessments. [12863]

Mr. Freeman: Details of compliance cost assessments issued since November 1993 on regulations are set out in the following Command Papers:

1 November 1993 to 30 June 1994: Cm 2719

1 July 1994 to 31 December 1994: Cm 2881

1 January 1995 to 30 June 1995: Cm 3075

Further Command Papers listing compliance cost assessments issued in the preceding six months will be published at six-monthly intervals.

Details of compliance cost assessments issued prior to November 1993 are not centrally available.

SCOTLAND

Housing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what restrictions are placed upon a tenant's right to buy a local authority house if that house has been fitted with a community alarm system. [12220]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Under section 69 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987, any public sector landlord may apply to the Secretary of State for consent to refuse to sell a dwelling to a tenant seeking to exercise the right to buy if the dwelling has features which make it suitable for occupation by persons of pensionable age. Each application is considered on its merits. The presence of a community alarm system is one of the factors which may be taken into account in deciding whether to grant consent.

Cruden Bay (Landfill)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list representations made in opposition to the date of the public inquiry into the planning application lodged by Caird Evered for a landfill at Cruden bay; [12250]

(2) what estimate he has made of the strength and basis of the opposition in Cruden bay to the date of the public inquiry into the planning application lodged by Caird Evered for a landfill at Cruden bay; [12249]

(3) if he will outline the history of the application being submitted by Caird Evered for a landfill at Cruden bay currently the subject of a public inquiry; and what amendments to the application have been accepted by the inquiry reporter; [12248]

(4) if he will make a statement on the interval between the lodging of a planning appeal for a landfill at Cruden bay and the holding of a public inquiry to consider this appeal. [12251]

Mr. Kynoch: The detailed information requested cannot immediately be supplied because the appeal papers are currently with the reporter.

I shall therefore write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the new unitary councils in Scotland currently negotiating with his Department over the introduction of the pilot scheme for nursery vouchers. [12516]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: In their public responses to the August 1995 consultation, the following councils expressed an interest in discussions with the Scottish Office on the possibility of involvement in the pilot:

North Ayrshire
South Ayrshire
South Lanarkshire
East Renfrewshire
Clackmannanshire
Borders
Highland
Western Isles
Argyll and Bute

Discussions have been held with these and other councils.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much the nursery voucher scheme will cost to administer annually. [11557]

Mr. Robertson [holding answer 14 January 1996]: The cost of administering the nursery voucher initiative from August 1997 will depend on the cost of a contract to be let by competitive tender.

School Boards

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department has spent on overseeing the election of members of school boards in each academic year since their introduction. [12502]

Mr. Robertson: The Scottish Office does not incur expenditure directly in overseeing the election of members to school boards as, under the School Boards (Scotland) Act 1988, responsibility for school board elections is a matter for education authorities.

Water Leakage

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made over the last five years of leakage from the public water supply on a comparable basis to those figures that have been produced by the privatised water companies in England and Wales. [13421]

Mr. Kynoch: An assessment was made in the report, "An Assessment of Demands and Resources at 1994", which was published by the Scottish Office in July 1995. The figures contained in the report are broadly comparable to those published by the privatised water companies in England and Wales. Copies of the report are in the Library.

Housing Budget

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will reply to the hon. Member's letter of 27 December concerning next year's housing budget for Edinburgh. [13618]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: A reply has been sent to the hon. Member today.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent on external consultants in the tendering process of the private finance initiative in each year since its introduction (a) in real terms and (b) in cash terms disggregated by (i) legal fees, (ii) publicity costs, (iii) accountancy fees and (iv) management consultancy fees. [10964]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 22 January 1996]: Of the sectors in which private finance initiative projects have gone out to tender since the 1992 autumn statement, the only area in which the Scottish Office and its agencies have had direct responsibility for managing the tendering process is motorways and trunk roads. External consultancy costs were incurred in that field in relation to the advertisement, tendering and negotiation of PFI contracts only in 1995–96, and are shown in the table.

	Estimated cost £000
Legal	0
Publicity costs	30
Accountancy	330
Management consultancy	550
Total	910

Information on such costs to other public bodies in Scotland is not held centrally.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the aggregate total of vessel capacity units of the Anglo-Spanish vessels; [13136]

(2) what is the aggregate total of vessel capacity units of the 30 Anglo-Dutch vessels; [13137]

(3) what is the aggregate total of vessel capacity units of the United Kingdom registered and licensed fleet of over 10 fishing vessels. [13138]

Mr. Baldry: Following the introduction of the Merchant Shipping (Registration of Shipping) Regulations 1993, SI 1993 No. 3138, the Registrar General of Shipping and Seamen no longer collects details of shareholdings in UK companies owning British-registered fishing vessels. This means that it is not always possible to be sure exactly which vessels are owned by Spanish or Dutch interests. However, we estimate that at 31 December 1995 there were 103 vessels with a significant Spanish interest, accounting for around 55,000 VCUs and 39 vessels with a significant Dutch interest, accounting for some 31,000 VCUs. This compares with an aggregate total of approximately 657,000 VCUs for the UK over-10 m licensed fleet.

Munitions Dumping

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of environmental contamination of fishing grounds in the Irish sea arising from the leakage of toxic materials from wastes and surplus explosives dumped into the sea off the British coast. [13348]

Mr. Baldry: The Department carries out a routine monitoring programme to assess the level of contaminants in coastal waters, including those which are part of the Irish sea. The results are published annually and show that fish are safe to eat. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has carried out an investigation of the former Beaufort's dyke munitions dumping area. An interim report of the survey's findings was published on 8 January. Copies of the report are in the Library.

European Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on which occasions in the last three years officials have vetoed draft EC legislation on the grounds that a fiche d'impact had not been correctly prepared. [13638]

Mr. Boswell: The correct preparation of fiches d'impact is a very important part of our consideration of proposals for EC legislation. It is one of the factors taken into account when Minister consider the UK's negotiating position on a particular proposal.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he will be taking to ensure that the welfare of animals is given proper consideration at the forthcoming intergovernmental conference. [14221]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In 1992 we secured a declaration, attached to the Maastricht treaty, on the need to pay full regard to the welfare requirements of animals when drafting and implementing Community legislation on the common agricultural policy, transport, the internal market and research. That was a significant advance; the time has now come to build on it. We will be asking our European partners to use the opportunity of the intergovernmental conference to add a protocol to the treaty of Rome placing a formal legal obligation on the Council of Ministers to give full regard to considerations of animal welfare in the exercise of its powers on agriculture, transport, research and the single market.

Integrated Administration and Control System

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the arrangements for IACS applications in England and Wales in 1996. [14222]

Mr. Baldry: The UK deadline for submitting IACS applications in 1996 will again be the latest possible date of 15 May.

The IACS explanatory booklets and form will be issued in March. We have consulted the industry closely on the documentation and this year, for the first time, we are introducing a separate booklet and form for livestock farmers who have no interest in the arable area payments scheme. Other changes to the format of the text have been made to make it as helpful and as easy to follow as possible, given the complex nature of the rules. As last year, farmers will be sent a full printout of their 1995 declaration of forage, arable and other land areas, which they must check to ensure the entries are still valid and enter any necessary changes. In addition, this year, they will receive a copy of this printout to keep for their records.

The latest date for applying for new field numbers so that they can be returned in time for farmers to lodge their 1996 IACS applications will be 1 March. Where changes to field boundaries occur after this date, applications for field numbers should accompany the IACS application form.

I strongly urge farmers to consider now whether they need new field numbers and not leave applying to the last minute.

Departmental Cash Limits

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes are proposed in his Department's cash limits for 1995–96. [14223]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Parliamentary approval is being sought for a supplementary estimate for class III, vote 3—Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food: operational expenditure—during which the cash limit will be increased by £6,385,000 from £402,545,000 to £408,930,000. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit will then be reduced by £4,672,000 from £408,930,000 to £404,258,000. Within this provision, the cash limit will be reduced by £1,622,000 as a result of a transfer to vote 4, by a transfer of £2,600,000 to the Office of Science and Technology to cover the cost of redundancies arising among staff of the Biotechnology and Biological Science Research Council seconded to Horticulture Research International and by a transfer of £450,000 to the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland for the decommissioning of nephrops vessels.

In addition, vote 3—operational expenditure—will be reduced by a further £1,877,000 from £404,258,000 to £402,381,000. This is a result of a transfer to class III non-voted expenditure on supplementary credit approvals.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class III, vote 4—Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food: departmental research, advisory services and administration, executive agencies and certain other services—will be increased by £3,622,000 from £330,408,000 to £334,030,000. The £3,622,000 arises as a result of a transfer from vote 3 where it is reflected as reduced provision of £1,622,000 and by end-year flexibility of £2,000,000. The gross running costs limit for the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will decrease by £11,954,000 from £334,694,000 to £322,740,000.

Conservation Schemes

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the annual expenditure figures and forecasts for the (a) countryside access scheme, (b) environmentally sensitive areas, (c) farm conservation grant scheme, (d) farm woodland premium scheme, (e) habitat scheme, (f) nitrate sensitive areas, (g) moorland scheme, (h) organic aid scheme and (i) countryside stewardship for each year between 1990–91 and 1997–98. [13636]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 5 February 1996]: The information is as follows. Figures relate to England.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Al Yamamah II

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial guarantees were offered to Rolls-Royce and British Aerospace in connection with Al Yamamah II. [12984]

Mr. Oppenheim: On grounds of commercial confidentiality the Export Credits Guarantee Department does not publicise details of individual firms' business without their prior approval.

Overhead Power Lines

Sir Mark Lennox-Boyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will reject the application by Norweb to install overhead power lines between Claughton and Wennington; and if he will make a statement. [13563]

Mr. Page: No application has yet been received from Norweb. The position remains as given in my letter of 10 January to my hon. Friend.

Arms Trade

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the figures for the imports and exports of arms manufactures in the United Kingdom for each of the last 10 years. [13571]

Mr. Oppenheim: Information on United Kingdom trade in defence equipment is published in "UK Defence Statistics" which is available in the Library of the House.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in which parliamentary constituency the companies receiving regional selective assistance offers of £200,000 or more since 1991–92 are located. [13900]

Office of Fair Trading

Mr. Congdon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes will be made to the cash or running costs limits to the Office of Fair Trading. [14217]

Mr. Lang: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class IV, vote 8 will be increased by £345,000 from £19,450,000 to £19,795,000. The increase, which is required to meet additional costs of litigation, will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Congdon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make an announcement on the level of ECGD cover. [14216]

Mr. Lang: I am pleased to announce that the amber zone budget, which controls the level of new commitments on markets where ECGD exposure is already concentrated or the risks are high, will be set at £3.8 billion in 1998–99.

Amber zone budget levels for 1996–97 and 1997–98—£3.2 billion and £3.5 billion respectively—were announced in the Chancellor's November 1994 Budget statement. This further confirmation of the rising trend serves to reaffirm this Government's continuing support for United Kingdom project exporters.

Departmental Cash and Running Cost Limits

Mr. Merchant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes will be made to his Department's cash and running costs limits and external financing limits for 1995–96. [14219]

Mr. Lang: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class IV, vote 1—programmes and administration—will be increased by £44,811,000 from £1,233,341,000 to £1,278,152,000.

This net increase results from the provision of £52,900,000 in respect of UKAEA restructuring, £2,240,000 to reflect agreed changes to Nirex payments, £2,193,000 to meet the funding requirements of executive agencies, £227,000 to reflect the net effect of the transfer of gas and oil measurement branch to the Office of Gas Supply and transfers of £300,000 from Property Holdings in respect of the relocation of the Nottingham industrial tribunal office and £77,000 from the FCO in respect of international subscriptions. These increases are offset by reductions of £3,000,000 in energy programmes, £2,303,000 in support for business, £723,000 for laboratory privatisation and contractorisation, £1,100,000 in running costs and by the machinery of government transfer from the Department for Education and Employment—class V, vote 1—of running costs of £6 million which will be carried forward for use in 1996–97. The increase will be accounted for by a reduction in provision for the non-voted redundancy payments scheme of £19,900,000 with that remaining being charged to the reserve. As a result, there will be no increase to the planned total of public expenditure.

Within this total, the gross running cost limit for the Department of Trade and Industry is being reduced by £1,662,000 from £364,627,000 to £362,965,000. This change reflects machinery of government transfers from the former Employment Department—class V, vote 1—totalling £608,000 and the Cabinet Office: Office of Public Service—class XVIII, vote 1—totalling £1,044,000, plus an agreed reclassification of £20,000 capital expenditure as running costs. This has been offset by a transfer to class XVIII, vote 1 of £434,000, by a transfer of £1,800,000 to class IV, vote 10 in respect of the transfer of the gas and oil measurement branch to the Office of Gas Supply, and by a reduction of £1,100,000 to offset earlier claims on the reserve.

Additionally, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVIII, vote 2—science—will be increased by £2,600,000 from £1,292,852,000 to £1,295,452,000 to enable the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council to meet the cost of certain redundancies at Horticulture Research International. The increase is offset by a similar reduction in class III, vote 3 and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure. The opportunity of the supplementary estimate is also being taken to switch resources between certain subheads of the vote.

A reduction of £2,300,000 is made in the external financing limit of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority from minus £10,300,000 to minus £12,600,000 to support the increased provision for UKAEA restructuring.

The EFL of Nuclear Electric is reduced by £15,000,000 to £272,000,000 to £257,000,000 resulting from agreed changes to provision of Nirex payments. Nuclear Electric's EFL is currently under review and may be changed at a later date.

Office of Gas Supply

Mr. Merchant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes will be made to the cash limits and running costs limits for the Office of Gas Supply. [14218]

Mr. Lang: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class IV vote 10, Office of Gas Supply, will be increased by £1,000 from £6,540,000 to £6,541,000 and the gross running costs limit by £1,975,000 from £6,190,000 to £8,165,000.

The increase is required to cover the transfer of the gas measurement branch from the Department of Trade and Industry and other running costs associated with the introduction of competition into the gas supply market. The increase in running costs is offset by fees received by GMB.

Holidays

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his most recent estimate of how many employees in the United Kingdom would receive an increase in their holiday entitlement in the event of the Government losing their case in the European Court against implementation of the European directive on working time. [13365]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number would depend on the conditions of entitlement set by each member state. Many employees in Great Britain who are not entitled to the holiday periods specified in the directive are likely to have worked for their employers for less than a year.

Opposed Measures

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a list of measures approved by Parliament since 1979 on the deregulation of the market economy, competition and the economic base of the country which were opposed (a) at Second or Third Reading, (b) in Committee and (c) on Report by Her Majesty's Opposition; and if he will make a statement. [13123]

Mr. Lang: I regret to say that the information as requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a list of measures approved by Parliament since 1979 on industrial relations, labour market mobility and flexibility and the governance of trade unions which were opposed at (a) Second or Third Reading, (b) in Committee and (c) on Report by Her Majesty's Opposition; and if he will make a statement. [13119]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information as requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Power

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the advantages of extending the availability of public information and the provision of public document retrieval rooms in the nuclear power electricity generation industry. [13391]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 February 1996]: Considerable amounts of information about the nuclear power electricity generation industry are made available to the public, by the industry, by the Government in publications such as the 1995 White Paper "The Prospects for Nuclear Power in the UK" and by the industry's regulators. In addition, members of the public registering for the UK public offer will be sent information about British Energy, including an offer prospectus.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations have taken place with the EC regarding the proposed privatisation of nuclear power generated electricity. [13390]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 February 1996]: The Government advised the European Commission of their proposals for the nuclear power generation industry following the nuclear review and are keeping them informed of progress.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the advantages for the privatised part of the nuclear power generation industry to have a segregated fund to meet obligations on decommissioning and waste disposal; and what guidelines on the amounts of such funds he has issued. [13285]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 February 1996]: The nuclear review, published in May last year, concluded that segregated funds are the best way of ensuring public confidence that the parts of Nuclear Electric and Scottish Nuclear to be privatised will meet their long-term decommissioning liabilities.

The Government have therefore indicated that as part of the privatisation a segregated fund will be established to cover British Energy's long-term decommissioning costs. A funding company will be established in Scotland, independent of the nuclear stations' owners. The funding company will be owned by an independent trust, and will enter into a contract with the privatised companies under which it will receive funds to meet long-term decommissioning costs. These arrangements will come into effect on privatisation. The final details, including the size of the fund, are under discussion.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the privatisation of British Nuclear Fuels plc; and what negotiations have taken place in respect of a segregated fund for the liabilities of the Magnox reactors following privatisation. [13287]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 February 1996]: The White Paper "The Prospects for Nuclear Power in the UK", Cm 2860, made it clear that the Government would not want to rule out privatisation on BNFL as an aim in the longer term. It also concluded that, while a nuclear generator was publicly owned, there was no practical benefit from a segregated fund to meet nuclear liabilities. Magnox reactors will remain in the public sector after privatisation.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations his Department has received alleging that privatisation of nuclear power generation will impact adversely on safety standards. [13288]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 February 1996]: Many submissions to the nuclear review raised the issue of safety and there is a continuing interest in safety issues. The advice of the independent Health and Safety Commission during the review was that the current regulatory system ensured a high level of safety and that there was no need to change it in any fundamental way on account of privatisation. In reaching the decision to privatise parts of the industry the Government considered the possible implications for safety very carefully. Safety is, and will remain, of paramount importance for both the Government and the nuclear industry.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of the advantage of increasing the numbers of staff employed in the nuclear installations inspectorate following nuclear privatisation; what representations he has received on the need to do this; if he will make a statement. [13289]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 February 1996]: Staffing levels within the nuclear installations inspectorate are a matter for the Health and Safety Executive which is the body responsible for making arrangements for the enforcement of safety legislation. HSE does not currently consider that extra resources will be necessary to ensure safety standards are maintained in a privatised industry. In their White Paper setting out the conclusions of the nuclear review the Government confirmed that they would ensure that the NII has all the resources necessary to do its job effectively.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what comparative research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated in respect of other countries relating to (i) the statutory powers and (ii) the staff required to ensure safety in nuclear power generation. [13290]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 February 1996]: No such research has been commissioned or evaluated. Nuclear safety is a national responsibility and legal and administrative arrangements for regulating and managing the nuclear power industry and for ensuring its safe operation have developed from such widely differing legal bases in the countries with nuclear power plant that such comparison is unlikely to be productive.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the work force of Nuclear Electric in each year since 1990; and what assessment his Department has made of efficiency savings that are possible without compromising safety. [13291]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 February 1996]: These matters are addressed in the annual report and accounts of Nuclear Electric's efficiency savings are a matter for the company. The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate has confirmed that there is no inherent conflict between safety and efficiency and I am confident that Nuclear Electric's current high safety standards will be maintained.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the licences that have been issued by the nuclear installations inspectorate since May 1975 to the (a) advanced gas-cooled reactor, (b) pressurised water reactor and (c) Magnox nuclear power generation sites; if he will list those licences that must still be issued; and if he will make a statement. [13361]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 February 1996]: The tables list all the current nuclear site licences for sites of AGR, PWR and Magnox nuclear power generation plants in the UK and give the date of issue of the most recent version of the site licence. As a result of restructuring of Nuclear Electric plc and Scottish Nuclear, new licences will be required for all those sites listed which are currently operated by them. Those sites listed which are operated by BNFL will not require new licences.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the safety record of nuclear power generation among OECD countries with (a) publicly owned and (b) privately owned nuclear industries. [13362]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 February 1996]: My Department does not have access to figures on other OECD countries which would enable the nuclear safety record of publicly or privately owned nuclear power generating industries to be compared. However, the World Association of Nuclear Operators has stated that it is aware of no evidence to suggest that the type of ownership has any bearing on the level of safety achieved.

Exporting Firms

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the number of firms which have begun exporting since May 1995; and how many firms were exporting at that date. [13592]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 5 February 1996]: The latest available information was given to the hon. Member in my answer on 19 December 1995, Official Report, column 1086. There are no official estimates of the number of firms which have begun exporting since May 1995.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Nigeria (Police Training)

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 December, Official Report, columns 1073–74, how many Nigerian police officers received training in the United Kingdom in the maintenance of public order in (a) 1990 and (b) 1991; which United Kingdom police force provided the training; and which Government Department was responsible for funding the training. [13349]

Mr. Hanley: Two Nigerian police officers received training in the maintenance of public order in 1990 and one 1991. All three were trained by the Greater Manchester police force. Funding was by the ODA.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 December, Official Report, columns 1073–74, what was the nature of the training provided in the United Kingdom in 1990 and 1991 for members of the Nigerian police in the maintenance of public order. [13380]

Mr. Hanley: The training covered the theoretical and practical aspects of command and control in serious public disorder situations, including instruction in teaching shield tactics, with emphasis on the minimum use of force.

Zanzibar and Tanzania

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 522, to the hon. Member for Stretford, what appropriate actions he sought and what response he has received from the Zanzibari and Tanzanian authorities. [13796]

Mr. Hanley: We remain concerned about the discrepancies in the results of the Zanzibar elections. My right hon. and noble Friend Baroness Chalker raised this during her recent visit to Tanzania and emphasised to the Tanzanian authorities the need to establish a constructive dialogue between Government and Opposition in Zanzibar.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the public and private organisations, including non-governmental organisations and academic institutions, which have received funds by way of (a) the European Union's PHARE programme and (b) the know-how fund; what were the sums of money awarded; and if he will make a statement. [13394]

Mr. Hanley: Information in the form requested is not readily available on either the PHARE programme or the know-how fund. For the know-how fund it could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Detailed information on both programmes is set out in the following publications, copies of which have been, or are being, placed in the Library of the House:

The KHF's 1994–95 annual report and latest list of approved projects;

The most recent PHARE annual report; and,

A profile of PHARE funding in the period 1990–1994.

Pakistan

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to ensure that part of the overseas aid budget for Pakistan is directed towards the education and the rehabilitation of bonded children; and if he will make a statement. [13392]

Mr. Hanley: The problem is a cause for continuing concern. We therefore welcome recent measures by the Government of Pakistan to tackle it, such as the national project for rehabilitation of child labour. We are considering, through the European Union, how best to assist and are focusing our bilateral aid on improvements in basic services, such as education, which help tackle some underlying causes of child labour.

TRANSPORT

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the cost of rail privatisation; if he will breakdown its main components; and if he will make a statement. [8868]

Mr. Watts: Costs incurred to date by the Department, the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising and the Office of the Rail Regulator are as follows. They include running costs and consultancy costs.

	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96[1]
DOT	1.0	6.7	[2]13.5	14.2	14.3
OPRAF	—	—	2.4	16.6	21.3
ORR	—	—	1.4	9.0	5.8
Total	1.0	6.7	17.3	39.8	41.4

[1] Estimated costs to 31 December 1995.
[2] Includes £1.5 million contribution by DOT to the costs of setting up OPRAF and ORR prior to formal appointments of the Franchising Director and Rail Regulator.

In addition, British Rail and Railtrack have incurred costs linked to privatisation, including expenditure on assets such as computer equipment and associated systems. These are as follows:

	BR/Railtrack (£ million—cash)
1991–92	—
1992–93	—
1993–94	92.2
1995–96[1]	72.0

The privatisation process now has considerable momentum and the sales achieved so far will yield proceeds in excess of £2 billion.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if franchise agreements for the first three franchised lines specifically preclude the replacement of rail services with bus services. [13971]

Mr. Watts: The franchise agreement requires the franchise operator to run railway services; it may not replace these with bus services. Where, in exceptional circumstances, it is unable to operate the specified railway services, the operator is required to take reasonable steps to provide alternatives, which may include bus services.

Exhaust Emissions

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review exhaust emission requirements under the MOT requirements. [12903]

Mr. Norris: I am satisfied that the MOT test is effective in controlling unnecessary emissions from vehicles. However, we keep the operation of the system under review.

Coastguard

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the amount of overtime worked in each month since the creation of the Coastguard agency; [13375]

(2) what action has been taken to secure the retention of the Coastguard rescue helicopter base at Lee on the Solent; [13379]

(3) how he proposes to recruit to the post of Chief Coastguard; [13377]

(4) what steps are being taken to fill the current vacancies among operational Coastguard officers; [13374]

(5) what changes he has introduced to provide Coastguard cover from Chichester to Beachy head, including changes in the staffing arrangements to cover (a) incidents and (b) public education in maritime and coastal safety matters. [13376]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Coastguard agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Ms Joan Walley, dated 6 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about Coastguard operations.

The monthly amounts spent on overtime for the Coastguard Agency since its creation are as follows:

April	74,413
May	82,613
June	80,636
July	84,962
August	81,076
September	76,764
October	77,995
November	71,255
December	74,016
January	63,700
February	104,483
March	76,880
1995–96
April	78,544
May	113,785
June	105,191
July	99,987
August	108,836
September	93,639
October	100,166
November	82,369
December	72,959

The Coastguard Agency is actively negotiating with the Ministry of Defence to retain facilities for future Coastguard Helicopter operations at HMS DAEDALUS.

The post, which falls vacant on the present Chief Coastguard's retirement in June, is being filled by open competition under normal Civil Service rules. The advertisement which appeared in the national press on 25 January has been drawn to the attention of serving Coastguard Officers who are eligible to apply.

The Coastguard Agency maintains a continuing recruitment programme. During the past 12 months it has appointed 29 new Coastguard Officers.

(a) The response to coastal incidents between Chichester and Beachy Head is the responsibility of Auxiliary Coastal Rescue Teams under the coordination of the Solent Coastguard Rescue Centre. There have been no changes to these arrangements in this area.

(b) Since the retirement of the Newhaven and Shoreham Sector Officer this responsibility has been effectively covered by Sector Officers based at Littlehampton and Hastings.

Helicopters (Portland)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to maintain permanent helicopter coverage for Portland and the mid-channel area; and if he will make a statement. [13378]

Mr. Norris: The interdepartmental helicopter review group, established to examine the national requirement for helicopter for search and rescue and how this might most effectively and efficiently be met, is due to submit its report to Ministers shortly. On the basis of its conclusions, further consideration will be given to future deployment. This will include the future of the Coastguard helicopter provided at Portland.

British Rail (Safety)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects each of the British Rail infrastructure service units to complete the preparation of its contractor's safety case. [13231]

Mr. Watts: Each of the six track renewal companies and seven infrastructure maintenance companies, successors to the infrastructure service units, has completed the preparation of its contractors' safety cases. Railtrack plc, as the employer for the contracts, has accepted them.

Driving Licences

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the effect of European Union proposals on (a) the form and (b) the valid period of future United Kingdom driving licences. [13482]

Mr. Norris: The second directive on the driving licence requires the inclusion of additional information on the current United Kingdom licence and the repositioning of some of the existing material. A current EU proposal, if adopted, would allow the introduction of a plastic credit card style-licence containing a photograph. There are no proposals to change the validity periods of driving entitlement, but a card licence would be renewable every 10 years.

London Lorry Ban

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further measures he plans to exclude heavy lorries from central London between the hours of 7 am and 11 pm. [13759]

Mr. Norris: None. The number of heavy goods vehicles crossing the central cordon dropped from 32,000 in 1983 to 10,000 in 1993, the latest year for which figures are available.

Bus Services (Disabled Access)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he will take to ensure access for the disabled to public bus services in the Greater Manchester area. [13480]

Mr. Norris: The Government will be bringing forward regulations under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to require that all new buses coming into service from the date determined in the regulations must be fully accessible to disabled people, including those who travel in wheelchairs.

These regulations will apply to buses in the Greater Manchester area, as they will throughout the country.

Vehicle Regulations

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to bring forward amendments to the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations. [13676]

Mr. Norris: Amendments are made regularly to the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations, some to reflect changes in European type approval standards, others for the benefit of road safety or environmental protection.

London to Luton Railway Service

Sir Graham Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guaranteed level of service will be required on the London to Luton inter-city route after privatisation; what is the current level of service; and what assessment he has made of the level of service which will be provided after privatisation. [13627]

Mr. Watts: Services between London and Luton are predominantly provided by Thameslink, rather than the inter-city service, which is provided by Midland main line. Accordingly, it will be the passenger service requirement for Thameslink which will safeguard the level of service. That PSR has yet to be set. The PSR for Midland main line leaves the level of services to the commercial judgment of the franchisee.

At present on weekdays, Thameslink operates 136 trains per day between London and Luton and 133 trains per day between Luton and London, Midland main line operates 16 trains per day between London and Luton and 15 between Luton and London.

The level of service above the PSR to be provided after privatisation will be a matter for the franchise operator. In evaluating bids for franchises the franchising director is required to take account of bidders' commitments to providing service levels beyond those specified in the PSR. Franchisees for the first three franchises have committed themselves to provide service levels over and above the PSR and the Government expect bidders for other franchises to offer similar commitments.

Roads (Greater Manchester)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the road building programme in the Greater Manchester area. [13481]

Mr. Watts: Following the recent review of the trunk road programme the list of road schemes in the Greater Manchester area is as follows:

Schemes under Construction

M66 Denton to Middleton Contract 2 (Advance Side Roads)

M66 Denton to Middleton Contract 4 (M66/M62 River Irk)

Schemes expected to start 1995–96 to 1996–97

M66 Denton to Middleton Contract 1 (Denton to River Medlock)

Main Prgoramme Schemes

M63 junctions 6–9 widening

M66 Denton to Middleton Contract 3 (River Irk to River Medlock)

A6 (M) Stockport North/South Bypass

A6 (M)–M56 Manchester Airport Link–West

A57/A628 Mottram–Tintwistle Bypass

A62 junctions 12/18 improvement (replaces M62 Relief Road scheme withdrawn from the programme)

Longer Term Programme

A6 Disley and High Lane Bypass

A5225 Wigan–Westhoughton Bypass

The longer-term programme comprises those schemes, which, although required, are not of the highest priority nationally. They will be taken forward only as the main programme is completed.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what funding his Department has provided for maintenance of the trunk roads network in the Greater Manchester area between 1992 and 1995. [13479]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. James Callaghan, dated 6 February 1996:

As you know, the Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what funding his Department has provided for maintenance of the trunk road network in the Greater Manchester area between 1992 and 1995.

Expenditure on maintenance was as follows:

1992–93: £38.194 million

1993–94: £27,513 million

1994–95: £31,395 million

1995–96: £17,771 million (to date).

Maintenance programmes are determined to meet needs on the basis of continuous review of the condition of the network.

I hope this is helpful.

Traffic Congestion (London)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for avoiding traffic congestion in central London. [13736]

Mr. Norris: Improvements to the M25 and to the north circular road will encourage traffic to avoid passing through inner and central London. Within the central area itself a range of measures is being pursued, including tight controls over the provision of parking within new developments, improved signalling and traffic control, better co-ordination of streetworks, stricter enforcement of on-street parking, and improved signing on the inner ring road.

Oil Pollution

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many prosecutions have been pursued during the last five years in response to criminal or irresponsible action leading to oil pollution of seas and coastal waters; and what assessment he has made of the adequacy of current regulations and sanctions. [13117]

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 24 January, Official Report, column 270, and on 31 January, Official Report, columns 807–8.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department has had with British Airways in connection with its planned relocation of its cargo centre on the north-west fringes of Heathrow airport. [13302]

Mr. Norris: British Airways' cargo centre is currently located on the southern side of Heathrow airport and is being redeveloped on that site. The Department's transport security division has been in contact with British Airways to discuss the incorporation of aviation security requirements in this project.

M25

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which bridges crossing the M25 will have to be widened to accommodate the additional lanes planned between junctions 12 and 16; and if he will make a statement. [13301]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Andrew Mackinlay, dated 6 February 1996:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr John Watts, has asked me to reply to your parliamentary question about the proposed widening of the M25 between Junctions 12 and 16 and the likely effect on bridges.

We have two separate proposals to widen this section of the M25. Between Junctions 12 and 15 there are no bridges which would have to be widened in order to accommodate the additional lanes planned. The widening would be within the current highway boundary.

For the section between Junctions 15 and 16, we are investigating several options for widening. These may involve the widening of some of the 8 overbridges and 7 underbridges but it is not possible to say at this early stage how many would be affected.

Blue Bell Hill Tunnel

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost of the tunnel under Blue Bell hill that forms part of the channel tunnel rail link project. [13904]

Mr. Watts: Union Railways' estimate is just over £70 million at 1994 Q3 prices. The actual cost will depend on detailed design by the successful bidder.

Railways (Working Hours)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes the Health and Safety Executive has recently authorised in working hour arrangements for safety critical staff in the railways industry. [13805]

Mr. Watts: None. The Health and Safety Executive is not required to authorise working hour arrangements on the railways. However, under the Railways (Safety Critical Work) Regulations 1994, employers have a duty to ensure that any staff who undertake safety critical work do not work such hours that would be liable to cause fatigue which could endanger safety.

The Health and Safety Commission has recently consulted on a draft approved code of practice which would give practical guidance to employers on their duty, including guidance on carrying out a risk assessment before making any changes to existing working time patterns.

A303, Stonehenge

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he received the report of the chairman of the round table conference on the A303 at Stonehenge; when he will publish it; and if he will make a statement. [13498]

Mr. Watts: The chairman has not yet submitted his report. The report will be published as soon as it is received.

Congestion

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated about the costs of traffic congestion. [13158]

Mr. Watts: The Department has not commissioned research to estimate the national cost of traffic congestion. The cost of congestion at a national level is a very difficult concept to pin down. Estimates have been made of the UK cost of congestion on the basis of work carried out by the OECD some six years ago. However, the method used contains a number of gross simplifications and the figures are consequently unreliable.

Our own traffic and economics assessments focus on appraisal of individual transport projects. They start from the baseline of current congestion levels and estimate the reduction in congestion costs in the area concerned that can be achieved by implementing the project. These estimates are backed up by an on-going extensive programme of research on methodology.

Traffic Accidents (Poor Eyesight)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the existence of a relationship between traffic accidents and poor eyesight; and what statistics it maintains. [13752]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 6 February 1996]: There are no specific statistics on the relationship between poor eyesight and road traffic accidents because drivers do not have their eyes tested after accidents unless required to do so by the police on suspicion that they cannot meet the legal eyesight standard. The Department however accepts the view of medical experts that poor eyesight is a danger to road safety, and follows their advice in setting minimum eyesight standards for driving.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of staff employed by his Department or related agencies in each of the travel-to-work areas of Carmarthen, South Pembrokeshire, Haverfordwest, Fishguard and Cardigan on (a) 31 March 1979, (b) 31 March 1990, (c) 31 March 1992, (d) 31 March 1995, (e) the latest available figure and (f) the estimate for 31 March 1997. [13299]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 5 February 1996]: Details of the numbers of staff recorded in departmental computer records as employed in the Department and its agencies in the travel-to-work areas of Carmarthen, South Pembrokeshire, Haverfordwest, Fishguard and Cardigan for the years 1990, 1992, 1995 and February 1996 are set out in the following table. Figures for 1979 are not available except at disproportionate cost. Estimates for 31 March 1997 are yet to be formulated.

Haverfordwest	26	30	25	25

Railtrack Staff

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people are employed by Railtrack; how many have been made redundant in each year since Railtrack was set up; and if he will make a statement. [13219]

Mr. Watts [holding answer, 5 February 1996]: On 1 February, Railtrack employed 11,382 staff. During the financial year 1994–95, six employees were made redundant; to date, no employees have been made redundant in 1995–96.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list those police forces which run units dedicated to enforcing heavy goods vehicle safety; and what were the staff numbers in each of those units; [13243]

(2) if he will list by police force the current budget dedicated to enforcement legislation relating to heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles. [13275]

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Central Community Relations Unit

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all organisations in receipt of funding from the central community relations unit in 1995 giving, in each case, the amount of funding. [12334]

Mr. Ancram: The central community relations unit provided funding in 1994–95, the last complete financial year for which figures are available, totalling £4,642,941.54. Details of the organisations funded, together with the amount of funding they received in 1993–94, are set out in the following table. It does not include payments from the European regional development fund and the European social fund in respect of European Union measures administered by the central community relations unit.

Action for Community Employment

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which bodies (a) have received and (b) will receive funding from the action for community employment programme in the financial years (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96 and (iii) 1996–97; and if he will list (1) the numbers employed by each body and (2) the amount each body received in (i) to (iii); and in which parliamentary constituency each body is located. [12694]

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Mr. Jim Dowd, dated 30 January 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency to reply to your questions about the Action for Community Employment programme (ACE).

Across Northern Ireland there are currently 237 organisations running ACE schemes. The detailed information you seek is not immediately available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. However, on the assumption that you might find it helpful I have appended a list of ACE schemes operating during 1995/96.

I am sorry I cannot be more helpful on this occasion.

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the funding of ACE schemes in the Province. [12558]

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Rev. William McCrea, dated 30 January 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency to reply to your request for a statement about the funding of the Action for Community Employment (ACE) programme.

As you know, on Monday 11 December 1995 the Secretary of State announced details of the Public Expenditure Plans for Northern Ireland for 1996/7 and the following two years. The announcement referred to the very encouraging performance of the Northern Ireland economy wish unemployment at its lowest for 14 years and employment at record levels. He mentioned also the promise of substantial jobs from recently announced investments by major companies.

Against this background the reduction of £12.5 million in funding for the ACE programme in 1996/7 will help to meet pressures in top priority programmes aimed at promoting self-sustaining economic growth. The targeting of available resources in this way will best meet the needs of the unemployed in the longer term.

I can assure you that the Training and Employment Agency is sensitive to the concerns of the voluntary/community sector and is aware of the possible implications for local communities arising from the reduction in ACE workers.

The Agency has recently written to the Chairpersons of ACE schemes to indicate the level of reduction required in each scheme in order that the programme can live within the resources available to it in 1996/7. Following consultations with a variety of sponsors and others with an interest in ACE, the Agency is happy to allow sponsors to determine how best they might achieve the reduction either individually or collectively. The aim is to keep the consequences of the reductions to a minimum.

I hope that you find this reply useful. I will of course be pleased to provide further information if you would find it helpful.

Office of Legislative Counsel

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff are employed in the office of legislative counsel; at what grades and salaries; and what is its overall annual cost. [12828]

Sir John Wheeler: Twenty-three staff are currently employed in the office of legislative counsel, which includes the statutory publications office.

The breakdown by grade and salary range is as follows:

Grade	Number of staff	Salary range £
First legislative counsel	1	62,000–67,000
2nd legislative counsel	1.4	53,000–58,000
Assistant solicitor	2	37,400–55,802
Senior legal assistant	1	25,964–45,328
Legal assistant	2	25,392–39,324
Deputy principal	1	19,021–29,161
Staff officer	1	15,363–20,634
Executive officer I	2	12,923–17,895
Executive officer II	4	10,982–15,208
Personal secretary	1	9,287–12,592
Administrative officer	4.5	8,778–12,174
Administrative assistance	1	6,928–10,279
Casual administrative assistant	1	6,928–10,279

The overall annual cost of the OLC is £738,000, which includes £514,000 for salaries, £61,000 for accommodation and £163,000 for other running costs.

Firearm Certificates

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the grounds for eligibility for holding a firearm certificate. [12846]

Sir John Wheeler: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 18 January 1996, Official Report, column 716. Under the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 1981, a firearm certificate shall not be granted unless the Chief Constable is satisfied that the firearm could be held without danger to public safety or to the peace;

the applicant is fitted to hold a firearm;

the applicant has "good reason" for the firearm;

the applicant is not prohibited from holding a firearm by virtue of article 22 of the order;

the applicant is 18 years of age or more.

Controlled Secondary and Grammar Schools

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils (a) are currently and (b) have been in each of the last three years educated in controlled secondary and grammar schools. [12552]

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is as follows:

(a) 54,785 pupils are currently educated in controlled secondary and grammar schools (1994–95).

(b) The numbers of pupils educated in controlled secondary and grammar schools for the last three years are as follows:

1991–92: 53,859

1993–94: 54,697

Education Finance

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what capital schemes are planned in the next financial year for education establishments in the constituency of Mid-Ulster; [12553]

(2) what additional resources he plans to provide for education in Mid-Ulster in 1996–97. [12554]

Mr. Ancram: There are two major building schemes planned for 1996–97 in the constituency of Mid-Ulster: a new primary school in Dromore, County Tyrone, on which work has started, and a scheme to extend Holy Trinity primary school, Cookstown.

Additional resources allocated for education services in 1996–97 have been distributed primarily through the five education and library boards and not on a parliamentary constituency basis.

Temporary Employment

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the proportion of employees currently in temporary employment. [12555]

Mr. Ancram: Information on temporary employment is available only from the labour force survey. The latest available information relates to summer 1995 when an estimated 8 per cent. of employees were in temporary employment.

Nursery Education

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he will take to make a nursery place in a state school available to all children under school age. [12556]

Mr. Ancram: It remains the Government's stated long-term policy objective to provide access to one year of nursery education for all children in Northern Ireland whose parents wish it. However, resources are not currently available within mainstream funding to facilitate the expansion of grant-aided nursery education provision.

Youth Unemployment

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of youth unemployment in Northern Ireland. [12557]

Mr. Ancram: The Government are addressing the problem of unemployment among young people through a range of programmes which seek to provide the skills and abilities needed to obtain and retain employment.

These include Training and Employment Agency programmes such as jobskills, currently being used by almost 10,000 under–25s, which provides quality training leading to national vocational qualifications; the action for community employment scheme, 40 per cent. of the participants on which are placed in employment on leaving; and programmes providing work experience opportunities including some overseas.

The agency also works closely with the Department of Education to develop and implement vocational and educational training strategies aimed at helping young people who are entering the labour market for the first time. Over the past year, new courses have been put in place for young people wishing to take advantage of the emerging opportunities in tourism.

For those with higher qualifications, the teaching company scheme administered through the industrial research and technology unit develops young graduates for careers in industry; more than 200 graduates have made use of the scheme in Northern Ireland, a rate of uptake well above the UK average.

The Government are working with the private sector Northern Ireland growth challenge to improve the links between industry and the education system at all levels.

Older Workers

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what special provision is being made for the employment of older workers in the Province. [12579]

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Rev. William McCrea, dated 6 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency to reply to your question about the employment of older workers.

The Agency's network of 31 local offices provides an all-age service for those seeking employment. We also help employers to fill vacancies. If an employer seeks to impose age limits when notifying a vacancy, the Agency encourages the employer to either abandon the age limits or broaden the age band. We also emphasise the experience and reliability of older workers.

If an employer insists on imposing an age restriction for a vacancy which appears unjustifiable, the Agency will not handle it. This has been the position for several years.

On a more general note the Agency is planning to produce a booklet giving practical advice to older people about finding work, training and changing jobs. It will also encourage them to realise the wealth of experience, maturity and skills they possess. In addition we propose to produce a separate booklet for employers highlighting both the benefits of recruiting older people and the unfairness of age discrimination.

I hope that you find this reply helpful. I will of course be pleased to provide further information if you would find it useful.

Independent Schools

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils are currently educated in independent schools, including independent Christian schools; and what the figures are for each of the last three years. [12580]

Mr. Ancram: Nine hundred and forty-one pupils are currently educated in independent schools—1994–95. the numbers of pupils educated in independent schools for the previous three years are as follows:

DEFENCE

Naval Bases (Privatisation)

14. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has held with (a) naval officials and (b) union representatives regarding privatisation measures for naval bases. [12040]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence keeps in regular touch with the whole range of efficiency improvements planned for naval bases.

Mr. David Hart

15. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review Mr. David Hart's security clearance. [12041]

Mr. Portillo: Mr. Hart has gone through the proper security clearance procedure.

Departmental Expenditure

16. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money including the pay of service personnel his Department spends annually in each standard planning region of the United Kingdom. [12042]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Data of MOD equipment expenditure in each of the standard economic planning regions of the UK is available in table 1.9 of "UK Defence Statistics 1995", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. We do not compile regional data for other aspects of defence expenditure.

24. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he is taking to eliminate unnecessary spending in his Department. [12051]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Members for Tyne Bridge (Mr. Clelland) and for Wolverhampton, South-East (Mr. Turner), on 9 January 1996, Official Report, column 93.

Procurement Decisions (Impact)

17. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department makes of the industrial impact of procurement decisions. [12043]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Industrial implications is one of the many factors which are taken into account when procurement decisions are being made.

Former Yugoslavia

18. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many attacks there have been on British military personnel in former Yugoslavia since 1991; if he will indicate from which sources these attacks came; and how many British casualties resulted. [12044]

Mr. Soames: Regrettably, 11 British military personnel have been killed and a further 17 have sustained serious injuries as a result of the activities of the former warring factions.

21. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made by NATO's peace implementation force in former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement. [12047]

Mr. Soames: IFOR is making good progress and is continuing to work closely with the parties in implementing the military aspects of the peace agreement. It has recently verified compliance with the latest deadline to evacuate forces from those areas which are to be transferred to other parties. We expect the implementation process to continue with the compliance of the parties.

Defence Industry

19. Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effect on jobs in the defence industry of reducing United Kingdom defence spending to the European average. [12045]

Mr. Arbuthnot: A reduction in UK defence expenditure to the current NATO European average would result in cuts of over £4.5 billion per year. This would have a drastic effect on the capability of our armed forces and the future equipment programme. The implications for jobs in the defence industry would be severe.

27. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British jobs are sustained by the defence industry; and if he will make a statement. [12054]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Estimates of UK employment dependent on my Department's expenditure and on defence exports appear in table 1.10 of "UK Defence Statistics 1995", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Royal Air Force

20. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average cost of recruitment and training for each new recruit to the Royal Air Force in 1993–94 and 1994–95. [12046]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 9 January 1996, Official Report, column 102, and to the letter sent to him by my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence on 13 December 1995, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House.

22. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the annual cost of Royal Air Force personnel and facilities in Germany. [12048]

Mr. Soames: Our current estimate of the costs for the financial year 1995–96 of RAF units stationed in Germany is approximately £227 million. Roughly half this figure represents personnel costs.

Russian Defence Policy

23. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is being given by the defence planning staff to the implications for UK defence policy of changes in the Russian hierarchy and defence doctrines. [12050]

Mr. Soames: As explained in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1995", the progress of reform in Russia remains an important factor in the determination of our security and defence policies.

Nuclear Weapons

25. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Government's policy in respect of the UK's nuclear deterrent. [12052]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The United Kingdom's independent minimum nuclear deterrent continues to provide the ultimate safeguard of this country's security and to make an important contribution to NATO's strategy of war prevention. The introduction into service of Trident will ensure that the United Kingdom retains a credible and effective minimum deterrent into the next century.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the value of nuclear weapons to Britain's defence. [12031]

Mr. Portillo: Nuclear weapons continue to make an essential contribution to the security of the United Kingdom.

Western European Union

26. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what aims the Government have for their presidency of the WEU. [12053]

Mr. Soames: We intend to concentrate our efforts during the UK presidency on enhancing the WEU's operational capability. In particular, we are taking forward work on establishing a situation centre and intelligence section, seeking to strengthen links with NATO, and developing a coherent and progressive WEU exercise policy.

Royal Yacht

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to his Department of the presence of the royal yacht Britannia at this year's Cowes regatta. [5310]

Mr. Soames: The total operating costs of HMY Britannia for the financial years 1992–93 to 1995–96 were provided in my reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 5 April 1995, Official Report, column 1151. Information on the marginal costs of individual deployments could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Tornado F3 Aircraft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the terms of the lease agreement with the Italian authorities concerning Tornado F3 aircraft; and what non-financial facilities have been made available to the Italian authorities as part of this agreement. [13209]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The lease provides for 24 RAF Tornado F3 aircraft to be loaned to Italy for a period of 10 years for a fee of £100 million. The Italian Government are responsible for all support costs. The lease agreement includes an offset scheme under which Italian industry will be furnished opportunities to compete for defence work to the same value as the lease fee.

Exercise Purple Star

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what alternative to HMS Fearless will take part in Exercise Purple Star. [13115]

Mr. Soames: HMS Fearless remains scheduled to return to operational duties in good time to allow her to take part in Exercise Purple Star.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the planned Exercise Purple Star, scheduled for May 1996, can proceed as envisaged; and if the condition of HMS Fearless has had any significant effect on the preparation of this exercise. [13116]

Mr. Soames: Exercise Purple Star will go ahead as planned, although our contribution has been adjusted slightly to take account of our involvement with the NATO implementation force in the former Yugoslavia. The condition of HMS Fearless, and her current maintenance programme, has had no significant effect upon the preparation of this exercise.

Parliamentary Answers (Diagrams)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) of 31 January, Official Report, columns 755–56, when a diagram as described by the chief executive of the Meterological Office may be reproduced in or with the Official Report. [14042]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The publication of answers is a matter for the Editor of the Official Report.

Boots

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many pairs of boots were issued to Her Majesty's forces during the past year; at what cost; and if he will make a statement. [12276]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from M. J. Roycroft to Mr. Harry Greenway, dated 6 February 1996.

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the issues of boots to Her Majesty's forces, in my capacity as the Chief Executive, Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency (DCTA).

During the past twelve months a total of 291,493 pairs of boots have been issued to units at a cost of £11,124,643 VAT inclusive. These issues cover some 40 or more different types of boot ranging from combat boots to protective footwear. Within these totals 43,620 combat boots (£3,046,826) have been issued for specific operations, including Bosnia. A further 50,963 pairs of boots (£1,962,916) were issued as part of the recently completed deployment plan to equip HM Forces with the new Combat Assault Boot.

If I can be of any further assistance please let me know.

Joint Service Command and Staff College

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the joint service command and staff college will open. [14220]

Mr. Soames: The creation of a joint service command and staff college is a key element in our policy to encourage a more joint service approach to defence issues. It will open, as planned, in September 1997. Major General T. J. Granville-Chapman will be its first commandant, and he will assume responsibility for the project in June 1996.

We shall close the joint service defence college and royal naval staff college at Greenwich, the Army staff college at Camberley and the RAF staff college at Bracknell, in 1997. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence said in his answer to the hon. Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Clifton-Brown) on 19 December 1995, Official Report, column 1107, he has appointed an advisory group to give him advice on the future of the royal naval college at Greenwich. A final decision is not expected until the summer.

The works programme for the new college cannot be completed by September 1997. We are therefore making arrangements for the JSCSC to operate initially at a temporary location, probably at RAF Bracknell. A final decision on the interim site is subject to formal appraisal and consultation. We intend to dispose of the Bracknell site by the end of 1999.

The work so far has shown that Camberley is the most cost-effective and appropriate Ministry of Defence site for the college. We shall be seeking proposals for private sector involvement in the provision of high-quality accommodation—including infrastructure and residential accommodation—associated facilities management for a range of services, and possibly civilian academic support. In exploring the opportunities for private finance, imaginative proposals involving an alternative site that meet our requirements are not ruled out.

Formal consultations with the trade unions and other interested parties will take place before any final decision on the JSCSC is made.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Helplines

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all the helplines, or schemes which include a helpline service, for which his Department provides any funding, stating which are (a) independent organisations, (b) run by his Department or agencies of his Department or (c) of another classification; how many calls each received in each of the last five years; and how much money each received from his Department in each of the last five years. [9803]

Mr. Burt: Full information is not available and can be supplied only at disproportionate cost. However, information is available as follows:

(a) The Department does not provide funding for any outside organisations.

(b) Helplines run by the Department or its agencies are as follows:

Social Security headquarters

Housing Benefit

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will detail for each of the years between 1982–83 and 1995–96 (a) the total cost of housing benefit in Scotland paid to (i) tenants of new towns, Scottish Homes and local authorities, (ii) tenants of housing associations and (iii) tenants of private landlords and (b) the number of households in Scotland receiving housing benefit in each of the above categories. [11140]

Mr. Roger Evans: The available information is set out in the table.

Notes:

1. Figures for recipients have been rounded to the nearest thousand and are averages of four quarters data. Expenditure figures have been rounded to the nearest £ million.
2. Figures for recipients refer to benefit units which may be a single person or a couple.
3. Expenditure figures are not available for 1982-83.
4. Information on Housing Benefit recipients on Scotland is not available prior to 1988-89.
5. Information on the number of housing association tenants was not collected prior to May 1992.
6. Housing association expenditure figures have been estimated from a one per cent. sample of recipients.

Source:

Recipients: housing benefit management information system, quarterly 100 per cent. caseload enquiries taken on the last working day in May, August, November and February.

Expenditure: Department of Social Security planning and finance division.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many young single people aged 16 to 24 years (a) living in the private rented sector and (b) living in self-contained private rented sector accommodation in Scotland currently receive housing benefit; and in each case at what cost. [11161]

Mr. Evans: The latest available figures show that, as at May 1994, there were 15,000 recipients of housing benefit in Scotland who were aged 16 to 24 and living in privately rented accommodation; the estimated total cost of housing benefit paid to this group during the 1994–95 financial year was £41 million. Information is not routinely collected to differentiate between self-contained and non self-contained accommodation.

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of (a) males and (b) females covered by SERPs; and what percentage of the work force it constituted in (i) 1993, (ii) 1994 and (iii) 1995. [12833]

Mr. Heald: Figures are not available for 1994 or 1995. The latest figures available[1] show that in 1992–93, 3.3 million men and 3.2 million women in the United Kingdom would accrue SERPS entitlement[2], representing 22.8 per cent. of the work force[3].

Notes:

[1] Source: 1 per cent. sample of national insurance records.

[4] Information on the workforce is provided quarterly and is a point in time figures. In order to assess the number throughout the year the four quarters have been averaged. The percentage covered by SERPS has then been calculated using the average figure. The breakdown by sex is unavailable.

Social Fund

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money was lent on social fund loans at the last date for which figures are available; how many people have such loans; what is the average loan at the time of issue; and what is the average repayment period. [12834]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information for the period April to December 1995 is set out in the table.

	Budgeting loan	Crisis loan
Number of awards	702,751	621,048
Total amount awarded	£190,294,974	£41,161,827
Average payment	£270.78	£66.27
Average length of repayment for loan repaid during this period	34.7 weeks	14.6 weeks

1. The number of discretionary awards made after review is not included.
2. The repayment terms for social fund loans are designed to be affordable to the applicant. The rate of repayment depends upon the applicant's individual circumstances. Although most loans are repaid within 78 weeks, the period of repayment may be extended up to 104 weeks.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the average time taken to process a claim on the social fund for each year since its inception; and if he will indicate the total number of claims (a) met, (b) refused and (c) appealed against. [12265]

Mr. Evans [holding answer 31 January 1996]: The information is set out in the tables.

1. As claims for maternity and funeral payments are from the regulated part of the social fund there are rights of appeal to a social security appeal tribunal. The grievance procedure for dissatisfied applicants to the discretionary social fund is by review process.

2. The difference between applications received, awards and refusals is due to: applications being withdrawn by applicants; applications where there is no response from applicants; and applications not decided at the time the count was made.

Benefit Overpayment

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the total identified number of cases of overpayment of all forms of benefits in (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1993–94; how many of these cases of overpayment are due to (i) departmental or agency errors and (ii) inaccurate information supplied by applicants; and what is his policy on repayment of benefits overpaid in respect of (i) and (ii). [12843]

Mr. Roger Evans: Such information as is available regarding the number and cause of overpayments is set out in the table.

Year	Total number	Customer error	Other
1993–94	818,073	405,984	412,089
1994–95	996,477	590,218	406,259

The category "other" includes small overpayments where recovery is not pursued, and abandoned cases. Such cases may not be caused through official error. It is not possible to disaggregate the information, except at disproportionate cost. However, the majority of these will be official error overpayments.

In cases where the overpayment is caused by misrepresentation or failure to disclose a material fact, recovery is sought whenever it is appropriate to do so. Where no acceptable offer to repay is forthcoming, recovery is effected either, where the person remains in receipt of benefit, by deductions from benefit or, if benefit is no longer in payment, through voluntary repayment or civil proceedings. Where an overpayment has been caused by official error whether recovery is sought depends on how the error arose. In appropriate cases voluntary recover is sought. Recovery is pursued further only where it is cost effective to do so and there is a right in law of recovery.

Cold Weather Payments

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated total amount of money not paid in cold weather payments in 1994 to pensioners who do not claim income support although eligible, using the most recent take-up figures produced by the Department of Social Security's analytical services division. [13104]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to change the rules under which cold weather payments are made. [13074]

Mr. Evans: There are no plans for major changes to the scheme.

After the end of March each year, we routinely review the operation of the scheme over the previous winter, taking account of advice from the Meterological Office. In particular, we look at the links between weather stations and postcode areas, and as a result minor adjustments are made if necessary.

Back-to-work Bonus Scheme

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimates he has made of (a) the likely revenue effects and (b) the numbers participating in respect of the back-to-work bonus scheme in (i) 1996–97, (ii) 1997–98 and (iii) 1998–99. [13409]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table:

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Estimated gross cost of the back-to-work bonus	£15 million	£45 million	£65 million
Estimated numbers receiving a bonus	60,000	130,000	150,000

(i) Estimates based on 2.1 million unemployed.

(ii) The table shows the gross cost of the back to work bonus scheme. However, once behavioural effects are taken into account we expect that the scheme will be broadly cost neutral. The behavioural effects are very difficult to assess accurately. In particular, the likely take up of the bonus in the first 18 months is very uncertain.

Poverty and Social Exclusion

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the United Kingdom projects to receive funds as part of the EU initiative to combat poverty and social exclusion. [13160]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The United Kingdom permanent representative to the European Union wrote to the European Commission in December seeking further information about its proposals to spend money on projects seeking to combat social exclusion. We have asked the Commission on what legal basis it is funding such projects. No response has yet been received, and Governments have not officially been notified of the Commission's intentions. The UK has already made clear to the Commission its additional scepticism about the value for public money of projects of this kind.

As an issue of principle, it is unacceptable for substantial spending projets to be undertaken without a clear legal basis. Such practices offend against budgetary discipline and undermine member states' own efforts to constrain public spending. Resources within the Community as a whole are finite. It follows that any resources used without the authority of member states will mean fewer resources are available for national Governments to support anti-exclusion projects in member states.

The Government's commitment to providing assistance for disadvantaged people is clear. In addition to spending an estimated £85 billion in this financial year on social security benefits, the Government are already funding many projects to combat social exclusion in the UK through inner city challenge, adult training, health care, housing and literacy programmes.

Pensions Awareness Campaigns

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library copies of (a) advertisements, (b) leaflets and (c) transcripts of television and radio broadcasts used in the pensions awareness campaign in the midlands announced in his press release of 30 January. [13995]

Mr. Heald: Such material as is available will be placed in the Library shortly.

Note:

The Department is, for copyright reasons, unable to provide transcripts of television or radio broadcasts other than radio commercials.

Deaths (Cold Weather)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of people who died as a consequence of the recent cold weather; and if he will break down the figure by assigned cause of death. [13215]

Mr. Horam: I have been asked to reply.

Information about the number of people who died as a consequence of the recent cold weather is not yet available. The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys will be publishing data on excess winter deaths later in the year.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Chernobyl

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of the post-Chernobyl restricted areas have now been designated free from contamination to the extent that animals originating there are deemed fit for human consumption. [13680]

Mrs. Browning: Approximately 94 per cent. of the original area in England which was restricted in 1986 as a result of the Chernobyl accident is now free from contamination such that the animals originating there are totally free from all controls and are fit for human consumption.

In addition, approximately half of the remaining restricted area has been found to be free from contamination but is currently being held under controls due to the open nature of the land and the presence of common grazing.

Sheep Dip

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the development of the research programme on the control of sheep scab and the use of organophosphorus dips. [14420]

Mrs. Browning: My Department has just approved two research projects to investigate alternatives to chemicals such as organophosphorus dips for the control of sheep scab. These will run for three years and cost about £1.2 million. They will form a significant addition to the existing research programme and will be directed to developing and testing new approaches to the identification of possible sheep scab vaccines and identifying the most effective methods of application. Additionally the research will develop models to maximise the impact of future control strategies.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sentencing Policy

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish his White Paper on changes to sentencing; and what assessment he has made of the effect of the proposals on the prison population in England and Wales. [13280]

Mr. Maclean: We intend to publish a White Paper in the spring setting out full details of the Government's proposals on sentencing, including our assessment of their implications for the prison population.

Law on Manslaughter (Defective Vehicles)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to clarify the law relating to manslaughter to enable operators of seriously defective vehicles which subsequently kill to be liable to charges for serious offences. [13274]

Mr. Maclean: The Law Commission is examining the issue of corporate liability for manslaughter as part of its review of the law on involuntary manslaughter. The Government will consider whether to clarify the law in this area in the light of the commission's final report.

Stop and Search Statistics

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons were stopped and searched by police forces in England and Wales during (a) 1989 and (b) 1994 and were subsequently (i) arrested, (ii) cautioned and (iii) charged, broken down by ethnic background; [13464]

(2) how many persons who were stopped and searched since 1989 by police forces in England and Wales and subsequently charged, were convicted, breaking down the figures by ethnicity and gender; [13454]

(3) how many of those persons who were stopped and searched since 1989 by the Metropolitan police in England and Wales and subsequently charged, were convicted, breaking down the figures by ethnicity and gender; [13455]

(4) how many persons were stopped and searched by the Metropolitan police in England and Wales during (a) 1989 and (b) 1994, and were subsequently (i) arrested, (ii) cautioned and (iii) charged, broken down by ethnic background. [13463]

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to her question on 5 December 1995 Official Report, column 212.

Details of the ethnic group of those stopped and searched during 1994–95 will be available shortly.

Police Cautions (Burglary)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 708, how many offenders cautioned each year since 1991 had already been cautioned on two or more occasions. [13431]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not routinely collected. The table below shows results from special studies of those cautioned for indictable offences in one week in each of 1991 and 1994 in England and Wales.

Persons cautioned in study week, 1991 and 1994

Prisons (Compensation and Damages Payments)

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in each of the past 10 years payments for (a) compensation and (b) damages with or without the admission of liability, have been offered by his Department to individuals as a result of disturbances in Her Majesty's prisons; if he will list the number of payments and amounts involved on each occasion; and how many other such claims have been made but refused. [13895]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter for prisons in England and Wales has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given. Responsibility for prisons in Northern Ireland and Scotland is a matter for the Secretaries of State for Northern Ireland and for Scotland respectively.

Letter from Alan Walker to Mr. Jim Dowd, dated 7 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about payments for compensation and damages which have been made to individuals following disturbances in prisons in England and Wales in each of the last 10 years.

This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prisons (Drugs Tests)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many assaults on (a) staff and (b) prisoners occurred before and after mandatory drugs testing took place in (i) February to April, (ii) May to June and (iii) August to October in (1) 1993, (2) 1994 and (3) 1995 and (iv) November to January in (4) 1993–94, (5) 1994–95 and (6) 1995–96. [13898]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alan Walker to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 7 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the numbers of assaults on staff and prisoners for specific periods back to 1993.

Mandatory drug testing began in eight pilot establishments in February 1995. A phased programme to introduce it to all remaining establishments began in September 1995, with 23 establishments performing mandatory drug testing by the end of October and 94 by the end of January 1996.

The information requested is given in the attached table.

[1] Includes attempting, inciting and assisting in an assault.

[2] Provisional information.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refusals there were in respect of mandatory drugs testings in prisons in England and Wales; how many urine samples were provided; of those, how many proved positive for (a) cannabis only, (b) class A drugs only and (c) cannabis and class A drugs; how many days' loss of remission there were consequent on refusals; and how many days' loss of remission there were consequent on positive urine tests for (i) February to April, (ii) May to June, (iii) August to October and (iv) November 1995 to January 1996. [13897]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alan Walker to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 7 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about mandatory drug testing.

Between February and November 1995 some 4961 drug screening tests were carried out under the mandatory drug testing programme. Analysis of results from eight pilot prisons over an eight month period show that of those prisoners tested at random, 30.6% tested positive for cannabis while 3.6% tested positive for Class A drugs. Information on the numbers testing positive for both cannabis and Class A drugs is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The attached table shows the number of refusals to provide a sample and the number of addition days added both as a consequence of refusals and as a result of positive urine tests for the periods requested.

November 1995 to January 1996	2,007	1,298	12	15,792

Number of proven adjudications and punishments of unsuspended additional days for drug offences

	Number of offences	Number of days awarded	Average number of days	Total number of days
Refusal to provide a sample[1]
February to April 1995	15	12	11	127
May to June 1995	29	16	12	191
August to October 1995	32	19	15	290
November 1995 to January 1996	184	98	23	2,225

[1] Includes attempting, inciting and assisting. All figures in these tables are based on provisional information.
The rising numbers of both offences are linked to an increase in establishments performing mandatory drug tests from eight between February and June, to 23 by the end of October and 94 by the end of January.

Public Safety Radio Communications Project

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's involvement in the public safety radio communications project. [13778]

Mr. Maclean: My Department is responsible for managing the public safety radio communications project in close co-operation with representatives of the police and fire services. The procurement, which will be based on the private finance initiative, was formally launched with the appearance of a notice to potential suppliers in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 23 January 1996.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial and manpower resources he is making available to the public safety radio communications project. [13779]

Mr. Maclean: The public safety radio communications project will employ the equivalent of 19 officers plus consultants in 1996–97 at a cost of approximately £1 million. A substantial sum of money, which is commercially confidential, has been put aside as a contribution to the cost of project definition studies, contracts for which are currently the subject of a European-wide procurement exercise.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what timetable was originally planned for the public safety radio communications project and what is the present timetable. [13780]

Mr. Maclean: The implementation of new radio communications systems for the police service in England and Wales, through the public safety radio communications project, is expected to be completed by 2003. This was the original timetable and has not changed.

Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce who will be deputy-chairman of the parliamentary boundary commission for Wales. [14390]

Mr. Sackville: The Lord Chancellor has appointed Mr. Justice Maurice Kay to serve as the deputy chairman of the parliamentary boundary commission for Wales. This appointment is effective until 31 December 1999.

Office of the Data Protection Registrar

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce the outcome of the prior options study of the Office of the Data Protection Registrar. [14391]

Mr. Sackville: The study has concluded that there is still a need for the controls provided by the Data Protection Act 1984, and that these should continue to be performed by the Data Protection Registrar as an independent public body. I am placing a copy of the report of the study in the Library.

TREASURY

Flat Rate Income Tax

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will provide a range of estimates on how a flat rate income tax could operate in the United Kingdom; [12609]

(2) what would be the estimated yield in a full year from a flat rate income tax if (a) the first (i) £7,000 and (ii) £10,000 of each taxpayers income was exempted from tax, (b) no tax allowances or [illegible]ons were allowed against income other then in [illegible] and (c) the income tax rates on the income above the levels in (a) were (1) 10 per cent., (2) 15 per cent. and (3) 20 per cent. [12608]

Mr. Jack: Estimated full-year costs at 1996–97 income levels are given in the table. These estimates include the abolition of mortgage interest relief and tax relief on employees' contributions to occupational and personal pension schemes. Adjustments have also been made to allow for the abolition of reliefs for TESSAs, PEPs, profit-related pay, national savings certificates, employee share schemes and charitable giving.

The estimates do not take into account the substantial behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of such changes nor do they allow for any subsequent changes to the tax system, such as changes to tax relief on employers' contributions to pension schemes or relief for investment income in pension funds. It is assumed that employers' and employees' national insurance contributions would remain as at present.

Single European Currency

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what sums have been allocated to each country in the European Union to publicise the benefits of a single European currency. [12602]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Commission is organising publicity for the single currency, taking into account the circumstances in each member state. Community spending is not allocated on a member state basis. The Commission has confirmed that no publicity campaign promoting the single currency will be launched in the UK.

Protocol No. 11, annexed to the EC treaty, means that the United Kingdom shall not be obliged or committed to move to the third stage of economic union without a separate decision to do so by the Government and Parliament. We will agree to take part in a single currency only if it is in our national interest to do so, given the circumstances at the time.

Customs and Excise (London Airports)

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what action he is taking in connection with the Customs and Excise department at London airports, following the investigation by the adjudicator's office into the case of Dr. A. Molnar of Warwick; [13576]

(2) how many Customs and Excise officials have been dismissed or moved to other posts, following the investigation carried out into the strip and search of Dr. A. Molnar of Warwick at Gatwick airport on 23 March 1995; [13577]

(3) if the recommendation from the adjudicator's office that a number of aspects of current procedures by Customs and Excise officers at London airports should be reviewed has been implemented. [13575]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The adjudicator's recommendations were received by customs on 16 January and are currently being considered by senior customs managers. The adjudicator found that the search of Dr. Molnar was not unreasonable. She recommended that some procedural aspects, including the handling of the complaint, should be reviewed. This is being done and the adjudicator will be informed of the outcome of the review. The adjudicator's findings do not justify the dismissal or transfer of any officials concerned in the case.

Banking and Financial Dealings Act

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning possible amendments to schedule 1 to the Banking and Financial Dealings Act 1971 to Scotland; and what reply he has given. [13816]

Mrs. Angela Knight: None.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated annual saving to business from the Deregulation (Industrial and Provident Societies) Order 1996. [13204]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Smaller societies should save an estimated £3 million a year from the increase in the threshold for a full, professional annual audit.

The longer period within which accounts can be prepared should also lead to savings, but these are more difficult to quantify.

EU Statistical Forms

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the Central Statistical Office forms which have been replaced by forms issued under requirements of the European Community. [13641]

Mrs. Knight: In January 1993 the quarterly and annual sales of industry inquires were replaced by the quarterly and annual PRODCOM inquiries. These inquiries are conducted under a Council regulation approved in 1991 to harmonise statistics on products throughout the EU. The product data are broadly comparable with external trade statistics at a detailed level.

Pension Contributions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in the current year what would be the savings in revenue if pension contributions were allowed at the standard rate only. [12962]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 1 February 1996]: The estimated full-year yield of restricting relief from pension contributions to the basic rate at 1996–97 income levels would be about £790 million. This is based on a projection of the 1993–94 survey of personal incomes and other survey data in line with assumptions in the Budget forecast. It does not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of such changes. The yield represents about 8 per cent. of the total cost of reliefs for pension schemes.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the receipts for advance corporation tax for each of the last 36 months; and what estimate he has made of the total ACT receipts for 1994–95 and 1995–96. [13749]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 February 1996]: Receipts of ACT in 1994–95 were £8.1 billion, and for 1995–96 were forecast at the time of the 1995 Budget to be £9.9 billion. Receipts for each of the last 36 months are as follows:

January	2,913	2,446	2,772
February	90	47	94
March	87	84	100

Mr. Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) of 28 June 1993, Official Report, column 327, on corporation tax repayments. [13762]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 February 1996]: The information is as follows:

Corporation tax repayments

Year	Amount £ million
1992–93	3,248
1993–94	3,071

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will quantify the tax losses which will be made available to Railtrack on privatisation. [13757]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 February 1996]: Details of the tax affairs of identified taxpayers are confidential.

Coal Privatisation

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will quantify the tax losses which will be made available to British Coal on privatisation. [13756]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 February 1996]: Details of the tax affairs of identified taxpayers are confidential.

Tax Relief (Vocational Training)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people claimed tax relief for vocational training for (a) NVQ and (b) SVQ; and what estimate he has made of how many people will claim relief for other qualifications included under training relief measures in the Budget. [13758]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 February 1996]: The number of people claiming vocation training relief in 1995–96 is estimated at 200,000. A breakdown of this figure between those taking courses that qualify towards national vocational qualifications or Scottish vocational qualifications is not available.

It is estimated that up to an additional 20,000 people will claim vocational training relief as a result of the extension to the relief announced in the Budget.

Unemployed Diabetics

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of diabetics are unemployed; and what percentage lose their jobs following diagnosis. [13594]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 6 February 1996]: Information is available from the labour force survey about the number of people of working age who, in response to the survey, say that they have a health problem or disability expected to last for more than a year which affects the kind of paid work they can do. In the summer—June to August—1995, 234,000 people among this group said they had diabetes and, of these, 7 per cent. were unemployed on the International Labour Organisation definition.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the capital cost threshold for a private finance initiative scheme at which his Department becomes involved. [13970]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 6 February 1996]: It is Government policy that the Treasury will not approve any capital projects unless private finance options have been explored, though not necessarily tested in the market place. The level of delegated authority below which Treasury approval is not required is a matter for each Department. There is no set threshold.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Inland Revenue maintains separate records of class 1 and class 1A contributions collected on behalf of the Contributions Agency. [13745]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 February 1996]: The Inland Revenue does not maintain its own separate records of class 1 and class 1A contributions collected on behalf of the Contributions Agency.

PRIME MINISTER

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the criminal incidents since 1985, other than the blowing up of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie, for which Her Majesty's Government attribute responsibility to Libya. [14047]

The Prime Minister: We believe that Libya was responsible for the murder of a number of Libyan dissidents, mainly in the late 1980s, including some in Europe, but none in Britain.

We also believe that Libya may have been involved in other criminal incidents outside the UK, including the bombing of a UTA flight in September 1989. It would not be appropriate to provide further detail.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the total expenditure of his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies on publicity for each of the years (a) 1979–80, (b) 1989–90, (c) 1991–92, (d) 1993–94, (e) 1994–95 and (f) 1995–96 (i) to date and (ii) as estimated for the whole year; what estimate he has made of such expenditure for 1996–97; and if he will break these figures down to indicate expenditure on (1) advertising and (2) press and public relations. [11364]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 January 1996]: For these purposes, my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what is his estimate of expenditure on all forms of hospitality and entertainment by (a) his Department, (b) his Department's agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, for (i) 1979–80, (ii) 1989–90, (iii) 1991–92, (iv) 1993–94, (v) 1994–95, (vi) 1995–96 and (vii) 1996–97. [11453]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 30 January 1996]: For these purposes my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what is his estimate of the expenditure of his Department, his Department's agencies and non-departmental public bodies on all forms of overseas travel, overseas accommodation and other associated expenses for (a) 1979–80, (b) 1989–90, (c) 1991–92, (d) 1993–94, (e) 1994–95, (f) 1995–96 and (g) 1996–97. [11456]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 30 January 1996]: For these purposes my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Prime Minister which Minister (a) took the decision which set the terms of reference for the Scott inquiry, (b) took the decision to appoint Sir Richard Scott to head the inquiry and (c) took the decision to establish the Scott inquiry. [13994]

The Prime Minister [holding answer Tuesday 6 February 1996]: The Government set up the inquiry, as I set out in my parliamentary answer on 16 November 1992, Official Report, column 74-75.

Mr. Cook: To ask the Prime Minister if he will act upon recommendations made in Sir Richard Scott's forthcoming report. [13992]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 6 February 1996]: The Government will consider carefully any recommendations made by Sir Richard Scott.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Refugee Camps, Africa

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list how many UN refugee camps there are currently in Africa; how many refugees are in each camp; what were the figures three years ago; and if he will make a statement. [13620]

Mr. Hanley: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees reports that, at 31 December 1994, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 11.8 million refugees in Africa. The corresponding figure at 31 December 1992 was 5.4 million. Precise information on the population of individual camps is not available.

North Korea

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the appeals by the World Food Programme and the Food and Agricultural Organisation for assistance in alleviating the famine in North Korea; what aid and assistance the British Government have offered those agencies; and if he will make a statement. [13951]

Mr. Hanley: Our policy is to give humanitarian aid where there is a need. We have already donated £150,000 to the flood relief efforts of the United Nations. What is necessary now is to ascertain the scope of the problem in North Korea.

We are therefore funding a secondment to the World Food Programme operation in North Korea, at its request, of two nutritionists from the Save the Children Fund. They will work to and support the WFP country director there. The secondment begins this week.

WALES

Schools (Security)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he proposes to improve security in primary and secondary schools. [12422]

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has established a working group to advise urgently on what should be done to improve security in and around schools. We shall consider the recommendations made by the group.

Osteoporosis

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many consultants there are specialising in the treatment of osteoporosis in each health authority in Wales. [12993]

Mr. Richards: Information relating to the number of consultants working in the NHS in Wales is collected centrally on the basis of specialties recognised by the royal colleges. Osteoporosis is not one of these recognised specialties and the information requested is not available.

Elderly People (Warmth and Safety)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make grants available for older people to undertake the repairs and improvements needed to make homes warm, safe and secure. [13182]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Grants are already available under the home renovation grant arrangements and the home energy efficiency scheme. The new home repair assistance in the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Bill would replace minor works assistance and be of particular help to older people.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning warmth and energy efficiency for elderly people. [13184]

Mr. Richards: There are a number of measures in place to help pensioners in Wales.

The Welsh Office's annual "Keep Warm Keep Well" campaign, run in conjunction with Age Concern Cymru, advises vulnerable people how to minimise the risks of cold weather and what help is available.

The home energy efficiency scheme provides grants for basic insulation measures to people aged over 60, whether they rent, own or are buying their own homes. The number of homes in Wales insulated in 1994–95 under the HEES was 20,808 at a cost of around £3.3 million. In 1995–96 an estimated 29,750 homes in Wales will benefit at a cost of some £4.8 million.

As at 1 February 1996, an estimated 5,546,795 cold weather payments, at an estimated cost of £47,147,754, have been issued.

Rented Housing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what plans he has to encourage the building of homes at affordable rents by the new unitary authorities; [13180]

(2) if he will make available moneys to the new unitary authorities for building homes for older people with special needs and for those on low income. [13181]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Housing associations are now the main providers of new affordable rented homes, including homes for those with special needs. The Welsh Office is currently discussing with the shadow authorities the opportunities presented by the Housing Bill. The Bill allows for the setting up of local housing companies as registered landlords, which could include board members from the relevant unitary authority to undertake the repair and building of homes.

Electricity Cables

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to require provision of underground main electricity supply cables in areas likely to be particularly affected by adverse weather conditions; and if he will make a statement. [13259]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a matter for the companies concerned.

General Practitioners (Patient Lists)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients have been formally removed from registration with their local general practitioners in each of the past five years. [13353]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is not available centrally.

Oil and Gas Licences, Cardigan Bay

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research has been undertaken or commissioned by his Department to ascertain the extent to which licensed discharge associated oil and gas licences in Cardigan bay will add to the pollutant load in the bay; and if he will place copies of the relevant research documents in the Library. [12411]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Supermarkets

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all (a) loans, (b) grants and (c) other payments in excess of £100,000 which have been made in each of the last five years by the Welsh Office to (i) Gateway, (ii) Safeway, (iii) Waitrose, (iv) Morrisons, (v) Kwiksave, (vi) Sainsburys, (vii) Asda and (viii) Spar (UK) Ltd.; and if he will make a statement. [13704]

Mr. Hague: There were none.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Building Control

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which organisations have responded to the draft circular "Local Authority Building Control and Related Services-Approved Inspectors-Uncompetitive Practices"; which organisations supported the publication of the circular; which organisations advised against its publication; and if he will arrange for the responses to be placed in the Library. [12521]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: This was a limited consultation rather than a full public consultation, and in such cases it is not the Department's normal practice to make the responses public by placing them in the Library of the House. Therefore, no statement was made in the consultation letter about publication of the responses, and consultees were not asked whether they wished their replies to be kept confidential. I am not prepared to put the responses in the Library.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the chairman of the National House Building Council about the draft circular "Local Authority Building Control and Related Services-Approved Inspectors-Uncompetitive Practices". [12523]

Mr. Jones: My right hon. Friend has not discussed this circular with the chairman of the National House Building Council.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what complaints he has received about alleged uncompetitive practices in the provision of building control services by local authorities in the last three years; and if he has verified the allegations with the authorities concerned. [12522]

Mr. Jones: I have received a number of complaints about alleged uncompetitive practices in the provision of building control services in the last three years. They were made in strict confidence, and undertakings were given that this would not be breached.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities and other bodies whose bids for single regeneration budget moneys were unsuccessful in both year one and year two. [13140]

Sir Paul Beresford: Listed below, by region, are the names of the local authorities and other bodies who were the bidders for support from the single regeneration budget challenge fund that were unsuccessful in both year one and year two. It should be noted that in many cases the content of the individual bid and the composition of the partnership submitting it were not identical. A number of the organisations listed were also members of partnerships that were successful in round two.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in rank order the second round single regeneration budget bids showing where each local authorities fell in the index of deprivation (a) at local authority level, (b) by census enumeration districts and (c) by the average score of the worst three wards. [13141]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have placed the information requested in the Library of the House.

Water Abstraction Licensing

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to simplify the system of water abstraction licensing. [13673]

Mr. Clappison: A joint DOE and Welsh Office consultation paper, "Proposed amendments to the Water Resources Act 1991 and the Reservoirs Act 1975", was issued in November 1993. It included plans to simplify the system of water abstraction licensing. A number of these proposals were included with the Environment Act 1995, while those not covered by that Act are being considered under deregulation procedures available under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994.

Education Authorities (Spending)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local education authorities in England spent below their capping limits in (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and, in each case, by how much in cash and percentage of total spending. [13443]

Sir Paul Beresford: The local education authorities which budgeted by more than £50,000 below their capping limits in 1994–95 and 1995–96 are as follows:

Commission for the New Towns

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of the Commission for the New Towns. [13893]

Sir Paul Beresford: We are considering what should be the arrangements from March 1998. Suitable enabling provisions are included in part V of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Bill.

Ebbsfleet New Town

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for a new town at Ebbsfleet; and if he will make a statement. [14041]

Sir Paul Beresford: The regional planning guidance for the Thames gateway—the Thames gateway planning framework, RPG9a—identifies Kent Thames-side, including the Ebbsfleet valley, and Stratford and the royal docks in east London, as the two main locations within the area where substantial growth can be expected. It is for the market to respond to these development opportunities. I understand that an application for outline planning permission for a mixed housing and commercial development on a 176 hectare—435 acre—site adjoining the proposed Ebbsfleet international and domestic channel tunnel rail link station has recently been submitted jointly to Dartford and Gravesham borough councils.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls, Cardigan Bay

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking (a) to identify the source of polychlorinated biphenyls recently found at high levels in cetaecan carcases washed up in Cardigan bay and (b) to eliminate polychlorinated biphenyls from the environment of Cardigan bay. [12410]

Mr. Clappison: Long use of PCBs before the ban of production and new use in this country in 1986 means that they still remain at detectable levels within flora and fauna through deposition and food chains in all areas. Investigations of contaminants in stranded cetaceans in Great Britain since 1990 have included 10 carcases at Cardigan bay in which levels of PCBs were comparatively high but similar to those found elsewhere.

Within further attempts to reduce and eliminate PCBs, the Government will be issuing an action plan very shortly, reflecting consultations on proposals to eliminate all identifiable holdings of PCBs by the end of 1999.

River Kennet

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will propose the River Kennet as a special area of conservation. [12404]

Mr. Clappison: The statutory nature conservation agencies are currently considering the representations which have been made during consultation for additions to the list of possible special areas of conservation. The River Kennet is included in these considerations and the agencies will advise in due course as to any additional sites which could qualify as possible SACs.

Gas Safety

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times the Health and Safety Executive has been contacted by tenants with concerns about the safety of gas appliances since the introduction of the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1994; and how many visits it has made to premises. [13705]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested is not available.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many offences have been committed under section 33 of the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974 in relation to the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1994 since their introduction. [13706]

Sir Paul Beresford: Between 31 October 1994, when the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations came into force, and 31 March 1995, the latest date for which information is readily available, the Health and Safety Executive secured two[1] convictions under the regulations.

Note:

[1] Provisional.

Rents

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals were made by (a) tenants and (b) landlords against rent officers' determinations of rent broken down into secure tenants of housing associations and regulated tenants of private landlords by rent office district. [13707]

Mr. Clappison: Rent assessment committees do not record for statistical purposes whether the appellant against a rent officer determination is the landlord or the tenant. Nor do they distinguish between secure tenants of housing associations and regulated private tenants. Statistics are available for the total number of registered fair rent appeal cases dealt with by rent assessment committees by rent regulation area. A table giving figures for each of the last six years is given:

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the weekly rate of (a) requests for information and (b) applications for grants under the home energy efficiency scheme in (i) December 1994, (ii) January 1995, (iii) December 1995 and (iv) January 1996; [13975]

(2) how many applications for grants under the home energy efficiency scheme have been received in the current financial year to the latest available date. [13976]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Information is collected on a monthly basis, and is as follows:

Month	Requests for information	Grant applications
December 1994	23,519	19,479
January 1995	25,303	33,774
December 1995	22,277	44,867
January 1996	36,089	84,723

Between 1 April 1995 and 2 February 1996, 536,669 applications for grant under the home energy efficiency scheme were made.

Housing Transfers

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the names of the authorities to be included in the programme for housing transfers by councils in 1996–97; and if he will make a statement. [14299]

Mr. Curry: I am today announcing the names of the five authorities that will be able to proceed, on a voluntary basis and subject to the approval of their tenants, with proposals to transfer their housing stock to private sector landlords in 1996–97. The programme of large-scale voluntary transfers will comprise almost 21,000 dwellings valued at £172 million.

This reflects the Government's commitment to a continuing programme of transfers as a means of generating private finance to repair and improve the condition of social housing and to increase diversity and choice for tenants.

The five authorities which have successfully gained a place on the programme, together with the intended recipient housing associations are as follows:

(a) Berwick-upon-Tweed borough council (2,750 dwellings) to Berwick Housing Associations;

(b) Lichfield district council (4,955 dwellings) to Lichfield District Housing Association;

(c) South Staffordshire district council (5,354 dwellings) to South Staffordshire Housing Association;

(d) Stratford-on-Avon district council (5,800 dwellings) to South Warwickshire Housing Association.

(e) West Wiltshire district council (1,958 dwellings) to West Wiltshire Housing Society.

To date, 45 authorities have disposed of all or part of their stock to new landlords and seven more are due to do so by the end of this financial year. In addition to the five authorities listed above, other authorities are working up proposals to transfer. There will be opportunities to add them to the 1996 programme if they make good progress with their proposals over the coming months.

The Government are committed to a continuing programme of transfers and to extending the benefits of transfer to urban and non-traditional housing. We also intend to widen the range of recipient landlords from traditional housing associations to local housing companies, subject to Parliament approving the Housing Bill, and to private sector companies, subject to future legislation. Transfers will remain voluntary and require tenant support, as they do now.

Environmental Action Fund

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to distribute the environmental action fund for 1996–97. [14419]

Mr. Clappison: I have today placed in the Library of the House details of the distribution of environmental action fund for 1996–97: 126 grants in 1996–97 totalling more than £4 million will be made available. Matching funding requirements will ensure that as much again from private sources is channelled into environmental action. I am also increasing the amount ring-fenced for small community projects to £300,000.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of local government in Hereford and Worcester; and when he expects to lay the order for the unitary authority of Herefordshire before Parliament. [13593]

Mr. Curry [holding answer 6 February 1996]: We have accepted the Local Government Commission's recommendation that there should be a unitary authority for Herefordshire on its historic boundaries. We hope to make an announcement soon on the timing of the reorganisation.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the total expenditure of his Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies on publicity for 1995–96 (a) to date and (b) as estimated for the whole year; what estimate he has made of such expenditure for 1996–97; and if he will break these figures down to indicate expenditure on (1) advertising and (2) press and public relations. [11372]

Mr. Willetts: Expenditure on publicity by the Cabinet Office, including the Prime Minister's office and the Office of Public Service, and its executive agencies, excluding Her Majesty's Stationary Office and the Buying Agency, is as follows:

	1993–94 £	1994–95 £
Cabinet Office
Advertising	5,000	60,300
Press and public relations	1,085,400	1,156,300
Other publicity	260,700	406,300
Total Cabinet Office (including NDPBs)	1,351,100	1,622,900
Executive agencies (excluding HMSO and TBA)
Advertising	119,900	167,200
Press and public relations	13,100	37,800
Other publicity	0	0
Total executive agencies	133,000	205,000

Expenditure by HMSO and the Buying Agency, which have a different accounting year, is as follows:

	1993 £	1994 £	1995 £
HMSO and TBA
Advertising	1,494,000	1,776,000	2,297,700
Press and public relations	16,000	8,000	18,200
Other publicity	872,000	876,000	1,062,000
Total HMSO and TBA	2,382,000	2,660,000	3,377,900

Details of expenditure in earlier years is available only at disproportionate cost. Figures for 1995–96 and 1996–97 are not yet available.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what is his estimate of expenditure on all forms of hospitality and entertainment by (a) his Department, (b) his Department's agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, for (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [11500]

Mr. Willetts: Expenditure by the Cabinet Office including the Prime Minister's office and the Office of Public Service, and its executive agencies, excluding HMSO and the Buying Agency, on hospitality and entertainment was £62,100 in 1993–94, and £70,300 in 1994–95.

Expenditure on hospitality and entertainment by HMSO and the Buying Agency, both of which have a calendar-based accounting year, was £72,000 in 1993, £105,000 in 1994 and £97,000 in 1995. This includes expenditure on book launches and associated costs.

Details of expenditure in earlier years is available only at disproportionate cost. Figures for 1995–96 and 1996–97 are not yet available.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what is his estimate of the expenditure of his Department and his Department's agencies and non-departmental public bodies on all forms of overseas travel, overseas accommodation and other associated expenses for (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [11507]

Mr. Willetts: Expenditure by the Cabinet Office, including the Prime Minister's office and the Office of Public Service, and its executive agencies, excluding HMSO and the Buying Agency, on overseas travel, overseas accommodation and other associated expenses was £1,178,000 in 1993–94, and £1,636,500 in 1994–95.

Expenditure on overseas travel, overseas accommodation and other associated expenses by HMSO and the Buying Agency, both of which have a calendar-based accounting year, was £1,539,000 in 1993, £2,110,000 in 1994 and £2,136,000 in 1995.

Details of expenditure in earlier years is available only at disproportionate cost. Figures for 1995–96 and 1996–97 are not yet available.

Deregulation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many of the proposed deregulation measures set out in "Deregulation—The Way Forward" have completed their periods of consultation with relevant interested parties and have been referred to the Deregulation Committee. [13671]

Mr. Freeman: Twenty-four of the 121 proposed deregulation measures set out in "Deregulation—The Way Forward" were identified as possible deregulation orders which might be referred to the Deregulation Committee. Of these, 13 have now been laid before the Committee and one, containing a number of measures to assist building societies, has been enacted.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the 10 most recent measures which he proposes to repeal by way of deregulation orders. [13672]

Mr. Freeman: The 10 most recent proposals for deregulation orders put to the deregulation committee are:

The Deregulation (Resolutions of Private Companies) Order;

The Deregulation (Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1868) Order;

The Deregulation (Parking Equipment) Order;

The Deregulation (Special Hours Certificates) Order;

The Deregulation (Long Pull) Order;

The Deregulation (Motor Vehicles Tests) Order;

The Deregulation (Gaming Machines and Betting Office Facilities) Order;

The Deregulation (Still Birth and Death Registration) Order;

The Deregulation (Industrial and Provident Societies) Order;

The Deregulation (Gun Barrel Proving) Order.

Copies of all these proposals are available in the Vote Office of the House.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

General Certificate of Secondary Education Results

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will (a) provide for 1992 the simple aggregate averages of (i) the GCSE average point scores, (ii) the percentages achieving at least 5 grades A* to C, (iii) the percentages achieving the least 5 grades A* to G and (iv) the percentages achieving at least one grade A* to G of the schools of each 10th group of all maintained schools with 15-year-old pupils when ranked by their average point scores (A* = 7), (b) the same averages for each of those 10 groups of the same schools in 1993, 1994 and 1995, so far as possible in the case of any closures, (c) the number of schools and the total number of 15-year-old pupils in each 10th group in each year and (d) the percentages of each 10th group of these schools that were inspected by Ofsted in the their annual inspections in 1993–94, in 1994–95 and in 1993–95. [12897]

Mrs. Gillan: The following lists for maintained secondary schools in England for 1992, 1993, 1994 and 1995 shows (i) the average GCSE point scores, (ii) the average percentages achieving five or more GCSE grades A* to C, (iii) the average percentages achieving five or more GCSE grades A* to G, (v) the number of schools and (vi) the number of 15-year-old pupils in 10th group ranked by average GCSE point scores in 1992. These figures are based on the school performance tables published in the relevant years. The groups are based on schools that appeared in 1992 and these same schools have been followed through for 1993, 1994 and 1995. The group averages are simple averages which are not weighted by number of pupils in individual schools within a group.

The number of schools inspected by Ofsted is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

Job Advertisements

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many jobs have been advertised in each grade in her Department during the last three months for which records are available; and how many people have applied for each such job. [13833]

Mr. Robin Squire: No permanent jobs have been advertised for external recruitment to this Department during the three months from November 1995 to January 1996.

Departmental Staff (IT Skills)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of civil servants in her Department have had (a) no training in information technology skills, (b) initial awareness training only, (c) initial awareness training and one additional in-service course, (d) initial awareness training and more than one additional in-service course and (e) award-bearing in-service course. [13555]

Mr. Robin Squire: Around 10 per cent. of Department for Education and Employment staff have not yet received training in information technology skills.

Approximately 90 per cent. of Department staff have received at least initial awareness training only.

Information on the proportion of staff who have had initial awareness training only; initial awareness training and one additional in-service course; initial awareness training and more than one additional in-service course; and an award-bearing in-service course is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Local Education Authorities (Expenditure)

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average cost per pupil aged (a) under five years, (b) five to seven years, (c) seven to 11 years, (d) 11 to 16 years and (e) 16 to 18 years in each English local education authority in 1974, 1979, 1990 and the latest year for which figures are available. [13840]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following tables show the net institutional expenditure per pupil in cash and in 1995 prices for English local education authority maintained (a) pre-primary and primary and (b) secondary schools, for 1974–75, 1979–80, 1990–91 and 1993–94, and unit costs for each LEA for 1990–91 and 1993–94, the latest year for which outturn figures are available. The other information requested is not available centrally.

Employment Service (Pay Dispute)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps she is taking to resolve the pay dispute in the Employment Service; and if she will make a statement. [14044]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Nicholas Harvey, dated 7 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the current trade dispute within the Employment Service; responsibility for pay bargaining was delegated to the Agency in January 1994.

The Agency is in dispute with the Civil & Public Services Association (CPSA) over the 1995 pay award to those of our employees in grades represented by that union. These ES people have been paid increases, with effect from April 1995, of between 2.8% and 5.5%, depending upon their individual performance in the year ending March 1995. The majority of them received pay rises of more than 3.7%. We have made clear from the outset our view that these pay awards are fair, and are set at a level that is all the Agency can afford.

The pay awards were in addition to a 2.3% increase, also paid in April, for this group of employees as a consequence of CPSA agreement to a new pay structure for the grades in question.

The Employment Service remains committed to finding an early resolution to the dispute to enable us to resume our normal level of service to the jobseekers who use the 50 offices currently affected by strike action. Whilst we cannot and will not improve the 1995 pay award, we have offered to make specific provision during the 1996 pay negotiations to address particular issues which have been raised by the CPSA. It is for the union to decide whether to take the opportunity presented by the offer to end the dispute.

I hope that this is helpful.

European Union Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on which occasions in the last three years officials have vetoed draft EC legislation on the grounds that a fiche d'impact had not been correctly prepared. [13639]

Mr. Forth: The correct preparation of fiches d'impact is a very important part of our consideration of proposals for European Community legislation. It is one of the factors taken into account when Ministers consider the United Kingdom's negotiating position on a particular proposal.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how he ensures that the negotiating brief for his officials discussing EU legislation takes fully into account the need to minimise the burdens on United Kingdom business. [13708]

Mr. Forth: Guidance on how officials are to apply deregulatory principles when negotiating EC regulations is contained in the booklet, "Getting a Good Deal in Europe". This guidance has been supplemented by the recent publication of official guidance on the preparation of compliance cost assessments, which stresses that likely burdens on business highlighted by UK compliance cost assessments of EC proposals should be integral to the UK's negotiating strategy. Copies of both pieces of guidance are in the Library.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was (a) the number of schools which submitted bids for named projects, (b) the number of schools which had bids carried forward from 1995–96, (c) the number of individual projects for which bids were considered, (d) the total value of projects for which bids are considered, (e) the number of schools which have had an allocation for a project to be started in 1996–97, (f) the number of individual projects which have been approved for start in 1996–97 and (g) the total value of projects to be started in 1996–97 in respect of capital grant for grant-maintained schools in 1996–97. [13967]

Mrs. Gillan: This is a matter for the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member with this information.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance was given to grant-maintained schools on submitting bids for capital grant in 1996–97. [13943]

Mrs. Gillan: This is a matter for the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member with this information.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list those grant-maintained schools where capital grant is being allocated in 1996–97 to meet basic need giving, in each case, the number of additional places being made available. [13962]

Mrs. Gillan: This is a matter for the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member with this information.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the grant-maintained schools which (a) submitted bids or (b) had bids carried forward from 1995–96 for named projects to be funded from capital grant in 1996–97; and, in each case, what was the nature and value of the bid and of any allocation made. [13964]

Mrs. Gillan: This is a matter for the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member with this information.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list those grant-maintained schools which have applied for a significant change of character under section 96 of the Education Act 1993, stating in each case (a) the nature of the change, (b) whether it has been approved and (c) the capital cost associated with the change. [13984]

Mrs. Gillan: The following table lists the grant-maintained schools which have applied for a significant change of character under section 96 of the Education Act 1993, the nature of the change and the Secretary of State's decision. Section 96 of the Education Act 1993 came into force on 1 April 1994 on which date capital costs at grant-maintained schools became the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman to arrange for a reply to be sent to the hon. Member giving the capital costs associated with the changes at the schools.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures are taken to monitor the time taken by agencies with special reference to the School Curriculum Assessment Authority, the Funding Agency for Schools and the Office for Standards in Education, to answer parliamentary questions; and if she will make a statement. [13963]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department keeps a record of all instances when chairmen of non-executive agencies of non-departmental public bodies such as SCAA, the FAS and Ofsted are asked to reply on a Minister's behalf. These records are updated and monitored to ensure that a reply is sent in answer to such a question, usually within one week of the matter being referred to the relevant agency.

Executive agencies reply to questions referred to them within the usual parliamentary timetable for answering written questions.

SCOTLAND

Agriculture Department

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what reductions he estimates will take place in respect of current staffing levels within the agriculture group of the Scottish Office in 1996–97. [12303]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A reduction in the staffing levels across the Scottish Office is anticipated as a consequence of cuts of around 5 per cent. running costs for 1996–97. There will be reductions within the agriculture group, but the details have not yet been determined.

School Transport

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which local authorities in Scotland provide free transport to schools and colleges for pupils beyond the compulsory school leaving age. [12896]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The information requested is not collected centrally.

School Boards

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many teachers of school boards have been appointed; how many have been subject to election by parents; and what the average turn-out was in these elections for each academic year since the boards' establishment in each authority in Scotland. [12503]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The information held centrally for education authority primary, secondary and special schools is as follows:

[1] Only half of parent places on existing school boards fell due for re-election in each of the 1991–92 and 1993–94 rounds of biennial elections. By definition, all parent places were vacant in the initial round of school board elections in 1989–90. Information on the average turnout in contested parental elections is not available for 1991–92 and 1993–94.

1. Information on the 1995–96 round of elections is not yet available.

Scottish Homes (Transfers)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many properties have been transferred to other landlords as part of Scottish Homes' stock transfer programme where there was a ballot of tenants; how many and what percentage of tenants voted in favour of the transfers; and how many voted against the transfers. [13251]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: At 31 January 1996 Scottish Homes had transferred 15,324 properties to other landlords as part of its stock transfer programme. I understand that the chairman of Scottish Homes has written to the hon. Member providing details of the ballots relating to these transfers.

Hypothermia

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many deaths where hypothermia was mentioned on the death certificate took place among (a) men aged 65 years and over and (b) women aged 60 years and over (i) for each month of 1994 by region and (ii) for each month of 1995 by region. [13265]

District and Sheriff Courts

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) on what grounds he proposes to transfer the jurisdiction of Bearsden district court to Glasgow; [13474]

(2) what procedure will govern the closure of Bearsden and Milngavie district court. [13469]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is no proposal to transfer the Bearsden and Milngavie commission area to Glasgow. From 1 April 1996 it will form part of the new East Dunbartonshire commission area. East Dunbartonshire council will then assume responsibility for the district court for that commission area. It is for local authorities to determine where district courts sit within commission areas.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will extend the consultation period on his proposal to change the jurisdiction of Dumbarton sheriff court in order to allow local hon. Members and others to see the consultation paper on this subject; [13466]

(2) what statistical analysis he has carried out to assess how much civil work is carried out from Bearsden and Milngavie in Dumbarton sheriff court; and what would be the impact on Glasgow sheriff court if the proposals in his consultation paper were enacted; [13470]

(3) what are the financial consequences of the proposals contained in the consultation paper on the jurisdiction of Dumbarton sheriff court; [13472]

(4) with which bodies he has consulted on his proposals to change the jurisdiction of Dumbarton sheriff court; for what reasons local hon. Members were not consulted; and what is his policy in this respect on the removal of Bearsden and Milngavie from the jurisdiction; [13473]

(5) how many courts he proposes to construct in the new Dumbarton sheriff court; what area they will serve; and what changes he has made to his plans in this respect in the last six months; [13475]

(6) what will be the change in the number of sheriffs at Dumbarton sheriff court arising from moving Bearsden and Milngavie out of the sheriffdom. [13471]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A consultation paper on proposals to adjust sheriffdom and sheriff court district boundaries following the introduction of the new local authorities was issued by the Scottish courts administration on 29 December 1995 in order to provide information to allow officials to put forward advice to Scottish Office Ministers.

The paper went to sheriffs principal, the Sheriffs' Association, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the new local authorities, police forces, the Crown Office, the Scottish Court Service and interested bodies and organisations such as the Law Society of Scotland and the Scottish Consumer Council. Responses were invited by 2 February 1996. Copies of the paper and the full list of consultees have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

The proposals in the consultation paper cover the whole of Scotland. In respect of the current jurisdictions of Glasgow and other sheriff courts in the area, views were sought on the prospect of transferring Bearsden and Milngavie to Glasgow's jurisdiction and transferring the area around Rutherglen from Glasgow's jurisdiction to that of Hamilton sheriff court. The net effect would be a small reduction in the workload of Glasgow sheriff court and a small reduction in the workload of Dumbarton sheriff court. No immediate change to the permanent shrieval complement at either court would be required. Any change to requirements for the proposed new sheriff court at Dumbarton will be considered during the detailed planning process.

No ministerial decisions have yet been made in terms of the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act 1971, and change to sheriff court districts or to the boundaries of sheriffdoms required to be made by statutory instrument. Changes to the boundaries of sheriffdoms require an affirmative resolution in both Houses.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what inspection service exists to assess the quality of service at Glasgow and Dumbarton sheriff courts; [13468]

(2) if he will make a statement on the (a) relative workloads, (b) waiting times and (c) quality of service of Glasgow and Dumbarton sheriff courts. [13467]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Waiting periods for summary criminal and civil business for Glasgow and Dumbarton sheriff courts and performance of these courts against the quality of service target set for the Scottish Court Service as at 31 December 1995 are shown in the following table:

	Summary criminal waiting period	Ordinary civil waiting period (proofs/debates)	Percentage of quality targets achieved[1]
Glasgow Sheriff Court	21 weeks	12 weeks/8 weeks	97.2
Dumbarton Sheriff Court	10 weeks	12 weeks/6 weeks	100

[1] 24 individual quality of service targets are set for staff in the sheriff court. They are detailed in the framework document of the Scottish Court Service which is available in the Library.

Children's Hospices

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies he has (a) commissioned and (b) analysed and evaluated on health services for children with terminal illnesses; and if he will make a statement. [12581]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government acknowledge that there is sufficient demand to justify the establishment of a children's hospice in Scotland. Information is not collected centrally which would make it possible to establish the exact number of children with a life-limiting or life-threatening condition who would benefit from access to a children's hospice. The opening of Rachel house, Kinross, should enable a more accurate estimate to be made of the need for such a facility.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is his policy that children's hospices be eligible for matching funding from the national health service. [12582]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Access to public funding for the health care work of the children's hospice in Scotland should be through the mechanism of contracts with health boards, based on each board's assessment of need.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children were cared for in each of the past five years in children's hospices; and if he will make a statement. [12584]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There has not been a children's hospice in Scotland during the last five years. Information about the number of children from Scotland cared for in children's hospices in England during that period is not collected centrally.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospices for children are registered; and what financial assistance they have received in each of the past three years. [12583]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None, although it is expected that Rachel house, Kinross, will be registered shortly.

The Scottish Office has contributed £250,000 in this and the two previous financial years to the Children's Hospice Association Scotland in respect of Rachel house,

Kinross. In addition, my right hon. Friend recently announced a further contribution of £500,000 over the next two financial years.

Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the forthcoming policy and financial management reviews of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. [14553]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As part of the Government's rolling programme of five-yearly policy and financial management reviews of non-departmental public bodies, my Department will conduct a thorough review of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise during 1996. The first stage of the review will take the form of a prior options study. In accordance with normal practice on such reviews, this will include an examination of the scope for discontinuing, privatising, contracting out or transferring to another body some or all of the functions carried out by Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. This study is now under way and I would welcome comments from interested parties. Comments should be sent by 31 March 1996 to:

Cold Weather (Public Information)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all public information films relating to the effects of cold weather on plumbing; and if he will list the names of the films, who produced them and when they were shown. [12706]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 30 January 1996]: Two short public information films entitled "Pipe Bursts" and "Frost Warning" were made by the Central Office of Information in 1969. Both were withdrawn from circulation in the early 1980s. A television commercial was produced by the Scottish Office in 1984 and broadcast that year. No other details are now available.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the levels of public expenditure for public information materials on the effects of cold weather on plumbing (a) in each five-year period since 1966 and (b) for each year in the last five years; and if he will make a statement on the nature of the materials on which the moneys were spent. [12708]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 30 January 1996]: There has been no Scottish Office expenditure on public information material in the past five years. The last expenditure on this subject was in 1984 when a television commercial was produced by the Scottish Office. No records exist for previous years. Details of local authority expenditure in this area are not held centrally.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when a public information film on the effects of cold weather was last shown in Scotland; what was the name of this film; and who produced it. [12707]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 30 January 1996]: A television commercial was produced by the Scottish Office in 1984 but no records of it now exist. The Scottish Office is currently in discussion with the Central Office of Information regarding production of a new public information film on the effects of cold weather on domestic plumbing.

Ferry Subsidies

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total amount paid in public subsidy to P and O in respect of its services on the northern isles routes; and if he will make a statement. [12721]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 30 January 1996]: Total subsidy provision for the support of roll-on/roll-off passenger ferry services to Orkney and Shetland provided by P and O Scottish Ferries in 1995–96 amounts to £7.9 million.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the Government's policy on the payment of subsidies to ferry companies providing services on the northern isles routes; and if he will make a statement. [12720]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 30 January 1996]: The Government remain committed to providing the support which is necessary to ensure the continuity of essential passenger ferry services to Orkney and Shetland. After a competitive tendering process, the Government will award later this year a contract to operate passenger ferry services to Orkney and Shetland under new block grant arrangements. These new block grant arrangements reflect the Government's concern to ensure the viability of the essential passenger services to the northern isles and to obtain value for money from the substantial financial assistance which is provided to support essential shipping services to the islands.

Racially Motivated Crime

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a breakdown of the number of crimes which were recorded as being racially motivated reported since 1989 within each police authority in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [13793]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1996]: Details of the number of crimes with racial motivation are not available, although statistics are now being collected to provide that information. The table gives the number of incidents with racial motivation recorded by the police.

Judicial Factories and Curatories

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review remuneration in judicial factories and curatories; and if he will make a statement. [13791]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1996]: Under statute, the responsibility for fixing commission for judicial factories and curatories rests with the accountant of court in the Court of Session.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

House of Commons Staff (Pay)

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, how many staff of the House have salaries higher than those of (a) junior Ministers, (b) Ministers of State and (c) Cabinet Ministers together with their titles. [13586]

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial Tribunals

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what remedy an employer has when he believes that an industrial tribunal has failed to take all relevant information into account in arriving at a decision which is unfavourable to him. [13574]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Where a party is dissatisfied with the industrial tribunal's decision, he may either ask the tribunal to review its decision or appeal, on a point of law only, to the employment appeal tribunal. Further appeals lie with the Court of Appeal and ultimately the House of Lords. The industrial tribunals and the EAT are independent judicial bodies and the Government cannot comment on, or intervene in, the conduct of proceedings in individual cases.

Helicopter Sales (Turkey)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is taking to ensure that helicopters sold by the United Kingdom to the Turkish Government are not used against civilians; and if he will make a statement. [12879]

Mr. Oppenheim: It has been the policy of successive Administrations not to disclose particulars of defence trade with other countries, or details of export licences or applications for export licences.

Applications for licences to export defence equipment are considered on a case-by-case basis, in consultation with the appropriate Government Departments and in the light of established criteria. These include taking into account the human rights record of recipient states. We would not issue an export licence for the export of equipment which was likely to be used for internal repression.

Consumer Protection Act 1987

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he proposes to take to encourage greater public awareness of the provisions of part I of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 following the Consumer Associations's study entitled "Unsafe Products: How the Consumer Protection Act Works for Consumers." [13981]

Mr. John M. Taylor: We are giving careful consideration to this report, which was, in fact, produced by the National Consumer Council. My Department publishes a number of explanatory guides on consumer protection legislation—one of them a guide to the provisions of the Consumer Protection Act 1987—aimed at promoting a better understanding by businesses of their responsibilities and liabilities under the legislation, and making consumers more aware of their rights.

Electricity Industry Regulator

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the formula used by the electricity industry regulator to determine how much profit is given as return to shareholders. [13908]

Mr. Eggar: The form of the price controls in the regulated electricity market is a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply, who has hitherto imposed controls of the form "RPI-X". Distributions to shareholders are a commercial matter for the electricity companies.

Gas Industry Regulator

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the formula used by the gas industry regulator to determine how much profit is given as return to shareholders. [13910]

Mr. Eggar: The form of price control for British Gas's regulated businesses is a matter for the regulator, the Director General of Gas Supply.

Job Advertisements

Mr. Janner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many jobs have been advertised in each grade in his Department during the last three months for which records are available; and how many people have applied for each such job. [13827]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Department has operated an internal advertising scheme for vacancies in all grades from administrative assistant to grade 7, and equivalents, since April 1994. In the three months November 1995 to January 1996 inclusive, 239 posts were advertised. This figure is broken down by grade in the table below.

Grade	Post advertised (November 1995–January 1996)
Secretarial Group	13
Administrative Group	86
Executive Officer	62
Higher Executive Officer level	39
Senior Executive Officer level	9
Grade 7	30
Total	239

Information on the number of applicants for these specific posts is not yet available, but historical data suggest that, on average, there are three applicants for each post advertised.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate the amount paid under ECGD guarantees since 1980 in relation to trade with the United Arab Emirates; what was (a) the amount paid to banks under buyer credit and line of credit facilities, (b) the amount paid directly to exporters under short-term or supplier credit facilities and (c) the amount subsequently recovered; and if he will estimate the proportion of each figure paid in respect of (i) the export of military and related equipment and (ii) the export of military and related equipment where the end user has been assessed to have been Iraq. [13946]

Mr. Oppenheim: Since 1980, the ECGD has paid claims of £27.9 million in relation to trade with the United Arab Emirates and made recoveries of £15.1 million. Of the claims, £21.3 million related to short-term or supplier credit facilities. The ECGD maintains no records of the goods supplied under its now privatised short-term business, but there is otherwise no record of any of the claims relating to arms business.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate the amount paid under ECGD guarantees since 1980 in relation to trade with Singapore; what was (a) the amount paid to banks under buyer credit and line of credit facilities, (b) the amount paid directly to exporters under short-term or supplier credit facilities and (c) the amount subsequently recovered; and if he will estimate the proportion of each figure paid in respect of (i) the export of military and related equipment and (ii) the export of military and related equipment where the end user has been assessed to have been Iraq. [13945]

Mr. Oppenheim: Since 1980, the ECGD has paid claims of £13.1 million in relation to trade with Singapore and made recoveries of £1.43 million. All the claims related to short-term or supplier credit facilities. The ECGD maintains no record of the goods supplied under its now privatised short-term business, but there is otherwise no record of any of the claims relating to arms business.

Cambodia

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy towards investment in

Cambodia by British companies; what action the British Government have taken to facilitate business links; and if he will make a statement. [13949]

Mr. Oppenheim: Investment prospects in Cambodia have improved since the internationally brokered comprehensive political settlement brought to power a democratically elected coalition Government in 1993. However, the state of the economy and security situation mean that opportunities are limited at the moment.

The British Government, through our embassy in Phnom Penh, maintain regular contacts with all British companies resident in Cambodia. The embassy regularly supports visiting British companies in their efforts to establish business links. The British chamber of commerce in Bangkok visited Cambodia last year and Cambodian officials will visit the UK in March and again later this year. An export promoter from the DTI and trade promotion staff are planning to visit Cambodia later this year to identify further opportunities for British companies wishing to establish business links.

In addition, we encourage UK companies to take advantage of the European Union programmes, such as the EC investment partners scheme, which are designed to promote links between businesses in Europe and in certain developing countries such as Cambodia.

Myanmar

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy towards investment in Myanmar by British companies; what action the British Government have taken to facilitate business links; and if he will make a statement. [13950]

Mr. Oppenheim: My Department continues to provide information relating to investment issues in Burma and the associated risks. However, our efforts are focused primarily on the trade opportunities that may exist for British companies, rather than on investment, where we continue to take a cautious line.

My Department held a trade awareness seminar, "An Introduction to Burma", at the London chamber of commerce on 5 December 1995. This will be followed by a trade mission to Burma from 26 February to 1 March 1996.

Electromagnetic Compatibility Directive

Mr. Gill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what penalties exist in each member state of the European Union for non-compliance with the electro magnetic compatibility directive. [13500]

Mr. Ian Taylor: My Department does not hold information concerning the penalties in all of the member states for non-compliance with the electromagnetic compatibility directive. Other member states will have taken such steps as they felt appropriate to ensure compliance with the directive. In a communication of 3 May 1995, the Commission, reflecting the common view of Community institutions, noted that national penalty arrangements should be effective, proportionate and dissuasive. The Council resolution of 21 June 1995 encouraged the Commission to ensure that penalties introduced by member states to ensure compliance meet these criteria. My Department will monitor the situation.

Protecting electrical and electronic equipment from electromagnetic interference is important and, under the electromagnetic compatibility regulations, as amended, the United Kingdom enforcement authorities may issue a suspension notice or a prohibition notice to secure compliance or prosecute for offences which could lead to fines on summary conviction of up to £5,000 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months or to both. Except in the case of CE-marked apparatus found not to comply with EMC protection requirements, before seeking prosecution enforcement authorities must first send a compliance notice, to which no penalties attach so long as compliance follows within a reasonable period.

Greyhound Breeding (Ireland)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the hon. Member for Wentworth will receive an answer to his question of 30 November about the support of greyhound breeding in Ireland by the EC. [13126]

Mr. Oppenheim: There are certain European Community structural fund grants for greyhound breeding in the Republic of Ireland.

Information about details of these funds' grants in other EC member states is not directly available in the United Kingdom. I have, however, made inquiries and expect to be able to give a substantive answer within the next few days.

EU Funding

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much in (a) ecus and (b) pounds, (i) in each eligible region and (ii) in total, the United Kingdom received in European Coal and Steel Community loans over the last available five-year period. [11696]

Mr. Page [holding answer 29 January 1996]: Loan activity under the ECSC treaty comprises article 54 investment loans, article 56 reconversion loans, and loans disbursed under the workers' housing programme. The information requested is as follows. Figures are not available on a regional basis for loans under the workers' housing programme.

Nuclear Power

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's estimate of the total cost in terms of (a) compensation, (b) grants and (c) loss of productive capacity arising from the effects of the Chernobyl incident. [13286]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 February 1996]: A number of countries were affected by radioactive fallout from the Chernobyl accident. My Department has no sound basis for estimating the total cost of compensation and grants paid and the loss of productive capacity in all of those countries. As far as the United Kingdom is concerned, compensation amounting to £12,085,311 had been paid to farmers up to 31 December 1995.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Union

20. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the timetable for the intergovernmental conference of the European Union. [12362]

Mr. David Davis: The intergovernmental conference will begin in Turin on 29 March. No date has been set for its conclusion.

BBC World Service

22. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future of the triennial funding arrangement for the BBC World Service. [12364]

Mr. Rifkind: Changes in the triennium system are under discussion with the World Service.

European Union (New Members)

23. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the admission of Eastern European countries to membership of the European Union. [12365]

Mr. David Davis: We receive many representations on this subject.

We make it clear that Britain is firmly committed to enlargement to the east, which is fundamental to Europe's security and prosperity.

Palestinian National Authority

24. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet representatives of the Palestinian National Authority to discuss future security in the area. [12366]

Mr. Hanley: I met representatives of the Palestinian National Authority in Gaza and in east Jerusalem only last month. I have no immediate plans for a follow-up meeting.

European Union (Political Integration)

26. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet the President of the European Commission, to discuss progress towards further political integration. [12369]

Mr. David Davis: The President of the European Commission regularly attends Foreign Affairs Councils. The next such Council is on 26 and 27 February.

Bosnia

27. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress with the peace process in Bosnia. [12370]

35. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the implementation of the peace agreement in Bosnia-Herzegovina. [12378]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: On the military side, the parties have shown widespread compliance with the terms of the peace agreement and first deadlines have largely been met. The international community is now concentrating its efforts on civilian implementations and reconstruction so that the people of Bosnia can see the benefits of peace. We are playing a full part in the reconstruction effort. The key to lasting peace is the will of the parties themselves to achieve it.

Cyprus (EU Accession)

28. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Cyprus to discuss her accession to the EU. [12371]

Mr. David Davis: None, but I discuss the matter regularly with my European and Cypriot colleagues at the European Union/Cyprus Acquisition Councils. The next Council will be held in May.

Bulgaria

29. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Bulgaria to discuss enhancing Anglo-Bulgarian relationships. [12372]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I visited Sofia on 1 and 2 February. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary hopes to visit soon.

Antarctic Treaty

30. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress towards the establishment of a secretariat for the Antarctic treaty. [12373]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The issue was taken forward at a meeting of legal experts in Brussels in November when organisational aspects of an Antarctic treaty secretariat were discussed. Discussions continue among treaty consultative parties about the siting of the secretariat.

Pakistan

31. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to pay an official visit to Pakistan to discuss human rights; and if he will make a statement. [12374]

Mr. Hanley: I hope to visit Pakistan in the near future to discuss a wide range of issues, including human rights.

Middle East Peace Process

32. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to revisit Jerusalem to discuss progress in the middle east peace process. [12375]

Mr. Hanley: I visited Jerusalem at the beginning of January and have no plans at present for another visit. I do, however, maintain a close interest in the middle east peace process.

36. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the middle east peace process. [12379]

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the middle east peace progress. [12367]

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Members to the oral answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden) and my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) earlier today.

Chechnya

33. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Chechnya. [12376]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The conflict in Chechnya has brought great suffering and has cost many innocent civilian lives. The situation remains tense; clashes continue daily. A lasting peace cannot be brought through use of force. We therefore urge all sides to abide by the ceasefire agreed in July 1995 and to return to the negotiating table.

British-Israeli Relations

34. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British-Israeli relations. [12377]

Mr. Hanley: Relations with Israel are excellent. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary visited Israel last November, as I did in January. Shimon Peres visited London from 31 January to 2 February.

United Nations

37. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made to ensure that all member states pay their share of their dues to the UN. [12380]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The UN Secretary-General informs member states regularly of the organisation's cash flow situation and reminds them of the need to fulfill their financial obligations. Despite this, at the end of 1995, less than half the UN membership had paid in full to the UN regular budget.

The EU has recently tabled in New York a comprehensive package of proposals, including a revised system of assessments and measures to tighten the penalties for late/non-payment. The aim of this proposal, based on an Anglo-French initiative, is to put the UN back on to a sound financial footing.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to the creation of a common United Nations peacekeeping military doctrine; and if he will make a statement. [13947]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We support a common UN peacekeeping doctrine and have encouraged the UN to develop one. We expect the UN to publish its own short general guidelines for peacekeeping soon. MOD and FCO experts have briefed the UN on "Wider Peacekeeping", the British Army's revised peacekeeping doctrine, and have stayed in touch with UN experts. We are pleased that "Wider Peacekeeping" has been well received and circulated within the UN, and believe that it has already made a valuable contribution to international debate.

War Crimes (Former Yugoslavia)

38. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with other Governments about bringing war criminals in the former Yugoslavia to justice. [12381]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We are in regular contact with our NATO allies and EU partners concerning all developments in former Yugoslavia.

The peace agreement obliges the parties to co-operate fully with the International War Crimes Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia. This obligation is also enshrined in the new constitution. In the human rights annexe, the parties are obliged to give unrestricted access to all sites and persons. We strongly support the tribunal's work.

Iraq

39. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's present guidelines on arms exports to Iraq. [12382]

Mr. Hanley: We comply with United Nations Security Council resolution 661, which prevents the sale to Iraq of any weapons or other military equipment.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will support proposals at the intergovernmental conference to include national Parliaments in negotiations on the social protocol of the Maastricht treaty. [13772]

Mr. David Davis: Under the social protocol agreed at Maastricht, Acts adopted under the annexed social agreement are not applicable to the UK. The Government will not be prepared to relinquish this opt-out at the intergovernmental conference.

Job Advertisements

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many jobs have been advertised in each grade in his Department during the last three months for which records are available; and how many people have applied for each such job. [13835]

Mr. Hanley: The number of jobs advertised in each grade in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office during the last three months and the number of applicants were as follows:

Grade	Vacancies	Applicants
DS7D/8	26	2,422
Specialist grades	4	511
Support grade band 2	4	154
HCS grade 6	1	62

East Timor

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to assist the Australian Government's inquiry into the deaths of Brian Peters, Malcolm Rennie and three Australian-based newsmen, in October 1975 at Balibo, East Timor. [12368]

Mr. Hanley: We keep in touch with the Australian authorities and will continue to do so. We are prepared to assist them in any way possible.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to Indonesia regarding East Timor; and if he will make a statement. [13952]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary and I discussed East Timor with the Indonesian Foreign Minister when he visited London last month.

Diplomatic Service

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what additional staff and at what cost his Department has recruited to meet Her Majesty's Government's diplomatic requirements against the proliferation of regimes throughout the world; and if he will make a statement. [12559]

Mr. Hanley: Since 1990, 22 new independent countries have come into being. The UK has diplomatic representation on the ground in all but three, and cross-accreditation of staff in neighbouring countries for the remainder. The total additional requirement of 77 UK-based and 156 locally engaged staff in these new countries has been resourced from within existing provision, through reprioritisation and redeployment. In the same period, eight posts with UK-based and two with locally engaged staff have been closed. Further information will be available in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's 1996 departmental report, due to be published in March, a copy of which will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria govern the assessment of the effect of diplomats' declared interests on their representation of the United Kingdom. [12640]

Mr. Hanley: Interests declared by members of the diplomatic service are assessed against the need to ensure that officials neither subordinate their official duty to their private interests nor put themselves in a position where their duty and private interests conflict.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in which countries Her Majesty's Government have no diplomatic post; and if he will make a statement. [13619]

Mr. Hanley: There is no UK resident diplomatic representation in the following 18 countries:

Andorra
Bhutan
Burundi
Equatorial Guinea
Iraq
Kiribati
North Korea
Liberia
Maldives
Marshall Islands
Micronesia
Moldova
Nauru
St. Kitts and Nevis
San Marino
Somalia
Tajikistan
Tuvalu

In the following independent countries, the UK is represented by locally engaged staff and/or honorary consuls:

Afghanistan
Benin
Burkina Fasso
Cape Verde
Central African Republic
Chad
Comoros
Congo
Djibouti
Dominica
Eritrea
Gabon

Guinea
Guinea Bissau
Haiti
Kyrgyzstan
Laos
Liechtenstein
Mali
Mauritania
Monaco
Niger
Suriname
Togo
Western Samoa
Sao Tomé and Principe

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: to ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what ways the United Kingdom's negotiating brief for the forthcoming intergovernmental conference will reflect the Government's deregulation policies. [13597]

Mr. David Davis: We are pressing vigorously to reduce the regulatory burden of EC law. The paper "UK priorities for Regulatory Reform", which has been deposited in the Library of the House, sets out how we are doing this.

A number of the UK's proposals for the IGC are designed to help reduce the burden of EC legislation including further entrenchment of the principle of subsidiarity in the treaty and a requirement on the Commission to consult interested parties before making proposals for major new legislation.

Myanmar

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the military junta in Myanmar about human rights; and if he will make a statement. [13948]

Mr. Hanley: Our ambassador in Rangoon raised the question of human rights when he called on the Foreign Minister on 27 December 1995.

At the 50th session of the UN General Assembly, we worked closely with our EU partners and others to secure a critical resolution on the human rights situation in Burma. We will continue to raise our concerns both bilaterally and in international forums.

Bangladesh

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Bangladesh about the proposed elections scheduled for 15 February; and if he will make a statement. [13841]

Mr. Hanley: We have made no formal representations to the Government of Bangladesh about the elections, but our high commissioner has been in close contact with the leaders of the main political parties throughout the current political crisis in Bangladesh. We regret the failure to reach an agreed settlement of the long-standing dispute over the conditions under which elections should be held and the consequent decision of the major Opposition parties not to put forward candidates in the forthcoming elections.

Morocco

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Moroccan Government regarding the Western Sahara; and if he will make a statement. [13953]

Mr. Hanley: The United Nations is seeking to bring about peace in the Western Sahara. The UN mission for the referendum in Western Sahara—MINURSO—is charged with the organisation of a referendum. The UK participates fully in Security Council discussions on the subject, and supports the representations made by the Secretary-General and his representatives to both Morocco and Polisario.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low flying sorties were booked in 1995 by (a) Hercules aircraft and (b) helicopters; and if he will provide a breakdown of these figures into those by British military aircraft and those by foreign air forces. [12891]

Mr. Soames: A total of 2,655 sorties by Hercules aircraft and 49,935 sorties by helicopters were booked in the United Kingdom low flying system in 1995. Three of the Hercules sorties and 33 of the helicopter sorties were flown by non-UK-based foreign aircraft.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low flying sorties were booked in 1995 by United Kingdom-based United States air force aircraft; and if he will provide a breakdown of these into sorties by (a) F15 aircraft, (b) Hercules aircraft and (c) helicopters. [12892]

Mr. Soames: United Kingdom-based US air force aircraft were booked to fly 4,191 sorties in the United Kingdom low flying system during 1995. Of these, 3,660 were F15 sorties, 395 were Hercules sorties and 136 were helicopters.

MOD Police

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list for each royal ordnance site the number of incidents in each of the last five years requiring the attendance of his Department's police; [13193]

(2) if he will list for the royal ordnance Radway green site the number and type of incidents requiring the attendance of his Department's police in the last 12 months. [13195]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is provided in the table. The category "other incidents" includes minor building insecurities, the presence of persons and objects deemed to be suspicious until investigated and cleared, and mislaying of permits. "Security incidents" include failure to return keys, classified documents not locked away, and cabinets left insecure. Although the definition of crime includes theft of both Government and private property, criminal damage and instances of burglary, most incidents in ROFs over this period have been very minor offences.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department's police currently protecting establishments in the defence industry carry arms. [13192]

Mr. Soames: All MOD police officers are firearms-trained and have ready access to arms should the need arise.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many and which royal ordnance factories are currently protected by his Department's police; and from which he plans to withdraw them. [13190]

Mr. Soames: MOD police are currently deployed at the following royal ordnance sites: Bridgwater, Chorley, Glascoed, Nottingham and Radway green. A recent study on the employment of MOD police in the royal ordnance factories has recommended that MOD police be withdrawn from the Chorley, Radway green and Nottingham sites. Formal consultation between my Department and the MOD police staff associations, regarding thee proposals is now in progress.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what access the royal ordnance factory Radway green MOD police have to an armed response vehicle; and what arrangements for such access will be established when his Department's police have been withdrawn. [13189]

Mr. Soames: The MOD police stationed at royal ordnance Radway green have immediate access to a dedicated armed response vehicle. If MDP are withdrawn from royal ordnance Radway green, following the conclusion of the formal consultation process, the provision of any armed response will be the responsibility of the chief constable of Cheshire.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what training he plans to provide to private security firms before they take over security duties from his Department's police; and if they will be permitted to carry arms; [13194]

(2) how many private security staff will be employed at the Radway green royal ordnance factory site to replace his Department's existing police. [13196]

Mr. Soames: The royal ordnance factories from which it is proposed to withdraw MDP will be protected by company guard force personnel. Their number and training will be for agreement between RO plc and the relevant licensing authority. They would not be permitted to carry arms; nor are there any plans for the MOD to provide training for them. Instructions for the use of private security firms at defence installations require that they should be trained to the levels specified.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each establishment protected at present by his Department's police (a) what that establishment produces and (b) what plans there are to withdraw the police officers; and by what date. [13191]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member.

Porton Down (Experiments)

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department last reviewed whether the Chemical Defence Establishment at Porton Down should stop its chemical warfare experiments on humans. [13665]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive of DERA to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Alan Simpson, dated 7 February 1996:

Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking when his department last reviewed whether the Chemical Defence Establishment should stop its chemical warfare experiments on humans has been passed to me to reply as the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency which includes CBDE.

The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to provide safe and effective protective measures to safeguard the lives of United Kingdom Armed Forces personnel in the event that chemical and biological weapons are used against them. The role played by the Service volunteer programme is essential in ensuring the equipment provided is effective and does not degrade the performance of military tasks. Service volunteers are involved in the evaluation of new protective equipment and operational procedures and in the development of medical countermeasures against the effects of biological and chemical warfare agents.

The use of human volunteers is kept constantly under review and people are only ever used where it is both necessary and safe to do so. In recent years there has been no requirement to carry out studies involving the use of live agent to test the efficacy of these physical and medical protective measures. Work in the past conducted at CBDE has involved the exposure of Service volunteers to small quantities of chemical warfare agents in order to assess the incapacitating effects of these small amounts.

I hope this information is helpful.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Chemical Defence Establishment at Porton Down carried out research into the long-term health effects of CS gas; and what were the results of this research. [13662]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive of DERA to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Alan Simpson dated 7 February 1996:

Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking when the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment carried out research into the long-term health effects of CS gas; and what were the conclusions of this research has been passed to me to reply as the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency which includes CBDE.

In the early 1980s CBDE carried out limited studies to assess the long term health effects of exposure to CS gas. The results of these laboratory-based animal studies reinforced by generally available medical evidence suggests that there are no long term effects on people exposed to CS gas in the concentrations commonly employed.

I hope this information is helpful.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Chemical Defence Estabishment at Porton Down produces an annual report or assessment of its programme of tests and studies using service volunteers (a) for its own internal use and (b) for use within the Ministry of Defence. [13664]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive of DERA to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Alan Simpson, dated 7 February 1996:

Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking if the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment produces an annual report or assessment of its programme of tests and studies using service volunteers for its own internal use and for use within the Ministry of Defence has been passed to me to reply as the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency which includes CBDE.

The Independent Ethics Committee which reviews all of the work involving Service volunteers carried out at CBDE produces an annual report detailing the involvement of volunteers in study protocols. This report, which contains defence sensitive material, is circulated internally within CBDE and the Ministry of Defence.

I hope this information is helpful.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if information derived from the Chemical Defence Establishment's experiments with humans is shared with Canada and the United States of America under the provisions of the 1980 memorandum of understanding on chemical and biological defence. [13663]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Information arising from work involving the use of service volunteers in research programmes carried out at CBDE have been shared with the United States and Canada as part of the collaboration promoted by the memorandum of understanding in question.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy, as part of his investigation into Gulf war syndrome, to investigate whether any of the chemical agents sold to Iraq by United Kingdom companies contributed to the damage done to British soldiers and auxiliary personnel in the Gulf war. [13434]

Mr. Soames: No. There is no scientific or medical evidence that any chemical warfare agents were used in the Gulf war.

Aircraft Proximity Incident (Perth)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Royal Air Force personnel provided a pre-flight briefing to the crew of the Portuguese air force helicopter involved in an aircraft proximity incident at Perth airfield on 6 June 1994; and what was the minimum height authorised for the aircraft's flight in low flying area 14. [13253]

Mr. Soames: Briefing was given and the minimum height authorised for the sorties was 100 ft minimum separation distance.

Procurement Ethics Code

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Crown servants who worked within his Department have moved since December 1993 within two years to companies with which they had dealings or involvement while holding post at the Department; and if all persons taking up positions directly related to their previous departmental posts applied for permission in accordance with section 9 of the code of procurement ethics. [13979]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Some 603 applications were made under the business appointment rule. There is no requirement for staff to report whether or not an appointment is taken up. We are not aware of any breaches of the rules.

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of his Department's employees are not covered by the Ministry of Defence's code of procurement ethics. [13978]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The code of procurement ethics provides a synopsis for industry of my Department's overall stance and policy. It does not supplant the detailed rules in existing departmental publications which apply to all the Department's staff.

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Crown servants in his Department have breached sections (a) or (b) of section 9 of the code of procurement ethics since December 1993. [13977]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Not as far as we are aware.

Magherafelt Royal Irish Regiment Base

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department is taking to remove all structures similar to the one in which a fire occurred at Magherafelt Royal Irish Regiment base. [12592]

Mr. Soames: The fire are Magherafelt on 30 April 1994 took place in a Widgeon type structure, being used as sleeping accommodation. Since that time, many have been replaced by more modern structures and some have been allocated to other uses. At the time of the fire, there were 44 Widgeon buildings in Northern Ireland, of which 31 were being used as sleeping accommodation. As of 5 February 1996, the total number had been reduced to 33, of which 15 were used for sleeping accommodation. After a thorough survey of these 15 buildings, a range of additional safety measures is being implemented. I am satisfied that all responsible steps are being taken to minimise the risk of fire in the remaining buildings of this type.

Stores Losses

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 81, what factors underlay the decision not to record items valued at less than £100,000 which have been (a) stolen and (b) lost. [13163]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Losses need to be individually noted in the appropriation account only if they exceed £100,000 in value. Hence, except as regards fraud and theft, a central record of losses below that figure is not maintained, and records are kept by individual budget areas. Cases of fraud or theft are recorded centrally in summary terms.

Recruitment

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give for (a) 1988–89, (b) 1989–90 and (c) 1990–91 the (i) total recruitment budget, (ii) the total number of recruits and (iii) the average cost per recruit broken down between the Royal Navy, Army and Royal Air Force. [13596]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member.

Export Licences

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Government's policy in respect of the export of missiles which are capable of post delivery conversion from conventional to nuclear use; on what occasions United Kingdom export licences have been granted for such missiles since 1980; and if he will list for each occasion the destination country, and the country given as the end user. [13986]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Exports of missiles require export licences, as do any other defence exports. The consideration given to licence applications covers many factors and in the case of missiles includes the obligations we have accepted under the missile technology control regime. This international regime lays down the guidelines and parameters to cover the export of missiles which are capable of nuclear use. It has not been the practice to give details of licences granted for the export of defence equipment.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on which dates since 1980 form F680 export licences were granted and subsequently renewed for the export of precision guided missiles from the United Kingdom to the United Arab Emirates. [13985]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The MOD form 680 clearance procedure is not in itself an export licence procedure. It is designed to give companies guidance on the likely Government reaction to an export licence application. In the same way as for export licences, information on MOD form 680 decisions are commercial in confidence.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the Ministers responsible for the authorisation of F680 export licences during the periods (a) June to December 1986, (b) June to December 1988 and (c) June to December 1990. [13956]

Mr. Arbuthnot: DTI Ministers are responsible for authorising export licences. The Ministers for Defence Procurement responsible for authorising F680 guidance were, during the periods (a) and (b) Lord Trefgarne, and during period (c) Mr. Alan Clark.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Listed Buildings

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many grade I and grade II listed buildings were (a) demolished and (b) otherwise lost in (i) 1994 and (ii) 1995. [13384]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have been asked to reply.

This Department records, on a financial year basis, cases where we are notified, under the provisions of circular 8/87, that a local authority intends to grant consent for the total demolition of a listed building, together with the consents which the Department itself issues. The following figures show the numbers of principal and curtilage buildings affected by these consents.

	Grade I	*Grade II	Grade II
1994–95	1	12	79

Records are not kept centrally on the extent to which consents are implemented or losses take place without the need to apply for consent.

British Library

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has to extend the capacity of the St. Pancras British library's building when capacity has been reached. [8008]

Mr. Sproat: We have no present plans to extend the British library's new St. Pancras building once it has been completed. However, that does not necessarily preclude further library development. For example, the capital costs could be incurred by the private sector under the private finance initiative. My right hon. Friend has agreed to consider proposals, and the assessment of the library's future needs which they embody, which the library has put to her for further development on the surplus land to the north of the St. Pancras construction site. The new St. Pancras building will provide considerable improvements in book storage conditions, and in the flexibility with which readers can be served and accommodated in the reading rooms. Like any national library in receipt of published material under the legal deposit system, the British library's collections are growing in size, and the library's plans include the need for material to be stored, as well as at St. Pancras, at its northern site in Boston Spa where there is scope for future expansion.

UK Sports Council

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when the new chief executive of the UK Sports Council will be appointed; and what experience in sports administration will be required. [12883]

Mr. Sproat: An announcement about the filling of this post will be made soon.

The chief executive of the UK Sports Council should have top level management experience and a thorough knowledge and fervent appreciation of sport and related issues at both national and international level. The person should also have well-developed leadership and motivational qualities, acute financial awareness together with excellent interpersonal and presentational skills.

Eurimages

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what external advice she has sought on the contractual effects of Her Majesty's Government's decision to withdraw from Eurimages. [12988]

Mr. Sproat: None.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what estimate she has made of the additional amount of investment leveraged by Eurimages in each of the last three years. [12986]

Mr. Sproat: Eurimages usually completes the funding package by contributing around 10 per cent. of the budget for films which have already attracted funding from a number of other public and private sector sources, and recoups about 3 per cent. of its contributions overall. It is not possible to identify the amount of additional private investment which might otherwise have been secured.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what has been the cost of her Department's subscription to Eurimages in each of the last three years. [12927]

Mr. Sproat: The cost of the Department's subscription to Eurimages in each of the last three years has been as follows: £1,318,856 in 1993; £1,913,206 in 1994 and £2,469,902 in 1995.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many British films have received assistance from Eurimages in each of the last three years. [12985]

Mr. Sproat: The number of films awarded Eurimages funding and involving UK co-production companies since the UK joined in April 1993 was 12 in 1993, 21 in 1994 and 22 in 1995.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what notice her Department gave of its intention to withdraw from Eurimages; and to what extent this was in line with the relevant Council of Europe resolution. [12987]

Mr. Sproat: Normal confidentiality requirements as to the contents of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget statement and my Department's spending plans did not allow for prior notice to be given of our intention to withdraw. My Department will, of course, abide by obligations arising from the relevant Council of Europe resolution.

National Lottery

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has to seek powers to place a limit on the size of national lottery prizes; and if she will make a statement. [12025]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 5 February 1996]: Directions issued by the Secretary of State under section 11 of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993, limit the number of jackpot rollovers to three.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what have been the running costs relating to the tendering process of the private finance initiative in each year since its introduction (a) in real terms and (b) in cash terms disaggregated by (i) staff costs, (ii) information technology and (iii) other costs. [10960]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 22 January 1996]: The information requested is as follows:

	1994–95 £	1995–96 £
(a) In real terms:
(i) staff costs	7,125	32,260
(ii) information technology	—	—
(iii) other costs	—	—
(b) In cash terms:
(i) staff costs	6,630	32,260
(ii) information technology	—	—
(iii) other costs	—	—

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much has been spent on external consultants in the tendering process of the private finance initiative in each year since its introduction (a) in real terms and (b) in cash terms disaggregated by (i) legal fees, (ii) publicity costs, (iii) accountancy fees and (iv) management consultancy fees. [10959]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 22 January 1996]: The Department of National Heritage has not undertaken any PFI projects. The following costs relate to projects in its two agencies and in the non-departmental public bodies which it sponsors:

	1994–95 £	1995–96 £
(a) Real terms:
(i) legal fees	8,600	1,000
(ii) publicity costs	—	10,000
(iii) accountancy fees	—	100,000
(iv) management consultancy fees	30,000	49,000
(b) Cash terms
(i) legal fees	8,000	1,000
(ii) publicity costs	—	10,000
(iii) accountancy fees	—	100,000
(iv) management consultancy fees	27,850	49,000

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is her estimate of her Department's expenditure on newspapers and magazines in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1995–96 to date; and if she will list the publications purchased for the latest year for which information is available. [11513]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 30 January 1996]: The Department of National Heritage spent £20,033 on newspapers and magazines in 1993–94, and £34,806 in 1994–95. To date, the Department has spent £18,519 in 1995–96. The publications purchased for the Department in 1995–96 are:

Religious Buildings

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to her answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 250, if she will consider removing the ecclesiastical exemption from statutory listed building and conservation area controls in respect of the former Roman Catholic cathedral in Middlesbrough. [13005]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 1 February 1996]: My right hon. Friend sees no reason to do so. The building is still in ecclesiastical use as a parish church. I understand that discussions are taking place between the Church authorities and English Heritage on a programme of major repairs.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to her answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 250, if she will consider removing the ecclesiastical exemption from statutory listed building and conservation area controls in respect of the Benedictine abbey church at Farnborough, Hampshire. [13006]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 1 February 1996]: The abbey does not fall within the terms of the ecclesiastical exemption retained by the Roman Catholic Church. Normal statutory listed building and conservation area controls therefore apply to it. I understand that the local planning authority is currently considering an application for listed building consent for works at the abbey.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

War Pension Appeals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when Mr. Andrew Dickson's war pension appeal, presented on 28 November 1992, reference M2910162, will be heard. [13623]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The pensions appeal tribunals received the supplementary statement of case from the War Pensions Agency on 15 November 1995. However, the pensions appeal tribunals have not yet received a response to their letter of 26 October 1994 to Mr. Dickson's representatives requesting information about the listing of the appeal. A reminder was sent on 2 February 1996, and once a response is received, the pensions appeal tribunals will arrange a hearing for the appeal.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when Mr. John Middleton's war pension appeal, presented on 8 March 1995, reference M3101179, will be heard. [13622]

Mr. Evans: Mr. Middleton's appeal was received by the pensions appeal tribunals on 31 May 1995. On 4 July, Mr. Middleton's representatives advised the pensions appeal tribunals that he would be unable to attend his hearing due to ill health and requested that a domiciliary visit be arranged. Regrettably, the pensions appeal tribunals failed to act on this letter. I should like to apologise to Mr. Middleton for this error and for the delay it has caused to his case.

The president of the pensions appeal tribunals has authorised a domiciliary visit which is expected to take place later this month. Thereafter, Mr. Middleton's appeal will be listed for hearing as a matter of urgency.

Offensive Weapons

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what guidelines he has issued to the Crown Prosecution Service regarding the level of charge of offenders for carrying offensive weapons. [13264]

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

The Director of Public Prosecutions, and through her the Crown Prosecution Service, is supervised by the Attorney-General. The service, when dealing with cases involving offensive weapons, applies the principles set out in the code for Crown prosecutors.

The law makes a distinction between the carrying in a public place of offensive weapons on the one hand and bladed or pointed instruments on the other. Possessing an offensive weapon is the more serious charge. Offensive weapons fall into three categories: those made for causing injury, those adapted for causing injury, or those intended by the defendant to cause injury. The offence of carrying of bladed instruments does not require proof that the defendant intended to use it to cause personal injury and carries a lesser penalty. The choice of charge will depend upon the evidence which is available to support the charge and is selected by the Crown Prosecution Service to reflect the seriousness of the offending, to give the court adequate sentencing powers, and to enable the evidence to be presented in a clear and simple way.

The Offensive Weapons Bill currently going through Parliament will increase the maximum sentences for offences under section 1 of the Prevention of Crime Act 1953 and section 139 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 to four years' imprisonment and two years' imprisonment respectively.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Union Flag (Armagh RUC Station)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Union flag was flown at Armagh RUC station on (i) Christmas day 1995 and (ii) new year's day 1996; and what arrangements have been made to fly the Union flag at Armagh RUC station on the remainder of the specified occasions in 1996. [11716]

Sir John Wheeler: I regret that the Union flag was not flown at Armagh RUC station on 25 December 1995 and 1 January 1996, due to an unfortunate oversight which will not occur again.

Arrangements have been made to ensure that the Union flag is flown, in accordance with RUC policy.

Seed Potatoes

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what quantities of seed potatoes are being imported into Northern Ireland from the Netherlands; what evidence he has evaluated into the presence of brown rot in imported Dutch seed potatoes; what arrangements are in place to ensure that brown rot disease is not brought into Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [12940]

Mr. Ancram: There is no record of any imports into Northern Ireland of seed potatoes produced in the Netherlands in 1995. It follows that there is no evidence available regarding brown rot in imported Dutch seed potatoes.

Commission decision 95/506/EC laid down additional requirements to be met where potatoes produced in the Netherlands in 1995 are being traded. This decision enables member states to take additional measures to monitor Dutch potatoes entering their territory. The Potatoes Originating in the Netherlands (Notification) Order (Northern Ireland) 1995 requires prior written notification of the intention to land in Northern Ireland potatoes originating in the Netherlands. Any such potatoes landed will be subject to detention, inspection and testing for brown rot.

Intensive Care Beds

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many intensive care beds were available in each of the Northern Ireland health boards in each of the last seven years. [12560]

Mr. Moss: The table shows the average number of intensive care beds which were available in wards open overnight in each of the Northern Ireland health board areas for each of the last seven years.

Year/board	Eastern[1]	Northern	Southern	Western
1988–89	27	6	6	10
1989–90	31	6	6	10
1990–91	29	6	6	10
1991–92	29	6	6	10
1992–93	28	6	6	10
1993–94	27	6	6	10
1994–95	30	10	6	10

School Rolls

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils are currently educated in maintained primary schools; and what were the figures for the last three years. [12585]

Mr. Ancram: A total of 95,207 pupils were educated in maintained primary schools in 1994–95. The number of pupils educated in maintained primary schools for the previous three years are as follows:

1991–92: 95,787

1993–94: 95,757

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils are currently educated in controlled primary schools in Northern Ireland; and what were the figures for each of the last three years. [12586]

Mr. Ancram: A total of 91,435 pupils were educated in controlled primary schools in Northern Ireland in 1994–95. The number of pupils educated in controlled primary schools in Northern Ireland for the previous three years are as follows:

1991–92: 90,021

1993–94: 91,089

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils (a) are currently and (b) have been in each of the last three years educated in maintained secondary and grammar schools. [12593]

Mr. Ancram: A total of 48,692 pupils were educated in maintained secondary schools in 1994–95. The number of pupils educated in maintained secondary schools for the previous three years are as follows:

1991–92: 46,580

1992–93: 47,274

1993–94: 48,112

There are no maintained grammar schools in Northern Ireland.

Rents

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the percentage changes in each of the last seven years for rents paid to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and private landlords (housing sector); and if he will list the differential between these figures and the rate of inflation. [12587]

Mr. Moss: The annual percentage change in rents is applied to both Northern Ireland Housing Executive rents and regulated tenancies registered with the Department of Environment for Northern Ireland. The changes for each of the last seven years plus the differential between those figures and the rates of inflation are as follows:

Percentage

Year	Rent increase	Difference between rent increase and rate of inflation
1989–90	10.25	+2.55
1990–91	10.00	+0.70
1991–92	8.00	+3.50
1992–93	9.50	+6.90
1993–94	7.75	+5.85
1994–95	7.50	+4.86
1995–96	7.25	+4.05

Rents of uncontrolled tenancies are open market and information on changes in rental levels is not available.

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the present average rent paid by Northern Ireland Housing Executive tenants and what assessment he has made of equivalent rents in the private housing sector. [12588]

Mr. Moss: The present average rent paid by Northern Ireland Housing Executive tenants is £31.65 per week. Statistics on rental levels in the private housing sector are not collected.

Student Grants

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the regulations relating to the award of student grants in Northern Ireland. [12589]

Mr. Ancram: The Students Awards Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1995 (SR 1995/1).

State Pensions

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of relating the state pensions to the inflation rate and average earnings. [12594]

Mr. Moss: None. The rates of state pensions are set for the United Kingdom and are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of his Department's expenditure on newspapers and magazines in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1995–96, to date; and if he will list the publications purchased for the latest year for which information is available. [11427]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 30 January 1996]: Expenditure by the Northern Ireland Departments and Northern Ireland Office expenditure on newspapers and magazines is as follows:

1993–94: £699,222

1995–96: £375,987 (to date)

Newspapers and magazines purchased by the Departments of Economic Development, Agriculture, Education and the Northern Ireland Office are listed:

HEALTH

Hypothermia

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths where hypothermia was mentioned in the death certificate took place among (a) men aged 65 years and over and (b) women aged 60 years and over in (1) each month of 1994 and (2) each month of 1995 by region in England and Wales. [13263]

Mr. Horam: Information for 1994 is shown in the table. Figures for 1995 could be provided only at disproportionate cost, at this time.

Neurotic and Depressive Disorders

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what analysis his Department has made of the link between unemployment and (a) neurotic and (b) depressive disorders. [13270]

Mr. Bowis: The "OPCS Surveys of Psychiatric Morbidity in Great Britain" contain information on the association between employment status and levels of psychiatric morbidity. Copies of the publication are available in the Library.

Emergency Beds

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to which areas he has made extra funding available for emergency beds; how many extra beds have been established for each area; and at what cost. [13722]

Mr. Horam: It is for health authorities to decide what health care to purchase, taking into account national priorities and local needs. Individual national health service trusts need to ensure that bed numbers are carefully matched to contracted workloads and are responsive to patient flows, including the local rate of emergency admissions.

Information on medical beds is not available centrally. Details of the average daily number of available acute beds in each trust are published annually in "Bed Availability in England", a copy of which is in the Library.

NHS Dentistry

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) directives he has issued to health authorities, (b) other measures he has taken and (c) meetings he has had, since 1 November 1995, for the purpose of expanding the provision of NHS dentistry in all local areas of English health authorities. [13442]

Mr. Malone: I have frequent meetings, including some with hon. Members, to discuss national health service dentistry. The NHS executive board has also considered the issue. The Government are committed to an effective and accessible NHS dental service. We shall continue to take steps, working with local NHS management as necessary, to improve services.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will monitor the levels of serious illness in areas where there is opencast mining generating dust. [13486]

Mr. Horam: Research on the effects on health of air pollution, including that of dust from opencast mining, has been referred to the independent advisory Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants. COMEAP has considered the suggestion that opencast coal mining might have a harmful effect on the health of those living close to the workings. A study by Temple, 1992, was considered and COMEAP agreed that the results reported were consistent with an association between the opening of an opencast mine and an increase in asthma consultations. However, the committee considered that local awareness of the opening of the mine and concern about its possible effects on health were plausible explanations of the association and that further work would be needed to sustain a causal hypothesis.

In 1994 the Department of the Environment, the Department of Health and the Medical Research Council issued a joint call for proposals for research into air pollution and respiratory disease. The Department is currently considering the proposals that were put forward, including studies on the health effects of opencast mining.

Waiting Times (Northumberland)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the average waiting list time for patients in the Northumberland health authority for each year since 1992. [13484]

Mr. Horam: The information is not available centrally. Information on waiting lists at hospitals in Northumberland is contained in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Drug-related Deaths (Northumberland)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his calculation of the number of people who died in Northumberland health authority as the result of the use of medicinal drugs in each of the last five years (a) accidentally, (b) in cases involving suicide or self-inflicted injury and (c) in cases involving injury undetermined whether accidentally or purposely inflicted; and which drug each death involved. [13562]

Mr. Horam: The table shows the number of people usually resident in the Northumberland health authority area who have died as a result of poisoning by drugs, medicaments and biological substances, ICD[1] codes 960-979, in the years 1988 to 1992, under the headings of accident, suicide and self-inflicted injury, and injury undetermined whether accidentally or purposely inflicted. Whether or not these were prescribed drugs is not recorded at death. However, most of the categories of these substances are available only on prescription. Major exceptions are "analgesics, antipyretics and antirheumatics", ICD[1] code 965 and "other unspecified drugs and medicaments", ICD[1] code 977. The drugs implicated in these deaths are published each year in tables 9 and 10 of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys publication series DH4 which is available in the Library.

Clinical Psychology

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he proposes to (a) increase the efficiency of current courses in clinical psychology, (b) increase the number of training places in clinical psychology and (c) ensure that sufficient clinical psychologists are available to meet the needs of the health services within the next five years. [13682]

Mr. Malone: It is for local employers to determine the staff needed to deliver services. Since 1993, the number of training places for clinical psychologists has continued to increase to meet growing demand. From April 1996 it will be for education and training consortia to assess future demand and the effectiveness of the provision of courses. The national health service executive will maintain a national overview.

Osteoporosis

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which NHS hospitals are currently operating bone density scanners for osteoporosis; [13729]

(2) what assessment he has made of the accessibility of NHS bone density scanners to women who require screening. [13730]

Mr. Horam: Information on the location of bone densitometry scanners in individual hospitals is not available centrally. The recent survey by the National Osteoporosis Society suggested that 38 per cent. of health authorities are specifically funding bone densitometry. It is for individual health authorities to decide locally what priority to give to making bone densitometry scans available to those who need them.

NHS Trusts (Outcome Indicators)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish outcome indicators for NHS trusts in England similar to those published by the Secretary of State for Scotland in December 1994. [13732]

Mr. Horam: The national health service executive is working with the joint consultants committee to promote the development of new clinical indicators, which will enable aspects of NHS trusts' performance to be examined. It will be necessary to pilot and test any proposals before publication. Some of the clinical outcome indicators published in Scotland require the linkage of patient records in a way not yet routinely available in England, and accordingly there are no plans at present to publish such indicators.

Oral Cancer

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many new cases of oral cancer, including cancers of the lip, tongue and oral hypo-pharynx, have been recorded since 1989; [13769]

(2) how many oral cancer cases reported in each of the last three years were of people aged (a) under 15 years, (b) 15 to 19 years, (c) 20 to 35 years, (d) 36 to 64 years and (e) over 65 years; and how many were (i) male and (ii) female. [13787]

Mr. Horam: Provisional numbers of oral cancers[1] diagnosed in 1990 in England and Wales are shown in the table.

Age	Males	Females	Total
0–14	4	5	9
15–19	7	0	7
20–34	34	21	55
35–64	824	347	1,171
65 and over	878	612	1,490
Total	1,747	985	2,732

[1] Oral cancer is defined as: cancer of the lip (International Classification of Diseases, ninth revision, 140), tongue (ICD9 141), gum (ICD9 143), floor of mouth (ICD9 144), other and unspecified parts of the mouth (ICD9 145), oropharynx (ICD9 146), nasopharynx (ICD9 147) and hypopharynx (ICD9 148). Cancers of the salivary glands (ICD9 142) have been excluded as they are not normally grouped with oral cancers.

Figures for 1988 and 1989 are contained in the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys annual reference volumes, "Cancer statistics, registrations", series MB1 numbers 21 and 22, respectively; copies of which are available in the Library.

Ecstasy

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to draw the attention of younger people to the dangers of drug taking, with particular reference to Ecstasy. [13817]

Mr. Bowis: We launched a campaign to promote awareness of the national drugs helpline in November 1995. This featured a radio advertisement focusing on the risks to health from Ecstasy and a new information booklet for young people on the dangers of drugs and solvents. We shall shortly be launching a phase of advertising aimed at young people, which will focus on specific drugs, including Ecstasy. This will include wider advertising on independent radio and in the youth press, together with advertising aimed at parents in journals and magazines.

These campaigns are part of the Government's overall strategy, "Tackling Drugs Together." The work in this area within the national curriculum is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment.

Cornwall Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was his role in the appointment of (a) the non-executive directors and (b) Mrs. Kirby-Harris as chair of the Cornwall Healthcare NHS trust; and what consultations were held prior to Mrs. Kirby-Harris being appointed. [13809]

Mr. Bowis: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State appointed two of the current non-executive directors of Cornwall Healthcare national health service trust on 1 November 1995. His predecessor appointed the current chairman on 7 March 1994. Mrs. Kirby-Harris was appointed by his predecessor on 1 April 1993 after consideration of the candidates recommended by the regional health authority chairman.

Hospitals (Patients' Money)

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was held in hospital accounts in respect of the balance of patients' money; for each of the last five years for each NHS region. [13781]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Medicines and Food (Dangers)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he proposes to give the public on the danger of combinations of medicines and food in (a) neutralising the effects of the medicine and (b) causing strokes and heart attacks. [13162]

Mr. Malone: Where there is a known interaction between a human medicinal product and food, advice is already provided in the product information, which is authorised by the Licensing Authority, and in the British National Formulary, which is sent free of charge to all doctors. Doctors are responsible for discussing with their patients treatment options and any risks of treatment, this discussion should include information on likely side-effects and interactions with foods or other medicines. To supplement advice from the doctor many medicines have patient information leaflets, which include advice on how to take the medicine, any side-effects and whether there are any interactions with foods or other medicines. By the end of 1998 all medicinal products will have patient information leaflets, unless the relevant information can be included on the label. Pharmacists are also available for advice on medicines supplied through a pharmacy. In addition, patients taking monoamine oxidase inhibitors receive a treatment card which lists foods which should not be eaten while taking these medicines and for 14 days afterwards.

Breast Screening

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 246, how he monitors the effectiveness of breast screening programmes in meeting "The Health of the Nation" targets for breast cancer. [13709]

Mr. Horam: Information on breast cancer screening has been collected since 1988–89, and is published in "Summary Information from Form KC62 England", copies of which are available in the Library. The data were collated on the Department's behalf by the cancer screening evaluation unit.

Health Economics Consortia

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health economics consortia have been set up in the United Kingdom; what capital the Government have allocated to these units; what is their remit and to whom they are accountable; and how many district health authorities, or other public bodies, have commissioned reports on service provision from these units. [10354]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 22 January 1996]: Health economics consortia are independent, self-financing bodies which provide economic advice and analysis to the NHS on a consultancy basis. It is for health authorities to consider what information they require to support their strategic objective of maximising the health benefits of their local populations and how best to obtain it. No information on the use of health economics consortia is held centrally.

TRANSPORT

Traffic Signs

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made on the proposal to allow business sponsorships of, and advertising on, traffic signs. [13675]

Mr. Watts: Advertising, or displaying messages acknowledging business sponsorship, on traffic signs is not permitted under current legislation We are developing proposals for public consultation on options for amending legislation.

British Railways Board

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what instructions he has given to the chairman of the British Railways Board regarding the role of the British Railways Board and its subsidiaries after April 1997; and if he will make a statement; [13925]

(2) what instructions he has given to the chairman of the British Railways Board regarding the rate at which subsidiaries of the British Railways Board are to be transferred to the private sector; and if he will make a statement. [13926]

Mr. Watts: The objectives set by my right hon. Friend for the chairman of the British Railways Board for 1995–96 were set out in a letter to the chairman on 26 June 1995, as announced in my right hon. Friend's answer of 4 July 1995 to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Sir I. Lawrence), Official Report, column 117. Announcements about the chairman's objectives for 1996–97 and subsequently will be made in due course.

Office of Passenger Rail Franchising

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many personnel are currently employed by the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising; and how many he expects to be employed in the financial year 1996–97 and 1997–98. [13932]

Mr. Watts: The number of staff in post at the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising as at 1 January 1996 was 88. The estimated number of staff required in 1996–97 is 121; in 1997–98 the estimated number is 136. The number of staff will rise to manage the franchises that have been let and to deal with the emerging franchises as the momentum continues to build. The figures include staff directly employed and those on loan or secondment from other parts of the civil service, the railway industry and the private sector.

Rail Privatisation (Safety)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research he has conducted into the likely effects of rail privatisation on safety within the railway system; and if he will make a statement on the results. [13770]

Mr. Watts: The independent Health and Safety Commission was asked in 1992 to examine in detail the implications for safety of the Government's privatisation proposals. We have implemented in full the Commission's recommendations for a new regulatory and safety management system.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that safety within the railway system will not deteriorate after privatisation. [13771]

Mr. Watts: We have implemented in full the independent Health and Safety Commission's recommendations for ensuring safety. The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate will continue its monitoring and investigation to see that standards are maintained and, where necessary, improved.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money is being spent by his Department on improving safety within the railway system. [13786]

Mr. Watts: Safety expenditure by the railways is not identified separately as it is an integral part of expenditure which has other benefits, including maintenance and renewal.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent, prior to the completion of the franchising of passenger rail services on the great western, south-west and London, Tilbury and Southend lines, the Health and Safety Executive has been consulted on arrangements existing between the franchisees and Railtrack regarding the prevention of trespass on running lines; and what conclusions were reached by the Health and Safety Executive in each case. [13933]

Mr. Watts: The Railways (Safety Case) Regulations 1994, which are enforced by the Health and Safety Executive, require railway operators to demonstrate that they have effective arrangements in place to control health and safety risks and to co-operate with each other to facilitate compliance. Railway safety cases have to be accepted by the infrastructure controller, in this case Railtrack, or by the Health and Safety Executive.

Railtrack's safety case has been accepted by the HSE, and Railtrack has in turn accepted the safety cases for the great western, south-west, and London, Tilbury and Southend train operators. These safety cases set out in some detail the arrangements for co-operation and management of the interfaces between operators.

Association of Train Operating Companies

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the powers, responsibilities, legal status and sources of income of the Association of Train Operating Companies. [13930]

Mr. Watts: The Association of Train Operating Companies—ATOC— is an unincorporated association open to all train operators holding passenger licences. Its principal functions, as set out in its constitution, are to facilitate the development and operation of commercial arrangements between passenger operators and to promote the use of the railway network, including, in particular, the making of journeys which involve more than one operator. ATOC's main objects and its ancillary functions are achieved through a number of schemes, essentially multi-party contracts between operators. ATOC's central secretariat administers these schemes, but is not itself a party to them. The secretariat's activities are financed through a membership fee levied on the association's members.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff are currently employed by the Association of Train Operating Companies; and how many he expects will be employed in the financial years 1996–97 and 1997–98. [13931]

Mr. Watts: Staffing levels in the Association of Train Operating Companies—ATOC—secretariat are determined by the association's members, who fund the secretariat's activities. ATOC currently employs 33 staff and expects to employ about 50 staff in 1996–97. It is too early to estimate the number of staff ATOC will employ in 1997–98.

M3

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish statistics on the volume of traffic on the M3 between junctions 6 and 7, and the volume of traffic entering and leaving the M3 at those junctions for each year since 1980. [133777]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Andrew Hunter, dated 7 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about the volume of traffic on the M3 motorway between junctions 6 and 7 and the volume of traffic entering or leaving the M3 at those junctions, for each year since 1980.

I regret that information in the form requested is not available. However, the annual average daily traffic flow (AADT) between junctions 6 and 7 on the M3 motorway for the three years 1993–95 was:

1993: 70,100

1995: 76,100

I hope that this is helpful.

Rail Privatisation

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide full details of the timetable for the franchising of passenger rail services; and if he will make a statement. [13998]

Mr. Watts: Bidders for the Network SouthCentral, Gatwick Express, Midland Main Line and InterCity East Coast franchises were shortlisted on 16 January. Final tenders are required by 1 March. Invitations to tender for South Eastern were issued on 19 December and for Chiltern on 30 January. For both franchises, indicative bids are required by 22 March. The franchising director issued on 23 January a document inviting applications to qualify to receive invitations to tender for the Cardiff Railway Company and South Wales and West franchises; responses to this must be received by 26 February.

The timetable for the franchising of passenger rail services is kept continually under review by the franchising director and the process for letting further franchises will be commenced by him as soon as practicable.

Newbury Bypass

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to visit the countryside on the route of the Newbury bypass in the current year. [12407]

Mr. Watts: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to visit the countryside on the route of the Newbury bypass.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what detailed studies on the effects of run-off from the Newbury bypass on the rivers Lambourn and Kennet have been undertaken and published; [12409]

(2) what detailed studies on the effects of noise and air pollution from the Newbury bypass on Snelsmore common have been undertaken and published; [12408]

(3) if he will list the sites of national archaeological interest along the route of the proposed Newbury bypass; what detailed studies of the impacts of the road on these sites have been published; and what opportunity there has been for public consultation on these impacts; [12406]

(4) what protection is afforded to archaeological sites of national importance under planning policy guidance; how such protection has been taken into account in the consent procedure for the A34 Newbury bypass; and what opportunity there has been for the public to comment formally; [12405]

(5) how many badger setts lie on the route of the proposed A34 Newbury bypass; and what steps have been taken to relocate them before clearance work starts. [12403]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Cynog Dafis, dated 7 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent questions about the Newbury Bypass.

The studies we have carried out show that there will be no effect on the rivers Kennet and Lambourne from run off from the Newbury Bypass. The run off from the bypass will discharge through silt traps and oil interceptors to either deep soakaways or to balancing ponds. The balancing ponds use plants and reed beds as filters to improve further the quality of the water. These proposals have been agreed with the National Rivers Authority and will lead to an overall improvement in water quality, as less traffic will cross the rivers on the existing A34 where no such measures exist.

The effects of noise from the bypass were assessed in accordance with the Manual for Environmental Appraisal and were published at the 1988 Public Inquiry. they did not specifically single out Snelsmore Common. No areas have been identified where air quality along the bypass will be a problem. The removal of congestion in Newbury together with other Government measures to reduce emissions from vehicles will lead to an overall improvement.

There is only one site of national archaeological interest along the route of the Newbury Bypass, the Mesolithic site in the Lambourne valley. Field and desk-top studies have been undertaken along the route and are available. These studies together with proposals for archaeological rescue work have been discussed and agreed with English Heritage.

Although there were no known sites of archaeological importance at the time of the 1988 Public Inquiry, it was always accepted that there may be sites and the Inspector took account of this in his report.

Protection is afforded to archaeological sites of national importance under Planning Policy Guidance (PPG) No 16, a copy of which may be found in the House of Commons Library.

Such protection has been taken fully into account in giving the go ahead for the A34 Newbury Bypass.

Representation about archaeological sites were made at the 1988 Inquiry and were covered by the Inspector in his report.

After carefully surveying the route of the bypass, 3 badger setts were found. Replacement badger setts were constructed and the badgers relocated under licence from English Nature before the existing setts were destroyed.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were (a) the original estimated savings from the introduction of the incapacity benefit for the years 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 and (b) the updated estimates for each of these periods; and if he will make a statement. [12245]

Mr. Burt: The original estimates for savings from the introduction of incapacity benefit were published in the Financial Memorandum to the Incapacity for Work Bill. Information from the Financial Memorandum is reproduced in the table.

	Estimated savings (£ million)
1995–96	410
1996–97	1,185
1997–98	1,720

A variety of factors will influence performance against these estimates including the decision to control the rate of processing of pre-April 1995 invalidity benefit cases to match operational performance. It is not yet possible reliably to estimate the overall effect on the original savings estimates.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many decisions to award incapacity benefit have been issued (a) nationally and (b) in the Greater Manchester area since April 1995; [12234]

(2) how many decisions to refuse incapacity benefit applications have been issued since April 1995 (a) nationally, (b) in the Greater Manchester area and (c) in the borough of Rochdale. [12335]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. The available information is in the table.

	Allowed following reference to BAMS on the all-work test	Disallowed following reference to BAMS on the all-work test[1]
National	302,048	45,085
Greater Manchester	23,752	3,523
Rochdale	670	120

[1] Includes disallowances following failure to return the all work test questionnaire and failure to attend for medical examination.
BAMS—Benefits Agency Medical Services.
1. All information to end of November 1995.
2. Data for greater Manchester covers the BA districts of: South Cheshire, Stockport, Tameside, Manchester South, Manchester Central, Salford, Sale/East Cheshire, Oldham, Manchester Trinity, Blackburn/Accrington, Bolton/Farnworth, Burnley/Pendle/Rossendale, West Pennine (including Rochdale office) and Wigan and Leigh.
3. The data is provisional and reflects activity during a time when the take-on of cases has been carefully controlled to ensure that the flow of work does not exceed operational capacity. It is, therefore, too early to draw conclusions about the effectiveness of the new procedures.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applicants for incapacity benefit passed the all-work test and were deemed fit for employment in the most recent period for which he has figures. [13128]

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table:

	Number
Found incapable of work following reference to BAMS on the all-work test	302,048
Found capable of work following reference to BAMS on the all-work test[1]	45,085

[1] Includes disallowances following failure to return the all-work test questionnaire and failure to attend for medical examination.
1. All information to end of November 1995.
2. The data is provisional and reflects activity during a time when the take-on of cases has been carefully controlled to ensure that the flow of work does not exceed operational capacity. It is, therefore, too early to draw conclusions about the effectiveness of the new procedures.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average length of time taken to hear an appeal against the disallowance of incapacity benefit under the all-work test in the northern region in 1995. [13200]

Mr. Burt: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Child Benefit

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 16 January, Official Report, column 571, on child benefit, if, in the course of statutory consultation on the integration of one-parent benefit and child benefit, he will issue a draft timetable for the integration of those benefits. [13098]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: It is expected that the consultation process will be completed in early April. Regulations, which will be subject to affirmative resolution, will be laid before Parliament as soon as possible after the end of the consultation process. Subject to parliamentary approval, the regulations will come into force in April 1997.

Office Equipment and Uniforms

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what sums have been spent (a) by DSS offices and (b) by executive agencies on (i) uniforms for staff and (ii) furniture for offices in each region in each of the last five years; and if he will list those items valued over £5,000. [13093]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Staff uniforms

Year (calendar)	£
1991	n/a
1992	1,544,695
1993	1,092,464
1994	1,488,005
1995	1,120,623

1. The figures are provisional and subject to change.
2. The table shows the total amount spent on uniforms for staff by the Department and its executive agencies.

Furniture

Year (financial)	£
1990–91	15,918,340
1991–92	1,795,241
1992–93	11,762,878
1993–94	13 034,386
1994–95	13,563,886

1. The figures are provisional and subject to change.
2. The table shows the total amount spent on furniture by the Department and its executive agencies.
3. Information regarding individual items of furniture is available only at disproportionate cost.

National Insurance (Contribution Holidays)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update the estimates given in the Department of Social Security press release of 29 November 1994, on (a) the effect on public revenues of the proposed national insurance contribution holidays for people unemployed for two years or more and (b) the estimated number who will benefit from the scheme, giving the figures for 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99. [13403]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the table.

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Estimated cost (£ million)[1]	30[3]	50	50
Estimated number of new employees benefiting each year[2]	130,000	130,000	130,000

1. National insurance contribution income forgone.
2. Estimates are based on a forecast of 2.1 million unemployed, but do not include the impact on the level of unemployment, because the response of employers and the size of any behavioural effects cannot be estimated with certainty.
3. The first year cost is lower than a full year's cost because the national insurance holiday lasts for one year and applies to new cases flowing off unemployment. Thus in respect of people leaving unemployment in the latter half of the year, a full year's cost in the first year will not accrue.

Official Documents (Braille)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provision is made by his Department to provide official documents in braille and large text. [13445]

Mr. Burt: The Department and its agencies have a policy of making public information available in braille and large text and on audio cassette. When producing material for blind and partially sighted people, the recommended guidelines of the Royal National Institute for the Blind and the Government's own document, "Accessible Information Meeting the Government Commitment", are followed.

Facilities are available to produce one-off documents in Braille on request.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average income of the bottom 20 per cent. of pensioner households as a percentage of average household incomes; and what was the equivalent figure in 1979. [13957]

Mr. Heald: Since 1979, the median income of the bottom 20 per cent. of pensioners has risen by nearly 20 per cent. For the population as a whole, median income rose by just over 25 per cent. More information is in the tables.

Median household incomes of the bottom 20 per cent. of pensioners as a percentage of overall median income, 1979 and 1992–93 Table 1: Before housing costs— £ per week at March 1995 prices

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update the tables given in the written answer on 30 November 1993, Official Report, columns 426–27. [13959]

Mr. Heald: The information on the numbers of single pensioners treated as having notional income from savings is in the table.

Number of single pensioner recipients

Amount of notional Income £	Income support	Housing benefit	Council tax benefit
1	14,000	17,000	29,000

20	2,000	2,000	5,000
All cases	87,000	133,000	236,000

Notes:
1. The figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. Single pensioners are defined as people in receipt of income support and/or housing benefit and/or council tax benefit aged 60 or over who do not have a partner.
3. There is a considerable overlap in the figures as most people receive both housing benefit and council tax benefit. There is also some overlap with the income support recipients.

IS = Income support (and equivalent for earlier years).
HB/CTB = Housing benefit/council tax benefit and equivalent for earlier years.

Personal Pensions

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost in the first year of introducing age-related rebates to appropriate personal pensions as proposed in his current consultation document; and what would be the cost if the proposed levels were raised by (a) 0.25 per cent., (b) 0.5 per cent., (c) 0.75 per cent., (d) 1 per cent., (e) 1.25 per cent., (f) 1.5 per cent., (g) 1.75 per cent. and (h) 2 per cent. of allowable earnings. [13958]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the table.

Additional rebate (per cent. upper band earnings)	Total cost 1997–98 (£ million)	Cost above 1997–98 baseline (£ million)
Baseline	1,885	n/a
0.25	1,970	85
0.50	2,045	160
0.75	2,125	240
1.00	2,200	315
1.25	2,275	390
1.50	2,350	465
1.75	2,430	545
2.00	2,505	620

1. The figures are in respect of 1997–98 accruals. Costs would not arise until 1998–99 because rebates for appropriate personal pensions (APPs) are paid in arrears. The figures have been calculated in 1994–95 price terms.

2. The "baseline" figures reflect the proposed age-related rebates for APPs set out in the Government Actuary's consultative note on contracting-out terms issued in August 1995.

3. The costings assume the same age and earnings distribution and numbers of individuals in APPs under each of the proposed set of rebate levels shown.

Pensions Information Line

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what instructions and guidance has been issued to those giving advice on the "pensions info-line" about the information and advice to be given to callers. [13415]

Mr. Heald: All those giving advice on the "pensions info-line" follow a carefully prepared script on computer that has been devised to cater for different types of inquiry. Help screens with prescribed wording are also available on the computers, should the need arise—for example, to explain the content of a leaflet or to give out the telephone number of a trade association.

All operators are briefed by departmental staff on a regular basis about new or revised literature, as well as about any forthcoming press or publicity activity which might result in increased numbers of calls on particular pensions issues.

Operators are not allowed to deal with calls to the info-line until they have undergone training and can demonstrate to the supervisor's satisfaction a sound knowledge of the script and of DSS pensions literature.

In accordance with the Financial Services Act, operators do not give financial advice to callers.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will arrange for (a) papers relating to judicial review applications in respect of immigration matters to be lodged at district registries, (b) reference numbers to the applications to be obtained by telephone from the Crown Office by the district registry and (c) the district registry to forward the papers to the Crown Office in London; and if he will make a statement. [14283]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The rules of the Supreme Court do not provide for papers relating to judicial review applications to be lodged at district registries. Applications must be filed at the Crown Office in London. Judicial review is one of the specialist areas being considered by Lord Woolf in the second stage of his review. His final report and proposed new rules are due in July. It would be inappropriate to make significant procedural or rule changes prior to Lord Woolf's recommendations being received.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Fire Safety

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he plans to take arising from the consultation on the interdepartmental review of fire safety legislation and enforcement; and if he will make a statement. [13629]

Mr. Willetts: The Government have been considering the findings of the review and the views expressed by interested parties, including the deregulation task force. It has also been further considering the fire safety aspects of the EC framework and workplace directives. An announcement on both will be made soon.

EU Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what guidance he plans to issue to Government Departments to ensure that fiches d'impact are properly prepared by the Commission in relation to proposals that result in significant burdens on business. [13642]

The Deputy Prime Minister: The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster published on 25 January guidance for Government Departments on the preparation of compliance cost assessments for new domestic and EC regulatory proposals. Guidance on the preparation of fiches d'impact by the Commission is contained in this document.

Private Sector Schemes

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what public bodies he has asked to produce schemes for moving into the private sector under the prior options exercise; what was the original time scale for such schemes; what is now the timetable; and if he will make a statement. [14114]

Mr. Freeman: I have not asked any of the public bodies for which my Department is the sponsor to produce schemes for moving into the private sector.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Departmental Publications

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which of his Department's administrative manuals and internal guidance are now made public; and which remain private. [14032]

Mr. Hanley: The FCO code of management, diplomatic service regulations and home service regulations are available in the House of Commons Library.

Diplomatic service procedure includes volumes which are classified. It is currently being revised, and volumes are being declassified where possible, with a view to sending unclassified sections to the House of Commons Library.

One-off best practice manuals, covering such subjects as management practices and guidance on the presentation of papers, are unclassified and available on request.

Hong Kong

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what efforts he is making to encourage the Chinese Government to ensure that the proposed electoral college for Hong Kong will be democratically accountable; and if he will make a statement; [13954]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Chinese Government about the establishment of an electoral college in Hong Kong to oversee the appointment of a chief executive; and if he will make a statement. [13955]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 7 February 1996:]: The Sino-British joint declaration on the question of Hong Kong provides for the chief executive of the Hong Kong special administrative region to be selected by election or through consultations held locally, and then appointed by the Chinese Government. When they adopted the Basic Law, Hong Kong's future constitution, the Chinese National People's Congress also decided on special arrangements for choosing the first chief executive by a selection committee consisting of 400 permanent residents of Hong Kong. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary recently told Chinese leaders—and Chinese officials have made similar public remarks since—that it will be important for confidence in Hong Kong for the chief executive to command the support and respect of the Hong Kong civil service and of Hong Kong people.

EU Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how he ensures that the negotiating brief for his officials discussing EU legislation takes fully into account the need to minimise the burdens on United Kingdom business. [13712]

Mr. David Davis: Guidance on how officials are to apply deregulatory principles when negotiating EC regulations is contained in the DTI's booklet, "Getting a Good Deal in Europe". This guidance has been supplemented by the recent publication of guidance on the preparation of compliance cost assessments, which stresses that the likely burdens on business highlighted by United Kingdom compliance cost assessments of EC proposals should be integral to the UK's negotiating strategy. Copies of both pieces of guidance are in the Library of the House.

Newly Independent Countries

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a list of the countries granted independence by the United Kingdom since 1970 showing (a) when a formal decision was taken to proceed towards independence and (b) the actual date of independence day in each case. [14285]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The countries granted independence by the United Kingdom since 1970 are: Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Belize, Dominica, Fiji, Grenada, Kiribati, Papua New Guinea, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, Seychelles, Solomon Islands, Tuvalu, Vanuatu and Zimbabwe.

I refer the hon. Member to the "Commonwealth Yearbooks" 1987 and 1993–94 (HMSO, 1987 and 1995) from which the other information may be obtained. Copies of the yearbooks are in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Compulsory Competitive Tendering (Luton)

Sir Graham Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times Luton borough council has been investigated by his Department for possible transgressions related to compulsory competitive tendering; and what has been the outcome in each case. [13628]

Mr. Curry: Luton borough council has been the subject of five investigations by the Department. Three of these investigations related to alleged anti-competitive behaviour in the award of refuse collection in 1991, building maintenance in 1993 and grounds maintenance work in 1995, to the council's direct service organisation. In each case, no statutory action was taken after the authority provided my right hon. Friend with an explanation of its conduct.

The other investigations relate to the authority's failure in 1992–93 to achieve the statutory financial objective for building maintenance work and other—civic—catering. In both of these cases a notice was served, in 1994, under section 13 of the Local Government Act 1988 requesting the reasons for the failure. Following receipt of this information, a direction was given requiring the authority to achieve the statutory financial objective for other catering in the financial year 1994–95 or close its DSO. The authority's accounts for the year indicate that that objective was achieved, although the external auditor's opinion on these accounts has not yet been received.

Local Authority Investments

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what fiduciary duty councillors have to their council tax payers on decisions concerning (a) the local authority's pension fund and (b) investments in equities. [13941]

Sir Paul Beresford: The fiduciary duties of a local authority to its council tax payers to exercise prudential care and propriety apply in relation to the exercise of all the authority's functions, including those in respect of superannuation funds and investment in equities. The Local Government Pension Scheme Regulations 1995 require local authorities responsible for managing pension funds to have regard to the need to diversify investments, to consider the suitability of those investments and to seek qualified advice at reasonable intervals.

SCOTLAND

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 303-4, if he will give the names of each councillor serving on the non-departmental public bodies. [12433]

GP Fundholding

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost to his Department of the study carried out by the department of general practice at Edinburgh university for his Department into general practitioner fundholding. [1251]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office Department of health funded the research project, which was carried out over a period of three years, at a cost of £436,956.

Asthma

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of asthma have been diagnosed in each health board area in Scotland in each year since 1979. [12512]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Available information relates to in-patient and day case discharges from hospitals and excludes patients treated by general practitioners and in hospital out-patient and accident and emergency departments.

Details of numbers of discharges, by health board of residence, with a principal diagnosis of asthma, is shown in the table for calendar years 1979 to 1994. The figures for 1995 are not yet available.

Mortgage Arrears

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many households have mortgage payment arrears of more than three months. [14288]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: This information is not held centrally.

Murray Green

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to make a decision on the complaint raised on behalf of Murray Green under section 70 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 in May 1994. [13766]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The Secretary of State's decision issued on 6 February 1996.

School Boards

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was, for (a) primary and (b) secondary schools for each education authority area in Scotland and for each sub-division within Strathclyde region (i) the number of schools with school boards, (ii) the total number of schools and (iii) the percentage of schools which had school boards for each year since the establishment of school boards. [13249]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The information held centrally is as follows. It is taken from statistical returns by education authorities to the Scottish Office on the results of the first elections to school boards held in 1988–89 and subsequent biennial elections in 1991–92 and 1993–94:

Hip and Femoral Fractures

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) hip fractures and (b) femoral fractures were recorded in 1993–94. [13842]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numbers of hip fractures and femoral fractures recorded for NHS in-patients and day cases treated in Scotland in the year ending 31 March 1994 are given in the table.

	Recorded in
	Principal[1] position	Other position	All
Hip fracture (ICD=820)	8,354	913	9,267
Femoral fracture (ICD=821)	1,293	284	1,577

[1] The SMRI allows six diagnoses to be recorded. The diagnosis recorded in principal is the main condition. Other diagnoses affecting the treatment of the patient are recorded in the remaining five positions.

Osteoporosis

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the cost (a) of osteoporosis to the Scottish economy, (b) of running a basic diagnosis and prevention service and (c) of hospital treatment (i) per patient and (ii) in total in each health board. [13843]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of beds in orthopaedic wards have been occupied by osteoporosis fracture patients over the last 12 months. [13844]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The percentage of average staffed beds[1] occupied by patients with a diagnosis of fracture and osteoporosis[2] in the speciality of orthopaedics was 0.2 per cent.—4.1 average occupied beds out of 2,012 average available staffed beds—for the year ending September 1995. The data on occupied beds are provisional.

Bone Densitometers

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many bone densitometers are in use in each health board area. [13845]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the annual number of mortgage repossessions since 1979. [14287]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Figures supplied by the Council of Mortgage Lenders suggest that in 1994, 1,791 properties were taken into possession by mortgage lenders in Scotland. This represents 0.22 per cent. of the total number of properties with mortgages outstanding. The comparable figures for 1993, were 2,330 and 0.29 per cent. respectively. The equivalent figures are not available for the period 1979–1992, and are not yet available for 1995.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland were (a) of an economically active age and (b) in employment for each year since 1979. [14289]

Mr. Kynoch: The information requested is given in the table.

Water Authorities

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the opening capital structure of the new Scottish water authorities on 1 April. [14739]

Mr. Kynoch: The new water authorities have been set up to enable water and sewerage services to be provided in accordance with commercial principles and disciplines. It is therefore right that the authorities should have a capital structure which reflects these objectives.

The opening capital of the new water authorities will mainly take the form of debt to the public Works Loan Board. There is likely in addition to be a small amount of debt to the European investment bank. This debt will represent borrowings for water and sewerage purposes by the current regional and islands councils which is transferable to the water authorities under section 91 of the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994.

The total of such debts at 31 March 1996 is likely to be in the region of £1.7 billion. This is more than will be compatible with the requirement on the authorities, announced on 29 November last year, to earn a real rate of return of 6½ per cent. on assets amounting in aggregate to £1,000 million. Accordingly my right hon. Friend intends to commute up to £700 million of the transferable debt.

The precise amount and details of the commutation have still to be worked out. Discussions will be held with the local authorities and the new water authorities.

Commutation is a technical exercise. It will involve no net addition to public expenditure and no increase in the cash available to the water authorities. A reduction will be made in the authorities' external financing limits, previously announced as £274 million, to reflect the reduced debt servicing costs, so that the net effect on the authorities' finances, including their investment and charges will be neutral.

PRIME MINISTER

Pay Review Bodies

Sir Michael Shersby: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the reports and recommendations of the pay review bodies. [14718]

The Prime Minister: The 1996 reports of the five pay review bodies have been published today. Copies are available in the Vote Office and the Library of the House. The Government are grateful to the chairmen and members of the review bodies for the time and care that they have put into the preparation of the reports.

The Government are concerned that pay settlements for these groups should be consistent with the approach to public sector pay. Under this approach, increases should be offset by efficiencies and other economies to help to deliver improved efficiency across the public sector. Specifically, the cost of pay settlements should be accommodated within the resources allocated to programmes. The Government have had to consider the recommendations of the pay review bodies against that background to determine the appropriate response.

The main pay recommendations are as follows.

The Armed Forces Pay Review Body has recommended a range of increases in daily rates of 3.2 to 3.8 per cent., plus an increase of 0.5 per cent. in the X factor reflecting the special demands of service life. This gives an average increase of 3.8 per cent. with effect from 1 April. Separately, following a quinquennial review of the value of armed forces pensions, it has recommended a 1 per cent. increase in pay to reflect reduced pension differentials with the private sector, with a further 1 per cent. increase next year.

The Doctors and Dentists Review Body has recommended general increases of 3.8 per cent. for doctors and 4.3 per cent. for dentists. It has specifically recommended higher increases for junior hospital doctors of 5.3 per cent. for registrars and 6.8 per cent. for house officers, although the latter figure would be partly offset by a reduction in the rate for additional duty hours.

The review body for nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine has recommended that pay for these groups should once again be determined locally. The review body also recommended a 2 per cent. increase in the national scales which underpin local negotiations.

The School Teachers Review Body has recommended a 3.75 per cent. increase in teachers' pay, and other changes in pay structures.

The Senior Salaries Review Body has recommended:

a. values for the pay ranges for the senior civil service in the pay structure set out in January 1995 in the White Paper, "Taking Forward Continuity and Change". Under these arrangements, Departments will determine individual salaries within the ranges and will be able to reward the best performers, with a framework in which the overall pay bill is expected to fall by some 7 per cent. next year as staff numbers are reduced;

b. increases for senior military officers in the range 3.9 to 5.6 per cent. averaging 4.6 per cent. consistent with the AFPRB recommendations;

c. increases of 3.9 per cent. for the judiciary.

This is a complex set of recommendations covering a number of different issues that have been addressed in detail by the review bodies in preparing their reports. The Government have said that they will normally accept review body recommendations, and do not intend to reject them on this occasion. Nevertheless, if this year's recommendations were implemented as they stand, from the due date, they would represent a marked step up in the level of pay settlements in the public sector, compared with settlements over the past year, and a significant charge on public expenditure programmes.

Accordingly, the Government intend to stage their introduction and propose that in most cases the settlements to be paid with effect from 1 April should be 1 percentage point less than the review body recommendations, the balance to be paid later this year on 1 December. This meets the requirements on affordability and the approach to public sector pay, while retaining the pattern of increases recommended by the review bodies.

Staging arrangements will also extend to the awards that Departments will determine for the senior civil service within the framework set by the SSRB recommendations.

The Government have, however, decided that it would not be appropriate to apply this general arrangement to the recommendations for nurses and other staff covered by the NPRB.

The following table summarises the main pay recommendations of the review bodies.

	Main pay recommendations percentage	Pay bill costs £ million	percentage
AFPRB—Armed forces	3.7–4.3[1]	211	3.8
DDRB—Doctors and dentists	3.8–6.8	245	4.4
NPRB—Nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions Allied to medicine	[2]	—	—
STRB—School teachers	3.75	421	3.8
SSRB Senior salaries
Senior civil service	[3]	—	—
Senior military	3.9–5.6	1	4.6
Judiciary	3.9	6	3.9

[1] Includes ½ per cent. increase in the X factor which reflects the special demands of military compared with civilian life. AFPRB has also recommended an additional 1 per cent. on pay as part of a staged pensions-related adjustment.
[2] To be determined in local pay negotiations but with a guaranteed 2 per cent. increase in national pay rates.
[3] Recommendations for the senior civil service affect the pay framework within which Departments will set individual pay rates.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Hain: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 1120–21, if he will list the years since 1966 when crime fell. [13966]

The Prime Minister: Between June 1993 and June 1995 there were 572,000 fewer crimes recorded than in the preceding two years—the largest fall since records began last century.

Complete year figures are available up to the end of 1994. Since 1966 recorded crime in England and Wales has fallen in the following years:

1973, 1978, 1979, 1983, 1988, 1993, 1994.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Prime Minister what action he has taken to pay compensation to (a) British and (b) Australian nuclear test veterans from the 1950s. [14145]

The Prime Minister: In studies carried out by the National Radiological Protection Board of over 20,000 British nuclear test veterans, the incidence of death and cancer has been less than among the general public in the same age groups, and no higher than among a matched control group These facts do not sustain a case for compensation. The handling of claims in Australia is a matter for the Government of Australia.

Professor al-Masari

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library the information (a) made available to the courts about the case of Professor al-Masari and (b) passed to the Government of Dominica about Professor al-Masari; and if he will make a statement, [14130]

The Prime Minister: No. It is not my normal practice to do so.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Executive Pay

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he plans on executive pay. [12641]

Mr. Oppenheim: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Mr. French) by my hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 25 January 1996, Official Report, column 317.

British Geological Survey

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what instructions or guidance has been given to the British Geological Survey regarding private sector involvement; when he expects to receive its response; and if he will make a statement. [14115]

Mr. Ian Taylor: No specific instructions regarding private sector involvement have been given to the British Geological Survey which is a component of the Natural Environment Research Council. The BGS has a long and successful tradition of working in partnership with the private sector which I applaud. Standard conditions, for public sector research establishments working with the private sector, apply.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what ways and according to what timetable he intends to bring about the changes in the organisation and procedures of industrial tribunals he announced on 20 November 1995. [13965]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The majority of the changes require primary legislation and, as mentioned in the reply from my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes, North-East (Mr. Butler) on 20 November 1995, Official Report, column 20, detailed proposals will be brought forward when a suitable legislative opportunity arises.

Written Questions

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the written questions PQ No. 95/972, PQ No. 95/771, PQ No. 95/770, PQ No. 95/702, PQ No. 95/697, PQ No. 95/692 and PQ No. 95/691 will be answered by his Department. [14236]

Mr. Lang: PQ No. 95/770 was answered on 24 January 1996. PQ No. 95/692 was answered on 23 January 1996. The remaining questions will be answered as soon as possible.

Directors' Pensions

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to require disclosure of directors' pensions. [12678]

Mr. Oppenheim: My Department is currently consulting on proposed changes to the requirements of the Companies Act 1985 relating to the disclosure of director's emoluments, including their pension entitlements. A copy of the consultative document is available in the Library of the House. Before finalising the proposed changes, my Department will take into account the results of the current consultation by the Institute of Actuaries and Faculty of Actuaries on the method which should be used to calculate the value of directors' pension entitlements.

Grant Aid (South-west)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies have received grant aid from his Department in the south-west region since January 1990; and how many of those companies are still trading. [10112]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 January 1996]: The number of businesses in the south-west receiving grants under the principal current regional and technology support schemes in the period is as follows:

	Number
Regional selective assistance	386
Regional enterprise grant	575
Small firms merit award for research and technology	112
Support for products under research	37

As projets are normally monitored for only a limited number of years after final payment of grant, complete information on grant recipients' trading status is not readily available.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the companies in the south-west which have received financial assistance since 1985 from his Department showing (a) the year assistance was given, (b) how much was given and (c) if the company is still trading. [13109]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 1 February 1996]: A full answer to the question could be prepared only at disproportionate cost. In summary terms, the number of businesses in the south-west receiving grants under the principal current regional and technology support schemes in the period is as follows:

	Number
Regional selective assistance	514
Regional enterprise grant	639
Small firms merit award for research and technology	112
Support for products under research	37

In addition, around 2,000 payments were made under the regional development grant scheme and over 11,600 businesses received support for business reviews under the enterprise initiative consultancy service.

As projects are normally monitored for only a limited number of years after final payment of the grant, complete information on grant recipients' trading status is not readily available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

British Geological Survey

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the contracts or work done by the British Geological Survey paid for by the Overseas Development Administration, the nature of work, and the cost in each case; what arrangements need to be made to continue these programmes if the survey is privatised; and if he will make a statement. [14113]

Mr. Hanley: Following are the current contracts that the British Geological Survey has with ODA:

Contract	Country	Value £
Yaoba Oasis Environmental Project (hydrogeological consultants)	China	186,688
Establishment of coastal geology unit (IT training)	Albania	78,525
Water Resources Management, lake Balkhash (environmental impact study)	Kazakhstan	26,046
Primoyre Mineral Waters (water sampling)	Russia	24,973
Environmental Thematic Mapping	Slovakia	36,500
Resource centre scheme with ODA (call down contracts for ad hoc consultancy work)	Global	75,000
Bapedal Groundwater Project (monitoring consultancy)	Indonesia	39,200
World Bank Mining and Environmental Project (geological information mapping programme)	Ecuador	2,319,282
Coal Bed Methane Pre-feasibility study	Bangladesh	44,500
Land-ocean Contaminant study	Mexico/Africa/Indonesia	434,939
Mitigation of mining related mercury pollution hazards	Philippines/Ecuador	268,000
Protecting groundwater beneath wastewater recharge sites	Mexico/Thailand	207,271
Groundwater management in drought prone areas of Africa	Africa	142,527
Developing new well siting techniques	Zimbabwe/Egypt	203,822
Groundwater resources degradation; socio-economic impacts and their mitigation	China/India/Thailand /Mexico/Jersey/ Palestinian Territories	94,050 [1]34,000 to BGS)

[1] Joint research project with the Natural Resources Institute

If the BGS is privatised, the arrangements for continuing these programmes would be reviewed at the time. One option would be to transfer the contracts to the new owner.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the parents with care referred to in his answer of 26 October 1995, Official Report, column 803, lifted off income support following the payment of maintenance assessed by the CSA, were in receipt of mortgage interest payments made in respect of their income support entitlement. [13598]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information requested is not readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Although it is possible to give the number of parents with care lifted off income support following the payment of maintenance assessed by the Child Support Agency, it is not possible to identify those who were in receipt of mortgage interest payments as part of their income support entitlement. There is no business need for the Child Support Agency to record this information.

Cold Weather Payments

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people claimed cold weather payments in the area covered by the benefits offices in Greenock and Port Glasgow in late December; on which dates they qualified; and what was the total amount paid to those whose claims were met. [13161]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Dr. Norman Godman, dated 7 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people claimed Cold Weather Payments (CWPs) in the area covered by the benefits offices in Greenock and Port Glasgow in late December; on which dates they qualified; and what was the total amount paid to those whose claims were met.

Customers who qualify for CWPs are automatically identified by a scan of the Income Support Computer System. Those customers who are being paid clerically also have their claims examined to identify those who qualify. There is no need, therefore, for a claim to a Cold Weather Payment (CWP) to be made.

Data is not held on the number of people who qualified for a CWP, only on the number of payments made and the amount paid out in the area covered by Greenock and Port Glasgow Benefit Offices. This is because a customer may receive more than one payment in a cold weather period depending on the length of the recorded and/or forecasted period. Two recorded periods of Cold Weather were identified from 19 December 1995 to 1 January 1996 inclusive, and two forecast periods were identified from 23 December 1995 to 5 January 1996 inclusive.

On 30 December 1995, 9,070 payments were issued by the computer system amounting to £77,095. On 6 January 1996, a further 9,085 payments were made amounting to £77,222.50. Statistics are not yet available for any clerical payments which may have been made.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time taken to process a new claim for disability living allowance. [13173]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 7 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what is the average time it takes to process a new claim for Disability Living Allowance. (DLA).

The Secretary of State has set two targets in relation to new DLA claims. These are that 68% of new claims be cleared within 30 working days and that 85% be cleared within 53 working days. As at 31 December 1995, the DLA Unit cleared 70.73% new claims within 30 days and 92.57% within 53 days.

The average time for processing a DLA claim is not a target set by the Secretary of State. However, at 31 December 1995, the average length of time taken to process a new claim to DLA was 27 days.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

TRANSPORT

EU Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he ensures that the negotiating brief for his officials discussing EU legislation takes fully into account the need to minimise the burdens on United Kingdom business. [13713]

Mr. Watts: Guidance on how officials are to apply deregulatory principles when negotiating EC regulations is contained in the booklet, "Getting a Good Deal in Europe". This guidance has been supplemented by the recent publication of guidance on the preparation of compliance cost assessments, which stresses that the likely burdens on business highlighted by UK compliance cost assessments of EC proposals should be integral to the UK's negotiating strategy. Copies of both are in the Library of the House.

Car Phones

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received in respect of the use by car drivers of hand-held telephones while driving; and if he will make a statement. [14111]

Mr. Norris: My Department has received 32 letters and other representations over the past 12 months about this issue, the majority requesting legislation to prohibit the use of in-car telephones while driving. However, I believe that existing legislation provides sufficient powers of prosecution.

Road Safety

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will published the United Kingdom and EU research that he has (a) undertaken, (b) commissioned and (c) evaluated that indicates the scale and direction of the expected changes in death and serious injury from (i) the new eyesight standards for HGV drivers and (ii) the banning of coaches from the third lane of motorways. [14009]

Mr. Norris: The Department knows of no research, either published or commissioned, which could reliably estimate the effect of changes in eyesight standards for drivers in terms of a reduction in death and serious injury from road accidents. Work has begun on assessing the effect of banning coaches from the third lane of motorways, and the results will be made known when available.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what have been the costs of railway privatisation to date, broken down into (a) payments to legal, financial and other advisers and (b) administrative costs within (i) BR, (ii) Railtrack, (iii) the Office of the Rail Regulator, (iv) the Franchise Director and (v) within Government departments; and what estimate he has made of total expenditure under the same headings to the end of financial year 1995–96. [9947]

Mr. Watts: Consultancy and administrative costs incurred to date by the Department, the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising and the Office of the Rail Regulator are as follows:

Estimated rail privatisation costs at 31 December 1995

£ million

	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96[1]	Total
Consultancy costs
DOT	0.5	5.5	10.5	12.0	12.1	40.6
OPRAF	—	—	1.5	13.1	16.2	30.8
ORR	—	—	0.6	2.9	1.8	5.3
Total	0.5	5.5	12.6	28.0	30.1	76.7
Running costs
DOT	0.5	1.2	1.5	2.2	2.2	7.6
OPRAF	—	—	0.9	3.5	5.1	9.5
ORR	—	—	0.6	4.7	3.8	9.1
Total	0.5	1.2	4.5[1]	10.4	11.1	[1]27.7
ORR capital costs	—	—	0.2	1.4	0.2	1.8
Grand total	1.0	6.7	17.3	39.8	41.4	106.2

[1] To 31 December.

[2] Includes £1.5 million contribution by DOT to costs of setting up OPRAF and ORR.

In addition, the Health and Safety Executive incurred administrative costs of some £2.8 million, of which £2.0 million has be paid by the Department of Transport.

The forecast outturns to the end of the financial year are as follows:

Estimated costs in the last quarter of 1995–96

	£ million
Consultancy costs
DOT	14.8
OPRAF	9.9
ORR	2.0
Total	24.3
Running costs
DOT	0.8
OPRAF	3.3
ORR	2.2
Total	6.3
ORR capital costs	0.4
Grand total	31.0

British Rail and Railtrack have also incurred costs linked to privatisation, covering expenditure on administration, including consultancies, and on assets such as computer equipment and associated systems. Details of these costs are a matter for the industries themselves. However, we understand from BR and Railtrack that they will incur the following costs in the current financial year:

	£ million
BR	75
Railtrack	27

1. Forecast expenditure to 31 March 1996.

This expenditure has been incurred in support of Railtrack flotation and sales of rail businesses, which have so far yielded proceeds in excess of £2 billion.

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments since 1987, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14075]

Mr. Norris: My Department has made no sales of spare computer capacity to other Departments. Processing capacity in excess of departmental requirements is not maintained, and redundant IT equipment is relocated within the Department, traded in part exchange or disposed of to the trade on competitive tendering terms.

Coach Safety (Children)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to introduce regulations to improve the safety of children travelling on coaches and minibuses. [14717]

Mr. Norris: I have laid regulations before the House today which will require seat belts to be fitted to minibuses and coaches used specifically to transport children. I have also laid regulations ending, where seat belts are fitted, the concession that allows three seated children to count as two passengers.

The regulations on seat belt fitting only apply to a vehicle which is undertaking a journey specifically for the purpose of carrying children. The requirements will apply to:

all minibuses used from 10 February 1997;

all coaches used from 10 February 1997, if they are registered from 1 October 1988; and all coaches used from 10 February 1988, if they are registered before 1 October 1998.

The regulations on the "three for two" seating concession will take effect from 1 May 1996. They will recognise the incompatibility of the concession with the fitting of seat belts to minibuses and coaches.

I believe that these measures will further improve the good safety record of minibuses and coaches and will go a long way towards reassuring parents who may be concerned for the safety of their children when travelling in these vehicles.

I am pleased that we have been able to introduce these measures independently and ahead of our partners in the European Union.

Meanwhile, I will continue to encourage operators to fit all their vehicles with seat belts voluntarily. We intend to require the mandatory fitting to all new minibuses and coaches as soon as the necessary agreement has been reached in Europe.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Delegated Legislation

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the powers to make statutory instruments exercisable by the Secretary of State under primary legislation enacted since 1979 are subject to (a) the negative and (b) the affirmative resolution procedure. [9594]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 16 January 1996]: The numbers are as follows:

(a) 71 subject to the negative, and

(b) 49 subject to the affirmative resolution procedure.

Detailed tables of the measures have been placed in the Library.

Immigration (Indian Sub-continent)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his assessment as to the reasons for the increase in arrivals and departures to the Indian sub-continent in the last two years. [13345]

Mr. Kirkhope: The data on arrivals and departures are given in the table. The reasons for the increase in arrivals and departures between 1992 and 1994 are not known, but increases have occurred for all arrivals in and departures from the United Kingdom.

	1992	1993	1994
Arrivals in the United Kingdom from the Indian sub-continent of overseas residents	252,000	273,000	313,000
Departures from the United Kingdom to the Indian sub-continent of United Kingdom residents.	372,000	427,000	477,000

Internet

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 735, what progress has been made by the interdepartmental group on obscenity in examining possible measures to control access to material disseminated via the Internet; and if he will make a statement. [13400]

Mr. Sackville: We are discussing with representatives of Internet service providers any concern about the availability of pornographic material on the Internet, and ways of controlling access by children and young people to such material.

Telephone Tapping

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend the law regarding telephone tapping; and if he will make a statement. [13198]

Mr. Howard: While the Government keep the operation of the law regarding interception under review, I have no immediate plans for changes to the law in this area.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the practice of intercepting private telephone calls; [13355]

(2) if he will make a statement on the involvement of newspapers in provoking the interception of private telephone calls. [13356]

Mr. Howard: The unauthorised intentional interception of a communication in the course of its transmission on a public telecommunications system is an offence under section 1 of the Interception of Communications Act 1985. In addition, the unauthorised intentional use of wireless telegraphy apparatus to obtain information as to the contents, sender or addressee of any message, and the disclosure of such information are offences under section 5 of The Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949. Soliciting or inciting a person to commit offences under the 1985 Act and the 1949 Act is itself a criminal offence. It is for the police to investigate allegations of unlawful interception.

Reported Crime Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will express the number of reported crimes in each police authority area in 1981, 1986, 1991 and each subsequent year as a figure per head of the 18 to 24-year-old males estimated by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to be resident in each police authority area. [13262]

Mr. Maclean: The available information is for 1991–1994 and is contained in the table. Information for 1981 and 1986 is not available in the form requested.

Probation Service

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total staff establishment for the probation service in England and Wales by each grade; and how many from each grade were from an ethnic minority in (a) 1989 and (b) 1995; [13460]

(2) how many probation staff in England and Wales were from an ethnic minority in (a) 1989 and (b) 1995. [13459]

Mr. Sackville: The information available is given in the tables: they are not directly comparable since staff establishment figures are collected in whole-time equivalent terms and those of ethnic minority origin in terms of staff in post.

Information on the ethnic origin of probation staff in 1989 is not available, but figures for 1987 are shown in table B.

Table A: Staff establishment of the probation service, by grade, 31 March 1989 and 31 March 1995

Number of staff, whole time equivalent[1]

Police Cautions (Burglary)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 708, if the 959 people who were cautioned by Metropolitan police for burglary offences during 1994 have been included in the figures for crimes cleared up. [13896]

Mr. Maclean: The numbers of persons cautioned are included within the overall statistics for crimes cleared up.

Licensing Laws

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received following recent relaxation on the licensing laws; and how many have been in favour of the recent changes. [13891]

Mr. Kirkhope: The Licensing (Sunday Hours) Act 1995, which came into effect on 6 August 1995, relaxed restrictions on the opening hours of licensed premises on Sundays and Good Friday. Since then we have received 14 letters on the subject of Sunday hours, two of which were in favour of this relaxation.

Registered Drug Users (Blackpool and Fylde)

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many registered drug users there are in Blackpool and the Fylde; and what estimate he has made of the total number of habitual users of prescribed drugs in Blackpool and the Fylde. [13838]

Mr. Sackville: Analysis of data held on the addicts index at the Home Office shows that in 1995 a total of 385 drug addicts were notified from the Blackpool, Wyre and Fylde area. Of these, 270 were persons who had been previously notified in the preceding 12 months.

Asylum

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many without foundation appeals against a refusal of asylum were determined in (a) 1994 and (b) 1995; and how many of these appeals were (i) allowed, (ii) referred back to the Secretary of State for reconsideration under paragraph 5 of schedule 2 to the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 and (iii) withdrawn. [13935]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information regarding the decisions on without foundation appeals for 1995 is given in the table. The equivalent information for 1994 is published in table 8.4 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1994", issue 15/95. A copy of this publication is available in the Library.

[1] Figures are provisional and rounded to the nearest 5 or percentage.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum by persons applying (a) at a port of entry to the United Kingdom and (b) after entry were decided in 1995; and how many in each category were granted asylum and exceptional leave to remain. [13989]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information requested is given in the table.

Decisions[3] on applications [1] received for asylum in the United Kingdom[1] excluding dependants, by location of application, January to December 1995

	Principal applicants
	Applied at port	Applied in-country	Total
Asylum applications[2]	14,410	29,555	43,965

Refused under para 340[6]	—	2,085	2,085

[1] Provisional figures rounded to the nearest 5.

[2] Figures exclude information on applications made overseas.

[3] Decisions do not necessarily relate to applications made in the period.

[4] Usually granted for a year in the first instance, subject then to further review.

[5] Refused on the grounds that the applicant had arrived from a safe third country.

[6] Paragraph 180F prior to 1/10/94. For failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim within a reasonable period, including failure to respond to invitation to interview to establish identity.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of without foundation asylum appeals were determined within the time scale prescribed by the Asylum Appeals (Procedure) Rules 1993, in 1995. [13934]

Mr. Kirkhope: In 1995, 12 per cent. of all without foundation appeals were determined within the prescribed time scale.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications are currently awaiting an initial decision by his Department's asylum division; how many appeals against a refusal of asylum are currently being processed by the asylum division; and how many appeals against a refusal of asylum, which have been processed by the asylum division and despatched to the immigration appellate authority, are awaiting hearings by the authority. [13988]

Mr. Kirkhope: As at 31 December 1995, 69,650 asylum applications were awaiting initial decisions by the Home Office from people who had been refused asylum and 11,690 such appeals were awaiting hearings by the Immigration Appellate Authority.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons, having been refused asylum, (a) were removed or (b) made voluntary departures from the United Kingdom in (i) 1994 and (ii) 1995. [13990]

Mr. Kirkhope: In 1994, there were 2,108 removals, including 566 voluntary departures, of persons refused asylum. The provisional figures for 1995 are 2,629 and 759 respectively.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the average time currently taken by his Department to reach an initial decision on (a) all asylum applicants and (b) asylum applications submitted (i) prior to and (ii) following implementation of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993; [13937]

(2) what is the average time taken by his Department's asylum division to process and despatch to the immigration appellate authority an appeal against a refusal of asylum; and what is the average time taken by the authority to hear and determine such an appeal following its receipt from the asylum division. [13936]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information on the times taken at the various stages of the asylum process are given in the table.

Average times involved in deciding applications for asylum (June—November 1995)

	Months
Time taken for an initial decision to be made (pre-act applications)	40.0
Time taken for an initial decision to be made (post-act applications)	8.9
Time taken by the Home Office to process an appeal	3.7
Time taken by the Immigration Appellate Authority to determine an appeal	6.1

Mohammed Riaz and Quayyum Raja

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Mohammed Riaz and Quayyum Raja are to be informed of the decision concerning their tariff sentences; and if he will make a statement. [13743]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 5 February 1996]: These prisoners will be informed of their tariff decisions as soon as current consideration of their cases is completed.

EU Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home department how he ensures that the negotiating brief for his officials discussing EU legislation takes fully into account the need to minimise the burdens on United Kingdom business. [13711]

Mr. Howard: Guidance on how officials are to apply deregulatory principles when negotiating European Community regulations is contained in the booklet "Getting a Good Deal in Europe". This guidance has been supplemented by the recent publication of guidance on the preparation of compliance cost assessments, which stresses that the likely burdens on business highlighted by United Kingdom compliance cost assessments of EC proposals should be integral to the United Kingdom's negotiating strategy. Copies of both pieces of guidance are in the Library.

Policing of Football Matches

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the latest figures for payments received by the Metropolitan police from London's premier and football league clubs in the present football season in respect of police services. [14213]

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the Metropolitan police that the payments are those given in the table.

Club	Total paid this season[1] (£)
Arsenal	112,233.68
Barnet	18,516.48
Brentford	19,148.18
Charlton	16,162.78
Chelsea	85,180.53
Crystal Palace	81,361.96
Fulham	19,454.48
Leyton Orient	21,483.75
Millwall	51,312.31
Queens Park Rangers	41,298.09
Tottenham Hotspur	65,323.43
West Ham United	63,008.32
Wimbledon	84,739.22
Total	679,223.21

[1] As at 31 January 1996.

In addition, sums of £25,000 and £60,000 have been received respectively from the Leyton Orient and Millwall clubs, in respect of outstanding invoices for previous seasons.

Asylum and Immigration Bill

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Glidewell panel on matters related to the Asylum and Immigration Bill; and if he will make a statement. [14240]

Miss Widdecombe: I have received no such representations.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange for (a) ministerial correspondence and (b) other communications between his Department and members of the Standing Committee on the Asylum and Immigration Bill to be placed in the Library. [14282]

Miss Widdecombe: This has been arranged.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have applied to regularise their immigration status; how many such applications were (a) approved and (b) refused; how many are currently awaiting decision in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [14153]

Mr. Kirkhope: The table gives the readily available information on the numbers of persons accepted for settlement on a discretionary basis in the years 1986 to 1994, after a period of at least 10 years continuous residence in the United Kingdom. The numbers of refusals and the total number of applications made on the basis of long residence are not separately available.

Grants of settlement on the basis of long residence, 1986–94

	Number
1986	1,200
1987	1,300
1988	2,300
1989	3,300
1990	2,550
1991	2,200
1992	2,100
1993	2,050

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances people who have lived in the United Kingdom for (a) 10 years and (b) 14 years are able to apply to regularise their immigration status; what are the grounds on which the time limits of 10 and 14 years have been set; and if he will make a statement. [14121]

Mr. Kirkhope: Under the long residence concession, a person who has 10 years or more continuous lawful residence in the United Kingdom, or 14 years continuous residence irrespective of legality, may be granted indefinite leave to remain in the absence of any strong countervailing factors. The grant of indefinite leave to remain under the long residence concession is discretionary and outside the immigration rules.

The long residence concession has its origin in the European convention of establishment, article 3(3) of which provides that nationals of any contracting party who have been lawfully residing for more than 10 years in the territory of another party may be expelled only for reasons relating to public order, public health or morality. In operating the concession, however, we do not distinguish between nationals of the contracting parties and other overseas nationals.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people (a) applied, (b) were granted and (c) were refused applications to regularise their immigration status in (i) 1974 and (ii) 1977. [14122]

Mr. Kirkhope: The concession offered in 1974 to allow Commonwealth citizens who had entered the United Kingdom illegally before 1973 to regularise their stay attracted 2,430 applications, of which 1,810 were granted. This concession was extended in 1977 following further court judgments which widened the scope of illegal entry. A further 640 applications were dealt with, of which 460 were granted.

Bedford Prison

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the practice of dye-stamping the hands of visitors visiting prisoners in Bedford prison started; what is the purpose of this practice; and if he will make a statement. [14125]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alastair Papps to Mr. Max Madden, dated 8 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about Bedford prison.

Dye-stamping the hands of visitors to prisoners was introduced at Bedford in February 1995. It is an additional security measure to reduce the likelihood of the prisoner walking out of the visits area with visitors and escaping.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the arrangements in each European Union state for asylum seekers (a) to apply for social security benefit and (b) to seek employment; what time limits apply; and if he will make a statement. [14127]

Miss Widdecombe: Information about access to social security benefits and employment in other European Union countries is at paragraphs 17 to 19 of the Home Office memorandum on key asylum measures in other European countries, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that asylum seekers who are granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom are able to apply for reunion with their families in less than the four years as required at present. [14129]

Mr. Kirkhope: Those granted exceptional leave to remain will not necessarily be here on a permanent basis. They will normally be eligible for family reunion only after four years, although this may be granted earlier in cases with wholly exceptional compassionate circumstances.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy in respect of those seeking asylum in the United Kingdom participating in political activities within the United Kingdom; how that policy has changed over the past 10 years; if such involvement by an asylum seeker may be regarded as being supportive of the application; and if he will make a statement. [14123]

Mr. Kirkhope: All applications for asylum in the United Kingdom are considered in the light of all available information and in accordance with the criteria set out in the 1951 United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees.

Those seeking asylum in this country are expected to act within the law. If an asylum seeker undertakes activities in the United Kingdom which are inconsistent with his previous beliefs and behaviour and calculated to create or substantially enhance his claim to refugee status, this may damage the credibility of his claim.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the net expenditure implications of allowing asylum seekers to seek employment from the date their asylum application is lodged; and if he will make a statement. [14126]

Miss Widdecombe: The opportunity to seek employment is a major incentive for economic migrants and undeserving asylum applicants. We have no plans to relax employment restrictions for asylum seekers.

Illegal Working

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which organisations supported the proposals outlined in the consultation document on prevention of illegal working; if he will place in the Library responses in those cases where the respondent is willing for their response to be made public; if he will list those respondents who are unwilling for their response to be made public; and if he will make a statement. [14164]

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) on 6 February at column 109. I will, however, place in the Library in due course an updated list of those who have responded and a revised summary of the main points made in the responses.

Association of Circus Proprietors

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations take place between his Department and the Association of Circus Proprietors. [14154]

Mr. Sackville: The association was one of a large number of bodies consulted by the Home Office in 1993, in the course of a deregulation review. There have been no other contacts.

Immigration Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration officers there are in each of the immigration and nationality department's administrative areas. [14235]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information is provided in the following table. The figures exclude members of the Immigration Service serving at ports of entry, enforcement offices and detention centres.

Division/ Directorate	Immigration Officer	Chief Immigration Officer	HM Inspector	Total
Presenting Officer Units	—	10	—	10
Personnel Management Unit[1]	18	12	3	33
Immigration Service (Ports)[1]	15	15	9	39
Immigration Service (Enforcement)[1]	33	15	6	54
Total Staff				136

[1] Includes staff based at Croydon and West London on administrative duties

Human Rights Reports

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those organisations whose reports on human rights internationally are routinely considered by his Department; with special reference to those who consider asylum application procedures. [14119]

Miss Widdecombe: The asylum division considers a wide range of material relating to human rights including from United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Commission of Jurists, the parliamentary human rights group, the Commonwealth human rights initiative, Human Rights Watch, the Refugee Council, the Minority Rights Group, Asylum Aid, the United States Department of State and the Canadian Immigration and Refugee Board. The Department also has access to Council of the European Union Heads of Mission reports and advice from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on human rights issues. Other non-governmental and media reports are monitored on a regional or country basis.

UNHCR, Amnesty International, Asylum Aid, the Refugee Council and, in addition, the Council of Europe are known to have issued documents considering asylum application procedures.

Karamjit Singh Chahal

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will grant temporary release to Karamjit Singh Chahal from Bedford prison; and if he will make a statement. [14124]

Mr. Kirkhope: My right hon. and learned Friend is satisfied that Mr. Chahal's continued detention is necessary.

Illegal Working

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of correspondence from the Data Protection Registrar seeking clarification of the data protection implications of the use of national insurance numbers as envisaged under the consultation document on prevention of illegal working; and if he will make a statement. [14131]

Miss Widdecombe: There has been no such correspondence. However, as I made clear to the hon. Member on 6 February, we are in touch with the Data Protection Registrar on this matter.

Prisoners (Restraints)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the dates and origins of all representations which his Department received before 25 December 1995 concerning the use of restraints on women prisoners attending hospital; and if he will make a statement. [12418]

Miss Widdecombe: This information is not recorded centrally and could be supplied in the required form only at disproportionate cost.

Prosecutions (Durham)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases have been referred by Durham police to the Crown Prosecution Service in each of the last three years; how many have been prosecuted; and how many have been successful. [13246]

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

The figures shown in the tables represent the number of cases received from the police and the number of defendants whose case proceeded to a hearing in magistrates courts and in the Crown court during the calendar years 1993, 1994 and 1995, and of those, the proportion who were convicted. Convictions are inclusive of guilty pleas, as well as of contested hearings.

In the magistrates court:

Table 1 shows the number of defendants whose case was received by the CPS, and the number whose case was finalised; of defendants finalised, the number whose case was referred to the CPS for pre-charge advice, and the number of other, non-criminal, proceedings—such as forfeiture proceedings under the Obscene Publications Acts.

Table 2 shows the number of defendants whose case was not proceeded with, divided into cases where the prosecution was dropped and cases which could not proceed—for example because the defendant had died, or could not be traced.

Table 3 shows the number of those cases proceeded with, showing: the number of defendants bound over to keep the peace; the number of defendants' cases heard in the magistrates court; the number of defendants' committed to the Crown court; and the number of defendants' whose case was discharged at committal.

Table 4 shows the outcome of the cases heard in the magistrates court, showing the number of defendants convicted and the number acquitted.

In the Crown court:

Table 5 shows the number of defendants whose case was received and the number finalised. Of the number of defendants cases finalised, the table shows the number of cases which were appeals from the magistrates court or committed to the Crown court from the magistrates court for sentence.

Table 6 shows the number of defendants' cases not proceeded with, divided into those in which no evidence was offered before the jury was sworn, prosecution dropped, and those which could not proceed and were written off—for example, because the defendant had died, could not be traced by the police, or had been found unfit to plead.

Table 7 shows the number of defendants' cases proceeded with divided into the number bound over to keep the peace and the number heard in the Crown court.

Table 8 shows the number of defendants' cases heard in the Crown court which resulted in convictions and the number which resulted in acquittals.

The Crown court figures for the year 1993 include Northumbria cases as it is not possible to distinguish the Durham cases from the Northumbria cases from the statistics available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many vessels are under investigation for failing to comply with their licence conditions in 1995. [13667]

Mr. Baldry: At 31 December 1995, 84 fishing vessels were under investigation by the Ministry for suspected fisheries offences, including breaches of licence conditions.

Genetic Modification

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to monitor the long-term effects of the sale of genetically modified foods. [14151]

Mrs. Browning: The safety of foods produced using genetic modification is thoroughly assessed by the independent Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes before approval for their use is given. As a condition of this approval applicants are required to monitor routinely the genetic stability of the products that they market and provide this information to the committee.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to set up an ethics committee to examine proposals to develop and market genetically modified plants and animals. [14152]

Mrs. Browning: This matter has already been examined by two Government committees, the Committee on the Ethics of Genetic Modification and Food Use which reported in September 1993, and the Committee to Consider the Ethical Implications of Emerging Technologies in the Breeding of Farm Animals, which reported in February 1995. Both reports are available in the House of Commons Library.

Local Veterinary Inspectors

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the inquiry chaired by Divisional Veterinary Officer Hugh Morris in regard to certification procedures carried out by local veterinary inspectors. [11691]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 25 January 1996]: The report of the working party chaired by Mr. Morris, DVO was an internal discussion document not intended for publication. A copy will not, therefore, be placed in the Library.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Student Loans Company

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many people were employed by the Student Loans Company on 1 January in each of the last five years; what were the grades of those employed; and how many loans were being administered on 1 January in each of the last five years; [13847]

(2) if she will set out (a) the number of cases in which the Student Loans Company has issued county court summons against students, (b) the number of cases which have proceeded to a court hearing, (c) the number of cases in which the defendant has been either (i) ordered or (ii) agreed to repay the loan and (d) the number of cases in which the Student Loans Company has agreed to withdraw a summons, and the reason for that decision. [13848]

Mr. Forth: These are matters for the Student Loans Company. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member with the information.

Nursery School Inspections

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will place in the Library the names of the nursery schools visited by registered inspectors of education in school year 1994–95 under section 9 of the Education (Schools) Act 1992; and what is the public document which sets down the criteria used for these inspections. [14286]

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools, who heads the Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

Nursery Vouchers Scheme

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 983, concerning agreements entered into with non-statutory bodies or persons concerning her proposed extension to early years education, on what statutory authority she entered on 22 January into contract No. 0414/118/02 with Capita Managed Services Ltd. relating to the administration of phase 1 of a voucher scheme; how many responses were received to the published advertisements; and what is the value of the contract. [14284]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Secretary of State entered into the contract on behalf of the Crown in pursuance of the Crown's ordinary common law right to enter into contracts. This right does not depend on statute. One hundred and seventy companies expressed an interest in the contract. The contract was awarded by competitive tender. Its value is commercially confidential.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what budget has been allocated for phase 1 of the nursery voucher scheme in each of the four pilot authorities; and if she will give a breakdown of this budget with respect to (a) funding for new places, (b) publicity, (c) administration and (d) inspection. [14116]

Mr. Squire: The estimated cost of new places in the phase one authorities is shown in the table. The budget for publicity in phase one is £750,000. The estimated cost of inspection and administration in phase 1 is £5 million, much of this is expected to be accounted for by the preparations for inspection in phase 2.

Local authority	Estimated cost of new places £
Wandsworth	770,000
Westminster	880,000
Kensington and Chelsea	935,000
Norfolk	3,300,000

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the proportion of providers participating in (a) phase 1 and (b) phase 2 of the voucher scheme, capable of meeting the premises' requirements set out in the Children Act 1989 and the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981. [14117]

Mr. Squire: It is the responsibility of local education authorities and the governors of grant-maintained schools to ensure that all school premises comply with the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981. They will also be responsible for ensuring compliance with the revised regulations that we expect to lay before the House later this month.

The Children Act 1989 does not prescribe premises standards for registration. Local authority social services departments have regard to the space standards guidance set out in local authority circular LAC(93)1 when registering institutions.

Reception Classes

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the (a) average class size, (b) average pupil-teacher ratio and (c) average pupil-adult ratio of reception classes in England. [14110]

Mr. Robin Squire: Information about pupils and staff in reception classes is not collected centrally.

Under-fives Education

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the number and percentage of three-year-olds in (a) maintained nursery schools and nursery classes, (b) reception classes in primary schools, (c) private or voluntary sector provision an (d) pre-school provision overall. [14118]

Mr. Robin Squire: The available information for schools in England is shown in the following table. We have no reliable estimates on three-year olds in voluntary or private provision.

Pupils aged three years of age (1) in schools in England: January 1995

School type	Pupils	Percentage of population[2]
Maintained nursery schools and nursery classes	277,353	42
Infant classes in primary schools	1,309	—
Independent schools[3]	22,075	3
All schools[4]	303,467	46

[1] Full-time and part-time pupils aged three years of age at 31 August 1994.

[2] Full-time and part-time pupils aged three years of age at 31 August 1994, expressed as a percentage of the population aged three at 31 August 1994

[3] Includes pupils in direct grant nursery schools.

[4] Includes pupils in maintained nursery, primary and special schools, non-maintained special schools and independent schools.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress St. Helen's chamber of commerce, training and enterprise and Greater Peterborough and Kent TECs are making in meeting the criteria for the award of a three-year licence. [14640]

Mr. Paice: I am pleased to announce the award of three-year licences to St. Helens chamber of commerce, training and enterprise, Greater Peterborough and Kent TECs, which have now completed the process of meeting the rigorous standards that we set.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Housing Bill

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons the provisions of the Housing Bill do not extend to Northern Ireland [12827]

Mr. Moss: Provisions on housing benefit in the forthcoming Housing Bill will extend to Northern Ireland. Separate Northern Ireland legislation on homelessness and other related issues is likely to be brought forward in due course in a way which accommodates the particular circumstances of Northern Ireland.

Movilla Cemetery

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Old Movilla road, Newtownards, is designated as an access to Movilla cemetery, Newtownards; what assessment he has made of the gradient; what research he has evaluated into the impact of snow and frost on the road; if he will make it his policy to implement gritting the Old Movilla road during periods of frost and snow; and if he will make a statement. [12941]

Mr. Moss: The main entrance to Movilla cemetery is on the Old Movilla road, Newtownards. The 120m section of Old Movilla road between Movilla road and the cemetery's entrance has a very slight gradient; the remaining 390m section has a gradient of approximately 1:8. The impact of snow and ice on this road is not considered to be significantly different from many other comparable minor roads and traffic volumes are not high enough to justify its inclusion in the winter maintenance programme. However, the Department proposes to provide a grit bin along the steepest section of the road.

Strangford Ferry

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many days each of the two car ferries operated on the Portaferry-Strangford route during the month of January 1996: on how many days the passenger ferry operated in that month; what factors led to the absence of a ferry service on Monday 29 January 1996; if he will arrange an internal inquiry about the management of this ferry service; what proposals there are to provide a new ferry boat; and if he will make a statement. [12901]

Mr. Moss: During January 1996 the MV Strangford was in service for 22 days, while the MV Portaferry was not in service at all as it was, and still is, receiving its annual refit, which is required for marine safety purposes; the passenger vessel, MV Isle O'Valla was in service for six days.

No ferry service was in operation on 29 January 1996, when the MV Strangford and the MV Isle O'Valla suffered major mechanical breakdowns.

While there are no proposals to carry out an internal inquiry into the management of the ferry service, a report on the recent breakdown is presently being prepared.

Last year marine consultants carried out a review of the ferry service and, in the light of that, the Department is exploring the possibility of replacing the MV Portaferry. However, as this proposal will have to compete with other priorities it is not possible to state at this stage when a new vessel could be provided.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the net cost to public funds of the operation of the Strangford ferry, including maintenance and repairs, in the last financial year. [13170]

Mr. Moss: Approximately £333,000.

Film Posters

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy in respect of the display of posters of an explicit sexual nature at (a) the property of the Department of Environment and (b) the property of Ulsterbus; what posters for the film "Showgirls" are on display at the bus stop at Carryduff; and if he will make a statement on the display of posters in public areas. [12914]

Mr. Moss: Neither the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland nor Ulsterbus permits the display of posters of an explicit sexual nature at their property; a poster advertising the film "Showgirls" on display at the privately owned bus shelter at Carryduff was removed by the owners in mid-January. The content of advertisements is controlled by a voluntary code of conduct supervised by the Advertising Standards Authority. It is an offence under the Indecent Advertisements Act 1889 to display publicly material which is of an indecent or obscene nature.

Conservation Schemes

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the annual expenditure figures and forecasts for the (a) countryside access scheme, (b) environmentally sensitive areas, (c) farm conservation grant scheme, (d) farm woodland premium scheme, (e) habitat scheme, (f) nitrate sensitive areas, (g) moorland scheme, (h) organic aid scheme and (i) countryside stewardship for each year between 1990–91 and 1997–98. Midwives

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many midwives are employed at each hospital in Northern Ireland in (a) permanent and (b) temporary posts; and how many of those employed in these posts are (i) Roman Catholic, (ii) Protestant and (iii) in non-determined categories; [13938]

(2) how many midwives were appointed to (a) permanent posts and (b) temporary posts at each hospital in Northern Ireland to date during 1996; and how many of those appointed were (i) Roman Catholic, (ii) Protestant and (iii) non-determined at each hospital; [13940]

(3) how many midwives were appointed to (a) permanent and (b) temporary posts at each hospital in Northern Ireland during the last 12 months; and how many Roman Catholic, Protestant and non-determined midwives were appointed at each hospital. [12939]

Mr. Moss: The information requested is not held centrally.

Cookstown Bypass

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to implement the provision of a Cookstown bypass. [12590]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 7 February 1996]: A scheme to complete a bypass of Cookstown—the Cookstown eastern distributor road—is included in the Department's six to 15-year major road works programme, but its precise timing will depend on future funding levels.

Omagh Bypass

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to provide the finances necessary to conclude the Omagh bypass. [12591]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 7 February 1996]: The final stage of the Omagh throughpass is included in the Department's six to 15-year major works programme, but its precise timing will depend on future funding levels.

Volunteer Drivers

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations his Department carried out with the voluntary sector before announcing the discontinuance of exemptions for public service vehicles and road service licensing of volunteer drivers and their vehicles; and what account was taken of the decision to be in line with the 1993 strategy document of the volunteer activity unit in coming to this decision. [13799]

Mr. Moss: The health and personal social services executive has had no consultations with the voluntary sector. However, it wrote to voluntary organisations on the 20 December 1995 informing them of the Department of the Environment's intention to withdraw, probably from May 1996, exemptions from public service vehicle and road service licensing requirements for volunteer car services under the Transport Act (Northern Ireland) 1967. The HPSS executive at the same time indicated its intention to discuss ways of facilitating this change with the minimum impact on volunteers. The Department of the Environment is aware of the 1993 strategy document, but it has an overriding duty under section 6(1)(i) of the Transport Act (NI) 1967 to ensure fair competition among persons providing facilities for the carriage of passengers for reward. Volunteer car services which operate for reward are not at present exempt from road service licensing.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will specify those current European laws designed to promote fair competition which his Department assesses to be preventing volunteer car services from retaining public service vehicle exemptions; and if he will publish the legal opinion he has obtained on the subject. [13800]

Mr. Moss: Whether the exemptions from public service vehicle regulations currently granted to volunteer car services conflict with European competition law has not been tested in the courts. However, the Department of the Environment has a duty under section 6(1)(i) of the Transport Act (Northern Ireland) 1967 to ensure fair competition among persons providing facilities for the carriage of passengers for reward.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will amend the Transport Act 1967 formally to exempt volunteer car services from the road service licensing requirements of that Act. [13801]

Mr. Moss: The Department of the Environment is examining the possibility of amending the Transport Act (Northern Ireland) 1967 with a view to creating special licensing arrangements for volunteer car services while continuing to provide for the proper regulation of public transport services to ensure fair competition among persons providing facilities for the carriage of passengers for reward. The Department does not intend to proceed with plans to phase out the existing concessions until it is known whether suitable arrangements can be made.

Junior Sports Club Scheme

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost to the Sports Council of the review by Price Waterhouse of the junior sports club scheme. [13801]

Mr. Ancram: The cost to the Sports Council was £5,500.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the annual telephone costs to (a) his Department, (b) his Department's agencies and (c) his Department's non-departmental public bodies staff for each of the years (i) 1979–80, (ii) 1989–90, (iii) 1991–92, (iv) 1993–94, (v) 1994–95, (vi) 1995–96 and (vii) 1996–97; and if internal telephone directories are available to staff in all areas of (a) to (c). [11402]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 25 January 1996]: The information for the Northern Ireland Office, Northern Ireland Departments and agencies is as follows.

These figures include capital expenditure. Figures for the Compensation Agency are included in the departmental returns.

Within the Northern Ireland Office, agencies have their own internal directories. The NIO internal directory is available to NIO core staff but not to staff in the agencies.

Within Northern Ireland Departments, departmental internal telephone directories are available to all staff within those Departments and their agencies. In addition, the Department of Finance and Personnel's Telecoms branch produce a paper network telephone directory for all Northern Ireland civil service buildings connection to the DIAL telecommunications network within Northern Ireland. These directories are distributed at a ratio of one directory per three people. Government telecommunications network directories are also distributed for all buildings in the network.

Information on non-departmental public bodies could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

WALES

Local Government Finance

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated level of Government financial support for each of the new unitary local authorities and for Wales as a whole in constant prices for (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97, indicating the percentage yearly change in each case and the overall cumulative change (i) net of community care and the estimated cost of local government reorganisation and (ii) including community care and the estimated cost of local government reorganisation. [8885]

Mr. Gwilym Jones [holding answer 18 January 1996]: The figures for 1995–96, redistributed on a unitary authority basis, and final figures for 1996–97 estimated at 1995–96 prices are set out in the following table. No estimates are available for 1994–95.

(1) Comprises revenue support grant and the distributable amount from non-domestic rates, and, for 1996-97, grant under the council tax reduction scheme.
(2) Derived from indicative unitary authority standard spending assessments issued on 27 October 1995.
(3) Estimates derived from the final 1996-97 local government revenue settlement.

Provision for reorganisation costs is separate from, and additional to, the revenue settlement. For 1995–96 the Welsh Office has issued supplementary credit approvals—SCAs—of £23.1 million to county and district authorities and unitary authorities and is paying special grant of £17.6 million to the new unitary authorities to cover their running costs. For 1996–97 a further £40.0 million in SCAs is being provided to the new authorities and £2 million in special grant to meet the balance of 1995–96 running costs.

The distribution of special grant resources is given in the following table. The distribution of SCAs for 1996–97 will not be known until later in the year.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the annual increase in the 1996–97 standard spending assessment for each unitary authority excluding funding for the police and community care; [10281]

(2) if he will list the standard spending assessment for each local authority and for Wales as a whole excluding the amount specifically provided for community care (a) for 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [10282]

Mr. Gwilym Jones [holding answer 18 January 1996]: The information requested is given in the following tables. Table 1 gives the 1995–96 standard spending assessments excluding allocations for community care for counties and districts. Table 2 shows the indicative 1995–96 SSAs for unitary authorities and compares them to the final SSAs for 1996–97—excluding allocations for community care.

[3] Estimates derived from the final 1996–97 local government revenue settlement.

Community Care

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each unitary authority area and for Wales as a whole in 1996 prices the budget for community care (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [12430]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available. Local authorities' budget returns do not distinguish estimated expenditure on care in the community from expenditure on other social services. Local authorities have not yet set their budgets for 1996–97.

Osteoporosis

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sums were earmarked for (a) the treatment of, and (b) publicity about, osteoporosis in (i) 1994 and (ii) 1995. [12992]

Mr. Richards: (a) This information is not available centrally. The responsibility for providing services for osteoporosis is a matter for district health authorities. (b) No Welsh Office funds were earmarked for publicity about osteoporosis in 1994 or 1995.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning the identification and treatment of sufferers from osteoporosis. [12994]

Mr. Richards: The responsibility for the assessment and provision of services for sufferers of osteoporosis is a matter for district health authorities in the light of local priorities and resources.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of (a) the number of sufferers from osteoporosis and (b) the number of people treated for osteoporosis in Wales in each of the last three years. [12995]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional promotional measures he plans in connection with osteoporosis. [12991]

Mr. Richards: The Welsh Office does not at present have any specific plans for promotional measures aimed at reducing the impact of osteoporosis.

School Transport

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which local authorities in Wales provide free transport to schools and colleges for pupils beyond the compulsory school-leaving age. [12894]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is not available centrally.

Elderly People's Homes

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning safety and security and the prevention of accidents in homes for the elderly. [13183]

Mr. Richards: The Health and Safety Executive is responsible for developing and providing guidance on health and safety standards nationally and for the enforcement of health and safety legislation in all nursing homes and in residential homes owned by local authorities. Local authority environmental health departments are responsible for enforcement in private and voluntary residential homes.

Under the Registered Homes Act 1984 local authority social services departments are responsible for the registration of residential homes and health authorities are responsible for the registration of nursing homes.

Baglan Hospital

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has so far been expended on the site proposed for the Baglan hospital; and which body is bearing the interest charges for costs incurred. [13733]

Mr. Richards: West Glamorgan health authority has invested £5.1 million in the acquisition and initial preparation of land at Baglan moors. The funds were allocated as part of the authority's capital allocation and, as such, do not attract interest charges.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what considerations have led him to take the view that sheep in the area of north Wales hitherto restricted post-Chernobyl are now fit for human consumption. [13679]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Statutory restrictions are in place to prevent sheepmeat containing levels of radiocaesium in excess of 1,000 Becquerels per kilogram from entering the food chain. A continuing assessment programme enables suitable areas affected by restrictions to be identified for an intensive monitoring survey to determine the level of radiocaesium activity in the sheep grazing there.

When it can be shown, following intensive monitoring at the time of year when levels of activity are expected to be at their peak, that residual radioactivity has declined to acceptable levels restrictions may be removed from that area.The lat t removal of restrictions form part of the north Wales restricted area follows the successful outcome of such an assessment.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the shortfall of junior doctors in each of the health districts in Wales. [13810]

Mr. Richards: The Department has been discussing with NHS trusts what action can be taken to address the problems arising from a shortage of junior doctors in some specialities. Information on the extent of the shortfall in each health district in Wales can be provided by individual trusts and is not held centrally.

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments since 1987, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14074]

Mr. Hague: There are no cases in which the Welsh Office has sold spare computer capacity to other Departments.

Health Service Materials Management

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 980, if the sale proceeds of the existing Welsh Health Common Services Authority stores will be available for meeting (a) redundancy costs of existing authority employees in the procurement section, (b) costs of removal of the contracts division from Crickhowell house and (c) other restructuring costs. [14270]

Mr. Hague: Proceeds from the sale of stores will be available to meet restructuring and redundancy costs associated with the market test of materials management. The location of the contracting staff is a separate matter and is for the authority to decide.

NHS EstateCare

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 898, if he will list the date and means by which his predecessor's decision to privatise the EstateCare group of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority was (a) first formulated and (b) communicated to (i) NHS trusts and (ii) others with an interest; and if he will make a statement. [14272]

Mr. Hague: My Department wrote to health authorities and NHS trusts on 11 April 1994 letting them know that the privatisation of the EstateCare group was under consideration. Detailed proposals were subsequently drawn up by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority with the involvement of health authorities and NHS trusts.

HEALTH

NHS Trusts (Statistics)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce into NHS hospital trusts annual information on (a) the percentage for re-admission after treatment, (b) the number of patients who get infections and (c) the number of times the hospital has been closed to emergency admission. [13230]

Mr. Horam: No.

NHS Pension Scheme

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the policy of payment of NHS pensions to employees who are certified as long-term sick and unable to return to their employment with the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [13564]

Mr. Malone: The purpose of the national health service pension scheme is to provide pension benefits to employees on retirement. I am satisfied that it should continue to be the case. Where satisfactory independent medical opinion states that he or she is permanently incapable of efficiently discharging the duties of his or her employment an employee shall be entitled to an ill health retirement pension.

Adoption Home Studies

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each English local authority the amount currently charged for inter-country adoption home studies. [13477]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Fundholding Savings (Ownership of Assets)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who legally owns assets bought from fundholding savings; and if he will make a statement. [13720]

Mr. Malone: It depends on the use to which the savings have been put. For example, if equipment was bought for use in a trust, ownership would probably be with the trust; if the savings were used for developments in the practice, ownership would probably be with the practice.

Such expenditure has to be approved by the regional health authority to ensure benefit for patients and value for money.

Oral Cancer

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what are the annual costs to the national health service of surgery for oral cancer; and what assessment he has made of the potential savings from earlier diagnosis of oral cancer; [13768]

(2) what steps are being taken by his Department to (a) set targets for reducing oral cancer incidence and to reduce death rates from oral cancer and (b) launch an extensive nationwide public awareness campaign of oral cancer and its risks factors and a programme for dentists to aid early identification of high-risk individuals. [13807]

Mr. Malone: Information on the annual cost of oral cancer is not available centrally. There are no plans at present to introduce set targets for reducing oral cancer morbidity or mortality rates. Dentists are trained in the early recognition of abnormalities in the mouth and will refer patients for the appropriate treatment. Oral cancer can result from excessive alcohol and tobacco consumption, the risks of which are widely publicised and recognised. The Chief Dental Officer chairs the National Advisory Group on Screening for Oral Cancer which was set up last October. The group seeks to co-ordinate various strands of work being undertaken in the field of detecting and preventing oral cancers.

Newham Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure early resumption of routine and clinically urgent operations by Newham Healthcare NHS trust. [13790]

Mr. Horam: This is a matter for the trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Rosemary Walters, for details.

Job Advertisements

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many jobs have been advertised in each grade in his Department during the last three months for which records are available; and how many people have applied for each such job. [13831]

Mr. Horam: The following posts in the Department of Health and its agencies have been advertised externally since 1 November 1995:

Grade (including professional equivalents)	Department of Health		Medicines control agency		NHS estates

City and East London Health Authority

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the difference between the spending plans of the health service providers in City and East London and the available budget. [13789]

Mr. Horam: Health authorities and general practitioners fundholders negotiate and fund an agreed level of service provision with national health service trusts. It is for each trust to provide those services using the available resources.

Accident and Emergency Units (Doctors)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of doctors from overseas working in the accident and emergency units of NHS hospitals. [14105]

Mr. Malone: There were 533 overseas-qualified doctors working in accident and emergency in England as at 30 September 1994.

Note: The total includes permanent paid, locums and honorary doctors, ie those in the field of academia and research.

NHS Charges

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase NHS charges and the value of optical vouchers; and if he will make a statement. [14830]

Mr. Malone: I shall shortly lay before the House regulations to increase national health service charges in England and Wales from 1 April 1996. The prescription charge will increase by 25p, from £5.25 to £5.50 for each quantity of a drug or appliance dispensed. The fees for prescription prepayment certificates will also rise by £1.30, from £27.20 to £28.50 for a four-month certificate, and by £3.60, from £74.80 to £78.40, for an annual certificate. This will result in savings for those needing more than five items in four months or 14 in one year.

Charges for elastic stockings and tights, wigs and most fabric supports supplied through the hospital service will be increased proportionately with the rise in the prescription charge.

There will be an increase in the maximum patient charge for a single course of dental treatment begun on or after 1 April 1996. Everyone under 18 will continue to receive free treatment and about 25 per cent. of adult treatments are provided free or at reduced cost. The maximum patient charge will increase from £300 to £325. More than 99 per cent. of courses of dental treatment will not be affected by this change because fewer than three in 1,000 courses of treatment attract the maximum charge.

From 1 April 1996, the range of optical vouchers issued under the NHS optical voucher scheme will increase in value by 1 per cent. on average. The old values reflected the application of value added tax to the full cost of finished spectacles. A recent decision means that VAT should not be applied to the part of this cost which relates to dispensing the spectacles.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will lay regulations to increase charges in Scotland by the same amounts. Similar arrangements will apply in Northern Ireland.

Details of the revised charges have been placed in the Library.

Safety of Medicines

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the occasions on which (a) the Licensing Authority, (b) the Medicines Control Agency and its predecessor division of the DHSS and (c) the Committee on Safety of Medicines have taken legal action with respect to matters relating to the Medicines Act 1968; and what injunctions on what occasions have been sought preventing publication of any material relating to the efficacy or safety of medicines. [12977]

Mr. Malone: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Oral Contraceptives

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1995 to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce), Official Report, column 1153, if he will publish the full text of the advice of the Committee on Safety of Medicines to the Licensing Authority. [12979]

Mr. Malone: Such advice is confidential. The recommendations made by the Committee on Safety of Medicines at the meeting on 13 October 1995 were published in a letter from the chairman dated 18 October 1995 which was sent to doctors and pharmacists. Copies of this letter are available in the Library.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) under what legislative provision the opinion of the committee for proprietary medicinal products on the safety of combined oral contraceptives, which was requested on 11 October 1995, is being obtained; [12976]

(2) if he will publish the text of the formal referral made on 11 October 1995 by the licensing authority to the committee for proprietary medicinal products; and if he will state the legal basis for that referral. [12973]

Mr. Malone: The Medicines Control Agency has an obligation to keep other member states informed of issues on the efficacy, quality and safety of medicines. In accordance with these obligations, on 11 October 1995 the MCA requested in writing that the safety of combined oral contraceptives be placed on the agenda of the Committee for Proprietary Medicinal Products meeting of 17 to 18 October, after important new evidence about this issue became available. It is not normal practice to publish such documentation. The matter was not referred to the Committee for an opinion under article 12 of directive 75/319/EEC.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if those who made arrangements on 11 October 1995 for the meeting of the Committee on Safety of Medicines on 13 October 1995 were made aware of the formal referral regarding safety concerns relating to desogestrel and gestodene to be considered by the pharmacovigilance sub-committee of the Committee on Safety of Medicines; and what factors led to the referral. [12965]

Mr. Malone: No such referral was made to the pharmacovigilance sub-committee. I presume the hon. Member is referring to the written request made on 11 October 1995 that the Committee for Proprietary Medicinal Products place the issue on the agenda of its meeting of 17–18 October. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 19 December 1995, Official Report, columns 1149–50.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) of 19 December 1995, Official Report, column 1149, if the outside experts who attended the working group of the Committee on Safety of Medicines on 10 October and the meeting of the CSM on 13 October were informed that the proceedings were subject to the Official Secrets Act 1989. [12966]

Mr. Malone: No. Attendees of the meeting of the Committee on Safety of Medicines on 13 October 1995 and the working group meeting of 10 October 1995 were informed that the papers and proceedings of the meetings were confidential and should not be disclosed. The papers and proceedings are subject to section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors precluded consideration between July 1995 and October 1995 of safety concerns relating to desogestrel and gestodene by the pharmacovigilence sub-committee of the Committee on Safety of Medicines. [12967]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 19 December 1995 at column 1151.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the licensing authority took prior to issuing the "Dear Doctor" letter of 18 October 1995 to establish the availability of oral contraceptives deemed to be suitable alternatives to those oral contraceptives which had given rise to safety concerns. [12972]

Mr. Malone: Appropriate steps were taken. The Committee on Safety of Medicines did not advise that all women on oral contraceptives containing gestodene or desogestrel should be switched to alternative preparations immediately. In a press release issued by the Department, women taking these pills were strongly urged to continue taking them, but to see their doctor, preferably before finishing their current cycle, to discuss whether a change of pill was necessary. Women who could not visit their surgery or family planning clinic before the end of their present cycle were advised to start the next pack. Discussions regarding supply were held with pharmaceutical companies. We are not aware of major difficulties in the supply of alternative preparations that arose as a result of the CSM's advice.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received relating to safety concerns on combined oral contraceptives containing desogestrel or gestodene; and what steps he has taken in response to any such expressions of concern. [12974]

Mr. Malone: My Department has received representations from a number of sources, including doctors and other health professionals; bodies representing health professionals; members of the public; the pharmaceutical companies concerned and representatives of the pharmaceutical industry, and has responded to the issues raised.

Medicines Commission

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the chairmen of the Medicines Commission since the inception of the Medicines Commission and give for each chairman the dates on which the chairmanship started and finished, together with the total duration of the chairmanship and if the individual concerned had served as a member of the Medicines Commission other than as chairman. [12921]

Mr. Malone: The available information is as follows:

	Start and finish date
Sir Derrick Dunlop MD FRCP FRCPed	(Chairman) 1969 to December 1971
Lord Rosenheim KBE MD FRCP	(Member) 1969 to December 1971 (Chairman) January 1972 to December 1972 (1 year)
Professor A. Wilson CBE PhD MD FRCP FPS	(Member) 1969 to October 1974 (Acting Chairman) December 1972 to mid 1973
Sir Ronald Bodley Scott GCVO MA MD	(Chairman) Mid 1973 to December 1975
Professor W. Butterfield OBE MA MD DM FRCP FACP	(Member) January 1975 to December 1975 (1 year) (Chairman) January 1976 to December 1981 (6 years)
Professor Dame Rosalind Hurley DBE LLB MD DUniv(Surrey) FRCPath FFPM(Hon) FRCOG	(Chairman) 1982 to December 1993 (12 years)
Professor D. Lawson CBE MD FRCPEdin FRCPGlasg FFPM	(Chairman) January 1994 to Present (2 years 1 month)

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the occasions when the Medicines Commission has exercised its powers under section 3 of the Medicines Act 1968, and for each occasion give the date and nature of the issues examined, at whose request the powers were exercised, and if the results of the deliberations of the commission were published. [12923]

Mr. Malone: Section 3 of the Medicines Act 1968 sets out all of the general functions assigned to the Medicines Commission by or under the Act. To provide the information in respect of all the matters considered by the commission since it was established in 1969 would incur disproportionate cost. Details of matters considered by the commission are published in annual reports which are laid before the House and copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the occasions since 1968 when the Medicines Commission reviewed the committees established under section 4 of the Medicines Act 1968. [12975]

Mr. Malone: Under section 5 of the Medicines Act 1968, all section 4 committees are required to report to the Medicines Commission annually with respect to the performance of their functions. Copies of the reports are placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Clinical Trials

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what clinical trials conducted under a clinical trials exemption certificate were terminated between 1 October 1995 and 30 November 1995 at the request of the licensing authority on grounds of safety; [12922]

(2) if regulatory action relating to clinical trials involving the use of medicinal products containing (a) desogestrel and (b) gestodene has now been completed. [12971]

Mr. Malone: Any company, or investigator, wishing to conduct a clinical trial with third generation progestogens or their metabolites, would have to apply to the Medicines Control Agency in accordance with the Medicines Act 1968 and its secondary legislation, and would have to provide a justification for the use of third generation progestogens taking into account the recent advice of the Committee on Safety of Medicines in its letter dated 18 October 1995. Any regulatory action relating to clinical trials is treated in confidence between the licensing authority and the company or investigator concerned.

Medicines Act

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the sub-committees established under powers conferred by section 1 (c) of schedule 1 to the Medicines Act 1968 or section 6 of the Medicines Commission and Committees Regulations 1970, giving for each sub-committee the date on which ministerial approval was given for the establishing of the sub-committee, which Minister or Ministers gave such approval, the date on which the sub-committee first met and, where applicable, the date of the final meeting of the sub-committee. [12924]

Mr. Malone: The available information for sub-committees established by powers conferred by section 1(c) of schedule 1 to the Medicines Act 1968 is contained in the annual reports of the section 4 committees of the Medicines Act 1968, copies of which are available in the Library.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date arrangements were made by the Medicines Control Agency for the meetings with Professor Walter Spitzer and colleagues which were held on Monday 9 October 1995 and Tuesday 10 October 1995. [12925]

Mr. Malone: The arrangements were made in late September 1995.

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what written reports from the transnational study were received by the licensing authority before to the meeting of the Committee on Safety of Medicines held on 13 October 1995. [12968]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 19 December 1995, Official Report, column 1149.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the scheduled and actual meeting dates between 1 January 1995 and 31 December 1995 of the Committee on Safety of Medicines and its pharmacovigilance sub-committee. [12969]

Mr. Malone: The scheduled and actual meeting dates of the Committee on Safety of Medicines were as follows:

26 January 1995
23 February 1995
23 March 1995
27 April 1995
25 May 1995
22 June 1995
20 July 1995
21 September 1995
13 October 1995
26 October 1995
23 November 1995
14 December 1995

The scheduled meeting dates of the pharmacovigilance sub-committee were as follows:

3 January 1995
31 January 1995
28 February 1995
28 March 1995
2 May 1995
6 June 1995
4 July 1995
5 September 1995
3 October 1995
31 October 1995
28 November 1995

The meetings scheduled for 31 January 1995 and 28 March 1995 were cancelled.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list travel and subsistence expenses paid to the members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines for journeys in October 1995; and if, for each payment, he will identify the committee members concerned, the starting point, starting date, finishing point and finishing date for each journey, and list separately the sums of travel and subsistence expenses paid; [12920]

(2) if he will list travel and subsistence expenses paid to outside experts who advised the Licensing Authority of the Committee on Safety of Medicines for journeys in October 1995; if he will identify the recipient of each payment, the starting point, starting date, finishing point and finishing date for each journey and if he will identify separately the sums of travel and subsistence expenses paid. [12970]

Mr. Malone: No. This information cannot be provided for reasons of confidentiality.

EU Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on which occasions in the last three years officials have vetoed draft EC legislation on the grounds that a fiche d'impact had not been correctly prepared. [13643]

Mr. Horam: The correct preparation of fiches d'impact is a very important part of our consideration of proposals for EC legislation. It is one of the factors taken into account when Ministers consider the United Kingdom's negotiating position on a particular proposal.

Renal Services

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of patients who die each year due to renal failure through the non-availability of dialysis machines to treat them; and if he will make a statement on the remedial measures he is taking. [14061]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available. It is for individual health authorities to allocate resources to renal services based on an assessment of the needs of their population and taking account of local priorities. Good practice guidance has been issued to help authorities to carry out a proper assessment of need for patients with renal failure. Purchasing guidance will be issued to health authorities shortly.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date he received the national review of renal services; and if he will now publish it. [14062]

Mr. Horam: My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State received the report of the national review of renal services in December 1994. We are currently considering a number of issues as to how to take this forward. This includes related guidance on purchasing renal services to be issued to health authorities in time for the next contracting round.

NHS Finance

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide (a) for each region and (b) for the trusts in each region for each of the last three years (i) the original capital cash limits (ii) the net amount of subsequent transfers or adjustments, (iii) the consequent final cash limits, (iv) receipts from the sale of fixed assets and (v) capital cash payments to acquire assets excluding donated assets. [10933]

Mr. Horam: National health service trusts do not have capital cash limits. Total cash payments are controlled by external financing limits which represent the difference between trusts' internally generated resources and approved capital spend.

Health authorities and national health service trusts are not required to distinguish between the cash flows for purchased and donated assets in their accounts.

The other information requested will be placed in the Library.

Over the period the number of NHS trusts increased. As a consequence the capital resources available to trusts increased and there was a corresponding reduction in the capital resources available to health authorities.

NHS Trusts (Return on Capital)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the target figure in cash terms for the return on capital for each NHS trust annually since their inception and the actual return on capital annually; and how much of the actual surplus was (a) retained by the NHS trusts and (b) returned to the Government. [12621]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 30 January 1996]: National health service trusts are required to make a six per cent. return on their net relevant assets, not a target figure in cash terms. Tables showing the actual return achieved in percentage terms by each trust, and their retained surplus, for the financial year 1991–92 and 1992–93 will be placed in the Library. The equivalent information for the financial years 1993–94 and 1994–95 is already available in the Library within reports on national health service trusts financial performance. Tables showing amounts paid by national health service trusts to the Consolidated Fund in interest and dividends for each financial year since 1991–92—the first year national health service trusts were established—will also be placed in the Library.

NHS Trusts (Legal Costs)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions the Department has met the legal costs of workers of the boards of health trusts; which trusts were assisted; what was the cost to the Department in each case; and where provision was made for these costs in his Department's estimates. [13806]

Mr. Malone: The Department contributed towards the legal costs incurred by the non-executives of Cornwall Healthcare national health service trust in the libel action brought against them by Mrs. Abigail Kirby-Harris the former chairman. The contribution made by the Department towards the legal costs of all the litigants was £250,000 for which provision was taken in the winter supplementary estimates for 1995–96 presented to Parliament on 16 November 1995.

This is the only case in which such a payment has been made by the Department.

Mr. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what rules govern the payment by NHS trusts of legal costs incurred in actions involving members of the boards of trusts; and what sum has been incurred to date in meeting these costs. [13808]

Mr. Malone: National health service trusts meet their directors' litigation costs where required to do so under the National Health Service Act 1977, or where vicariously liable at common law for the directors' actions, or where—in appropriate cases—they have indemnified the directors against such costs.

No central record is kept of sums paid by NHS trusts towards legal costs.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

British Library

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to the letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, JH/95/M/688, what actions he is taking to pursue the issue of oral scientific history with the national sound archive of the British library. [8247]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 22 January 1996]: I propose to discuss the subject of oral scientific history with the chief executive of the British library.

Built Heritage

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she expects to publish a Green Paper on possible reforms of legislation to protect the built heritage. [13677]

Mr. Sproat: I hope to do so within the next couple of months.

Job Advertisements

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many jobs have been advertised in each grade in her Department during the last three months for which records are available; and how many people have applied for each such job. [13830]

Mr. Sproat: My Department has not advertised any jobs in the last three months.

Departmental Publications

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which of her Department's administrative manuals and internal guidance are now made public; and which remain private. [14029]

Mr. Sproat: The following internal Departmental guidance is available to the public on request:

- DNH Procedural Note on Open Government
- Code of Best Practice for Board Members
- DNH Finance Guide
- Historic Buildings Conservation Guidance for Government Departments
- Guidance for Departments on Disposal of Surplus Historical Buildings
- Guidance on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration
- Design Guidelines
- Miscellaneous Guidance on Briefing and Drafting
- Miscellaneous Guidance on Personnel Policy
- Health and Safety Guidance
- "Green" Policy Guidance

The following material is not available for public dissemination:

- DNH Security Instructions
- DNH Bomb and Fire Instructions
- DNH IT Security Policy
- DNH Guidance on Honours

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments since 1992, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14085]

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage has never sold any spare computer capacity to other Departments.

Teletext

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps she is taking to ensure that providers of Teletext and other additional services, receive parity of treatment with other public service broadcasters in the allocation of guaranteed increased capacity in the digital environment. [13819]

Mr. Sproat: Teletext, the holder of the public service teletext licence, has been guaranteed sufficient digital capacity to simulcast its existing service. The Secretary of State recently met Teletex to discuss its digital service, and is considering further its request for increased capacity.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Prosecutions (Police Officers)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list in each of the last 10 years the cases where the Crown Prosecution Service decided that there was insufficient evidence to prosecute police officers for (a) assault, (b) wrongful imprisonment and (c) malicious prosecution where a private prosecution subsequently produced a conviction; what damages were paid in each such case; and what disciplinary action was taken against each police officer in each of these cases. [13436]

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service came into existence in 1986. It does not maintain statistics of allegations of criminal offences committed by police officers broken down by type of offence. Nor does it collect or maintain statistics about any private prosecution that may follow a decision not to prosecute whether or not that prosecution results in a conviction. Damages are normally only paid in the context of civil rather than criminal proceedings but are, like disciplinary proceedings, matters for the police force concerned and do not involve the Crown Prosecution Service.

DEFENCE

Porton Down Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what have been (a) the nature and (b) the period of the collaboration between the Porton Down Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment and the common cold unit at Harnham Down, Salisbury since 1966; [13000]

(2) what research the Porton Down Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment has carried out into the common cold since 1966; and what were the conclusions of this research; [12998]

(3) what experiments in conjunction with the common cold unit in Salisbury volunteers from the service volunteer programme organised by the Porton Down Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment have taken part in since 1966; what was the purpose of these experiments; how many volunteers were involved in these experiments; and what were the conclusions of these experiments. [12999]

Mr. Arbuthnot: These matters are for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 8 February 1996:

Your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what research the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment has carried out on the common cold; about collaboration between CBDE and the Common Cold Unit at Harnham Down; and about which experiments volunteers from the Service volunteer programme and the Common Cold Unit worked in conjunction, have been passed to me to reply as the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency which includes CBDE. I am answering all three questions in this letter.

CBDE has never carried out research into the common cold. We understand that research on this subject was primarily undertaken by the Common Cold Unit at Harnham, Salisbury which is now closed. That unit was administered by the Medical Research Council and had no connection with CBDE. No collaborative work has been carried out between the two establishments and no experiments were conducted which involved the use of volunteers at CBDE in the work of the Common Cold Unit, nor did volunteers at the Common Cold Unit take part in studies at CBDE.

I hope this information is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 January, Official Report, columns 528–30, if he will give the full title of each research contract and the university department involved for each of the contracts listed. [13105]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 8 February 1996:

Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking if he will give the full title of each research contract and the university department involved for each of the contracts listed in my letter to you of 16 January has been passed to me to reply as the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency which includes the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

As stated in my letter of 16 January nineteen contractors in ten universities have agreed to make their contractual relationships know to the public. The full titles of the agreements and the department in which they are being conducted are given below.

University of Birmingham—three contracts

Gas Phase Ion Molecule Reactions—School of Physics and Space Science

Decontamination of Chemical Warfare Agents with Dendrimers—School of Chemistry

Identification of the Biological Composition of Ambient Aerosols—School of Biological Sciences

University of Bristol—two contracts

Behaviour and Sleep patterns—Department of Psychopharmacology

Ocular Hazards from Microwaves—Department of Ophthalmology

University of Durham—one contract

Solid State Nuclear Magnetic Resonance Study of Adsorption Processes—School of Chemistry

University of Hull—two contracts

Chemiluminescence Based Detection Systems for Liquid Chromatography—School of Chemistry

Development of Chemiluminescence Based Detection Systems for Organophosphorus Compounds—School of Chemistry

University of Leeds—one contract

Effect of Infusion Fluids on the Host Defence Mechanisms—School of Medicine

University of Newcastle-upon-Tyne—one contract

Synthesis and Reactions of Therapeutic Nucleophiles—Department of Chemistry

University of Southampton—two contracts

EEG, Drugs, Brain Mapping and Cognition—Clinical and Neurological Sciences Group

Adsorption and Desorption of Methyl Salicylate on Colpro Wall Finishes—Department of Chemistry

University of Warwick—one contract

Structural Studies of Peptides using Mass Spectrometry—Department of Chemistry

University of Manchester Institute of Science & Technology (UMIST)—five contracts—all with the Department of Chemical Engineering

Evaporation of Thickened Agency Simulant Droplets from Porous Surfaces

Field Experiments on Secondary Source Generation by Obstacle Wake Entrainment

Atmospheric Dispersion around Elemental Structures

Wind Flow and Dispersion Model Evaluation

Pressure and Temperature Swing Adsorption Model

I hope this information is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 317, how many times in (a) 1993, (b) 1994 and (c) 1995, the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment placed requirements for volunteers in "Defence Council Instructions"; and if he will place copies of these in the Library. [13092]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 8 February 1996:

Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking how many times in 1993, 1994 and 1995, the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment placed requirements for volunteers in Defence Council Instructions; and if he will place copies of these in the Library has been passed to me to reply as the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency which includes CBDE.

Requests for volunteers were published in Joint Service Defence Council Instructions (DCIs) on three occasions in 1995, four occasions in 1994, and twice in 1993. Joint Service Defence Council Instructions are restricted documents and we do not normally release them. I have, however, set out below an example of one of these adverts.

I hope this information is helpful.

76/94 Volunteers for Studies at Chemical & Biological Defence Establishment Porton Down (R)

1. Your attention is drawn to NAGO's Article 1095, AGAI Vol 3 Chapter 117 and RAF GA1 J5051, and the requirement for servicemen and servicewomen to volunteer to take part in studies and tests of Chemical and Biological defence equipment at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment (CBDE) Porton Down. Volunteers could earn additional pay up to £250 (less tax), or in special cases more, for a three week study and proportionately less for the shorter studies. CBDE is well aware of the many pressures on commanding officers and the difficulties of releasing personnel for duties outside the role of their command. However, it is stressed that this Service volunteer scheme plays an essential part in the development of Chemical and Biological defence equipment. Commanding Officers excluding RAF Germany units are therefore asked to give this requirement maximum publicity by repeating it in daily/unit routine orders and to release volunteers whenever possible to take part in these studies.

2. The dates of assembly and dispersal for the formal programme for the period January to April 1995 are shown at the ANNEX. Additional special intakes are sometimes required which are notified by signal giving as much notice as possible.

3. It should be noted that only regular members of HM Forces serving in the UK and BAOR can be accepted as volunteers.

Annex: Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment Programme for the period 9 January–7 April 1995

Duration	Dates	Number required	Special requirements
3 Weeks	9 January–27 January	4	All the same sex
3 Weeks	9 January–27 January	4M
2 Weeks	30 January–10 February	2M
3 Weeks	13 February–3 March	4	All the same sex

3 Weeks	20 March–7 April	4M
1 Week	27 March–31 March	4	All the same sex

N.B. All volunteers are to be P2 or above and not on any medication.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions are placed by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment on the provision to volunteers of copies of the original laboratory reports of the experiments in which they participated; what factors underlie the imposition of these restrictions; and if he will make a statement. [13091]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 8 February 1996:

Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what restrictions are placed by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment on providing volunteers who took part in the service volunteers' programme with copies of the original laboratory reports of the experiments in which they participated, and what factors underlie these restrictions has been passed to me to reply as the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency which includes CBDE.

It would perhaps be helpful to explain clearly the type of records held by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment regarding the Service volunteer programme. Records of the volunteers involved in the Service volunteer programme from 1940 to 1990 are held in summary books. These summary books contain the volunteer's name, service number, date of attendance and a brief, often one word, description of the study in which they participated. In some cases this information is all that we have to describe the study. We are able to supply some additional details for most volunteers who took part in studies involving exposure to chemical warfare materials such as mustard gas and nerve agent from exposure record books. These laboratory records, containing some experimental detail, were working papers to be used in the preparation of technical reports.

The technical reports on studies in which volunteers participated are themselves available for some areas of work although a number of these remain classified. These reports do not identify individual volunteers but can provide general background information on the type and nature of the study in which the volunteer took part. Since 1990 and the introduction of formal written volunteer protocols the record books identify the protocol number(s) for the trials in which volunteers participated and a cross reference can be made to copy of the protocol held in the archive to determine the experimental details.

It has long been a policy of CBDE to make available to a volunteer's medical practitioner as much information as possible in order to assist with the medical management of the volunteer's case. It has also been policy to give, when they inquire, a general outline of the studies in which they participated to the individual volunteers.

I hope this information is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 December 1995, Official Report, column 1172, if he will list the titles of each of the unclassified documents published under the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment technical papers series since 1991. [13108]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 8 February 1996:

Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking if he will list the titles of each of the unclassified documents published under the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment Technical Paper series since 1991 has been passed to me to reply as the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency which includes CBDE.

As the list of Technical Papers accompanying this letter is too long to be printed in the Official Report, arrangements will be made for a copy to be deposited in the Library.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the titles and subject matter of the scientific papers in the Porton technical papers series produced by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment which bear the numbers 905, 911, 913, 916, 920 , 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 930, 931, 933, 934, 935, 936 and 941. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the titles and subject matter of the scientific papers in the Porton Technical Papers series produced by the Chemical Defence Establishment bearing the numbers 905, 911, 913, 916, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 930, 931, 933, 934, 935, 936 and 941 has been passed to me to reply as the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency which includes CBDE.

All the Porton Technical Papers referred to in your question are available in the Public Records Office at Kew with the exception of Porton Technical Paper 941 which will be released under the 30 year rule in 1997. The title of this paper is "Studies on model compounds related to inhibited cholinesterases". Since it may help your research I have listed below the Public Record Office piece numbers of the Papers that have been released.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: Top ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (i) the categories of (a) aircraft and (b) types of mission for which aircrew are required to book entry into a low-level operational training area and (ii) the controlling authorities for each of the low-level operational training areas. [13206]

Mr. Soames: Tornado F3 aircraft wishing to conduct intercept training within a low-level operational training area. are required to book into that LOTA. LOTAs are solely a management tool for HQ No. 11 group and have no status in terms of airspace reservation or regulation. There are therefore no nominated controlling authorities for any of these areas. Any aircraft using a LOTA but wishing to operate at low level, is still required to book into the UK low flying system in the normal way.

Mr Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the crew of the Belgium Alpha jet involved in an aircraft proximity incident over East Anglia on 25 August 1994 were found to have breached low flying regulations. [13257]

Mr. Soames: The Alpha jet entered the UK low flying system without authorisation during a transit flight which was intended to be conducted above 2,000 ft.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information is provided to the civil air traffic control authorities concerning levels of military air activity in low-level training areas; and how civil users of that airspace are informed. [13208]

Mr. Soames: All intense or unusual military low flying activity is notified to both civil air traffic control authorities and civil airspace users by means of notices to airmen or aeronautical information circulars.

In addition, general information on military low flying operations is contained in aeronautical information circulars which are widely available within the civil aviation community.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the United States air force F15 crews involved in a breach of controlled airspace at Newcastle airport on 27 June 1994 had received a briefing on the United kingdom low flying system from RAF personnel before flight; if the sortie involved planned interaction with any British military aircraft at low level and in which areas; and if the F15 crews had obtained authorised bookings into (a) low flying area 16, (b) low flying area 12 and (c) low flying area 11 before the flight. [13256]

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Job Advertisements

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many jobs have been advertised in each grade in his Department during the last three months for which records are available; and how many people have applied for each such job. [13837]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I will write to the hon. and learned Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Services Sound and Vision Corporation (Cyprus)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to (a) encrypt the SSVC service in Cyprus and (b) provide decoders for people on the bases; what estimate he has made of the cost; and if he will make a statement. [13497]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 6 February 1996]: Encryption of the SSVC TV service in Cyprus is under consideration, as a means of ensuring that transmissions are not received by those who are not entitled to them under existing commercial rights agreements. The estimated cost of encrypting the TV signal and providing decoders to entitled personnel is £600,000. In addition, there would be an annual cost of about £40,000 in issuing, recovering and maintaining the decoders which would remain MOD property. No decisions will be taken about whether to proceed with encryption of the SSVC service until my Department has established if this could be cost-effective.

Royal Flight

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 February 1996, Official Report, column 849, if he will list the dates and destinations of the flights, the type of aircraft, the cost of each, if they were single or return journeys and which royal household was charged. [14038]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

Date	Destination	Aircraft	Charge £	Household
1 July 1995	Northolt	BAe 125	735	HRH the Prince of Wales
1 July 1995	Aberdeen	BAe 125	735	HRH the Prince of Wales
1 July 1995	Kensington palace	Wessex	1,215	HRH the Duke of Edinburgh
1 July 1995	Sandringham	Wessex	1,325	HRH the Duke of Edinburgh
3 September 1995	Teeside	BAe 146	1,558	HM the Queen
5 September 1995	Aberdeen	BAe 146	1,558	HM the Queen
10 December 1995	Northolt	BAe 146	1,187	HM the Queen
1 January 1996	Zurich	BAe 146	1,232	HRH the Prince of Wales

F16 Aircraft

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what estimate he has made of the cost of leasing American F16 aircraft; and if he will make a statement; [14147]

(2) what estimate he has made of the cost of upgrading Tornado F3s; and if he will make a statement; [14146]

(3) what assessment has he made of the interoperability of American F16 aircraft within the Royal Air Force; [14148]

(4) what is the cost per flying hour of (a) a Tornado F3 and (b) an American F16 aircraft. [14150]

Mr. Arbuthnot: As I told the hon. Member in response to his question of 15 January 1996, Official Report, column 430, we are evaluating a proposal to upgrade the Tornado F3's weapons systems, and as a routine part of this process we are examining the comparative costs of alternative options, including leasing F16 aircraft from the United States.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with Air Chief Marshall Sir Michael Graydon concerning the leasing of American F16 aircraft; and if he will make a statement. [14149]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Options for sustaining the effectiveness of our air defences, pending introduction into service of Eurofighter, are one of a number of subjects covered in discussions between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and Sir Michael Graydon.

Defence Medical Training Organisation

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about defence agency status for the Defence Medical Training Organisation. [14737]

Mr. Soames: Following my announcement in the House on 8 December 1994, Official Report, columns 304–5, in which I confirmed the recommendations made by the "Front Line First" medical study, it has been decided that the Defence Medical Training Organisation, is to be considered as a candidate for agency status under next steps procedures. Any interested party should address comments on this proposal to Mr. D. K. Reynolds, Head of Medical Finance and Secretariat, Ministry of Defence, Room 106, Lacon house, Theobalds road, London WC1X 8RY.

Equerries

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 537, if he will list those responsible in each of the services for nominating equerries for members of the royal family. [14209]

Mr. Soames: The information is as follows:

Royal Navy: the Naval Secretary.

Army: the Military Secretary.

Royal Air Force: the Air Secretary.

Royal Yacht

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to his Department of the use of the royal yacht at Cowes between 28 July and 2 August 1995; and what use was made of her during this period. [14155]

Mr. Soames: The estimated total operating costs of HMY Britannia for the financial year 1995–96 are £8,933,000. Information on the marginal costs of individual deployments could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Britannia's attendance at Cowes continues the traditional and popular royal patronage of this event.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 534, what factors led to the presence of the royal yacht in Walvis bay on 14 March 1995. [14210]

Mr. Soames: While sailing to South Africa, in support of the royal visit by Her Majesty the Queen and HRH the Duke of Edinburgh, HMY Britannia stopped in Walvis bay, Namibia, to refuel. The opportunity was taken for the British high commissioner to hold a reception aboard for the Namibian Prime Minister.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 535, what factors led to the presence of the royal yacht in Piraeus on 4 October 1995; what was the purpose of the reception; what were the costs to his Department; and what payments were received from other Government Departments. [14214]

Mr. Soames: In October 1995, HMY Britannia visited Pireaus in support of the "Britain in Greece" festival, at the request of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Her Majesty's ambassador held a reception aboard Britannia, and British Invisibles held a seminar, lunch and evening reception, to promote British exports and attract inward investment to the UK. There were no additional costs incurred by the Ministry of Defence, over and above normal running costs, and no payments were received from other Government Departments.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 534, what amount was received in 1994–95 for the use of the royal yacht Britannia from (a) Government Departments and (b) other organisations. [14211]

Mr. Soames: Charges for the use of Britannia are not levied on the sponsors of commercial events when she is used to promote British exports and attract inward investment to the UK. There were no additional costs incurred by the Ministry of Defence, over and above normal running costs, and no payments were received from other Government Departments or other organisations.

Unexploded Bombs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he received in (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96 in respect of unexploded bombs in the Bristol channel obstructing civil engineering operations. [14271]

Mr. Soames: My Department has received no representations on this matter.

HMS Intrepid

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent in maintaining HMS Intrepid in her current condition; and what time period would be required to bring the vessel into operational capability in an emergency. [14281]

Mr. Arbuthnot: HMS Intrepid is currently undergoing a maintenance period, the total estimated cost of which is £8 million. Operational readiness states of Her Majesty's ships are classified.

HMS Fearless

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been spent on HMS Fearless to bring her into operational capability; what exercises she will take part in over the next year; and how long she will remain operational. [14280]

Mr. Soames: HMS Fearless is currently undergoing a routine docking and essential defect maintenance period at Portsmouth to ensure the continuing satisfactory operation of the ship. The total estimated cost of this work is £32 million.

After work-up and trials following her present maintenance period, HMS Fearless is scheduled to take part in Exercise Purple Star off the US coast in April, and then in other amphibious exercises in the Caribbean until the end of July. In October and November, she is planned to participate in exercises in the northern fleet exercise areas. She is also scheduled to take part in a series of exercises in the middle and far east during 1997.

We are currently negotiating with Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd over the replacement of HMS Fearless and her sister ship HMS Intrepid. Assuming a satisfactory outcome to these negotiations, we would envisage entry into service around the turn of the century. HMS Fearless is planned to remain operational until then.

NATO Air Command and Control

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the NATO air command and control system program. [14273]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The ACCS programme will provide NATO with a fully integrated air command and control system covering the NATO Europe area and including a deployable capability. The procurement specification for the first phase of the system is being prepared. British industry has been fully informed of progress with the programme and will be invited to bid for a share of the work.

TREASURY

Single Currency

12. Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with the Governor of the Bank of England regarding a single currency. [12647]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I meet the Governor regularly to discuss a range of economic and financial issues.

Taxation

15. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total value to holders of deposit accounts of the proposed 20p tax rate. [12650]

Mr. Jack: The bulk of the £400 million full year cost of reducing the tax rate on savings is in respect of interest from savings accounts.

VAT (Sanitary Products)

16. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reduce the rate of VAT on sanitary products. [12651]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

17. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the public sector borrowing requirement. [12653]

Mr. Waldegrave: The 1995 Budget forecast projected a public sector borrowing requirement of £29 billion in 1995–96.

Inflation

18. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest annual rate of inflation. [12654]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Underlying inflation, as measured by the retail prices index excluding mortgage interest payments, was 3 per cent. in December 1995. Inflation has now been below 4 per cent. for 39 months, the longest such period for almost 50 years.

Incomes

19. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the quarterly figures for real personal disposable income for the first three quarters of 1995. [12655]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Latest figures show that the level of real personal disposable income in the first three quarters of 1995 was 2 per cent. higher than in the first three quarters of 1994. The precise figures are published by the Central Statistical Office in table A.9 of "UK Economic Accounts", No. 12, which is available in the Library of the House.

Budget

20. Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received on his latest Budget. [12656]

Mr. Jack: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor has received a number of representations, both written and oral, since he made his Budget statement in November.

Taxation (Multinational Companies)

21. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the tax revenues lost in transfer pricing abuses by multinational companies in the past five tax years. [12657]

Mr. Jack: The Inland Revenue devotes significant resources to ensuring that the transfer pricing legislation is compiled with, and any evidence of non-compliance is carefully investigated. Over the past five tax years, the estimated total tax from inquiries made by the specialist section at the Inland Revenue which deals with the largest cases with international aspects, including transfer pricing, was £793 million. This does not include additional tax arising from work in the Inland Revenue's local offices or at the oil taxation office, separate records of which are not kept but which would significantly increase the total. It is not possible to estimate the amount of tax revenue lost through any failures to follow the transfer pricing legislation of which the Inland Revenue has not become aware.

Company Taxation

22. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet small business men to disclose company taxation; and if he will make a statement. [12658]

Mr. Jack: The Government attach great importance to the role of small businesses in the economy, and Ministers meet small business men and their representatives regularly to discuss their concerns.

As well as the cuts in income tax and the small companies rate of corporation tax, my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor announced in the Budget measures on inheritance tax, capital gains tax, employers' national insurance contributions, business rates, and VAT to help small businesses prosper. Representatives of small businesses continue to be fully involved in consultations on the introduction of self-assessment.

Investments

23. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received regarding investment levels. [12659]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Treasury Ministers regularly receive representations on wide-ranging aspects of the economy including, from time to time, investment levels.

Living Standards

24. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the likely change in living standards in the next year. [12660]

Mr. Jack: A family on average earnings will be about £450 better off next year after tax and inflation, if prices and earnings rise in line with the assumptions published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report". This will take the total increase in real take home pay since 1978–79 for this family to over £4,500.

Bank of England

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors he has taken into consideration in assessing the viability of the Bank of England regional branches; and if he will make a statement. [12643]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Decisions on the Bank of England regional branch network are a matter for the bank. The bank has made it clear that it will maintain and enhance the work of its regional agents in gathering economic and industrial intelligence.

Sanctions (Libya)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what general estimate he has made of the cost to the Treasury of sanctions against Libya in terms of tax and import duties foregone. [12728]

Mrs. Angela Knight: United Nations Sanctions against Libya impose no restriction on the importation of goods from Libya. It is not possible to estimate the effect on tax and import duties as a result of the United Nations sanctions on Libya.

Regional Statistics

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if official statistics for the regions of England will in future be published on the basis of the Government office areas rather than the standard statistical regions used at present. [14716]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Responsibility for general questions on the presentation of official statistics rests with the Director of the Central Statistical Office in his capacity as the head of the Government statistical service. However, I understand that it is now agreed that Government statistical service publications will use the boundaries of the Government offices for the regions as the primary basis for the presentation of statistics from 1 April 1997. Where possible, however, and if required, data will continue to be made available for the standard statistical regions.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals are currently (a) earning less than £7,500 per annum and (b) between £7,500 and £10,000 per annum aged (i) 21 to 25, (ii) 26 to 30 and (iii) 31 to 35 years in (1) the east midlands and (2) the west midlands. [13997]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 7 February 1996]: Information available from the New Earnings Survey is provided in the following table.

New earnings survey 1995
Full-time employees on adult rates, whose pay was unaffected by absence

	Percentage[1] earning:
Area/age group	<£7,500per annum	£7,500–£10,000per annum
West Midlands
21–25	12.3	27.7
26–30	5.2	14.6
31–35	3.9	10.2
East Midlands
21–25	16.4	23.3
26–30	5.7	14.9
31–35	4.8	9.6

[1] Figures are based on gross weekly earnings.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of (a) the benefits and (b) the disbenefits to the United Kingdom of joining the European monetary union. [12672]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: At this stage it is not possible to make precise judgments about the benefits and disadvantages of joining a single currency. As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has said, we would be operating on hunch rather than facts if we were to make a decision on any assessment now. This is the value of the opt-out. We will only agree to take part in a single currency if it is in our national interest to do so, given the circumstances at the time.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, (1) pursuant to his statement in European Standing Committee B of 12 December 1995, Official Report, column 3, what are the criteria he will use for assessing whether economic convergence has been arrived at to justify entry into economic and monetary union; [13437]

(2) what are the criteria for the national interest which will be used by the Government to determine a view to recommend to Parliament on whether to opt in or out of economic and monetary union. [13441]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The nominal convergence criteria are set out in the Maastricht treaty. All member states need to concentrate on achieving sustainable recoveries and getting unemployment down. The nominal convergence criteria require Governments to bear down on inflation and reduce fiscal deficits. These policies represent sound economics. As well as the Maastricht criteria, the Government believe that measures to address differences in productivity growth and flexibility of labour markets should also be put in place to help ensure durable convergence. The treaty refers to indicators which reflect these structural differences: trade balances on the current account; the integration of markets; and the development of unit labour costs.

Protocol No. 11, annexed to the EC treaty, means that the United Kingdom shall not be obliged or committed to move to the third stage of economic and monetary union without a separate decision to do so by the Government and Parliament. We will agree to take part in a single currency only if it is in our national interest to do so, given the circumstances at the time. Any decision will be based on a hard-headed assessment of British national interest in terms of jobs, capital investment and ability to sell goods and services in world markets.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what have been the costs to Her Majesty's Government of participating in discussions in the European Monetary Institute and at all ministerial and other meetings to discuss economic and monetary union; and if he will list the costs to date and projected costs up to 1999 in each category of expenditure. [13438]

Mrs. Knight: Ministers and officials attend many meetings on economic or monetary affairs, some of which include discussions of economic and monetary union. It is not possible to separate the costs of participating in discussions on EMU.

HEALTH

Community Psychiatric Nurses (Northumberland)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner fundholders in the Northumberland health authority employed community psychiatric nurses in each year since 1992. [13485]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Alternative Medicine

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how his Department encourages the provision of alternative medicine in the national health service. [13974]

Mr. Horam: As with other forms of treatment, it is for local purchasers to decide, in the light of available resources and competing priorities, on the purchase of the most appropriate forms of treatment to meet the assessed health needs of their population. The reforms we have introduced into the national health service have made it easier for those doctors who would like to provide alternative medicine services for their patients to do so.

Departmental Publications

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of his Department's administrative manuals and internal guidance are now made public and which remain private. [14030]

Mr. Horam: My Department has a good record for publishing internal guidance documents. In the last 12 months, examples include:

Department of Health: Public Health, the National Health Service and Social Care: Statement of Responsibilities and Accountabilities.

NHS Executive Business Plan—1995–96.

Guidance to NHS bodies—71 health service guidelines were issued in 1995.

The NHS Priorities and Planning Guidance for 1996–97 issued to all health authorities, trusts and general practitioners and freely available to others who have requested them.

Guide to the NHS, published in March circulated to all parts of the NHS to explain to staff and the public how the NHS works and the basis on which it works.

The Medicines Control Agency's updating "Mail", issued bimonthly, giving guidance on new operational procedures and information on licensing times.

Copies of these documents, along with the Department's own guidance to staff on the code of practice on access to Government information, issued in April 1994, have been placed in the Library.

This guidance makes it clear that any requests for information about administrative manuals and internal guidance should be dealt with in accordance with the code of practice. Each particular request should be individually assessed, and non-disclosure of information should occur only where the exemptions in part II of the code apply.

Junior Doctors (Hours)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many junior doctors are currently working more than 72 hours per week. [14056]

Mr. Malone: Our task forces report that at 30 September 1995, there were 1,719 junior doctors and dentists contracted to work for more than an average of 72 hours a week. That is just 6.1 per cent. of the 27,994 junior doctors and dentists in England and includes 1,424 juniors in non-onerous posts where the limit on hours is not due to fall to 72 a week until the end of 1996.

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments since 1987, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14089]

Mr. Horam: We have not sold and do not sell spare computer capacity. The Department of Health's information technology infrastructure comprises personal computers on the desk, linked to servers in each office via local area networks which in turn are linked nationally via a wide area network. Any spare capacity, such as there is, does not lend itself to being sold for both technical and security reasons. The Department outsourced its mainframe computer capacity to the private sector last year following a market test.

Central Sheffield University Hospitals Trust

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to dismiss the chairman of the Central Sheffield University Hospitals trust. [14524]

Mr. Horam: None.

Paediatric Consultant Posts

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many paediatric consultants have been employed by the NHS in each year since 1991. [14459]

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the table.

England hospital staff as at 30 September each year paediatric and paediatric Neurology Consultants

Consultants	Number	WTE
1991:
Paediatrics	789	723.0
Paediatric neurology	16	14.7
Total	805	737.7
1992:
Paediatrics	839	768.6
Paediatric neurology	15	13.5
Total	854	782.1

England hospital staff as at 30 September each year paediatric and paediatric Neurology Consultants

Consultants	Number	WTE
1993:
Paediatrics	917	842.1
Paediatric neurology	15	13.7
Total	932	855.8
1994:
Paediatrics	996	903.2
Paediatric neurology	13	11.8
Total	1,009	915.0

WTE = whole time equivalent.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will include in the next set of NHS performance tables information on the patients charter standard on emergency admission through accident and emergency departments. [14909]

Mr. Malone: As my answer of 28 November, Official Report, columns 601–02 implied, there are no immediate plans to include information on trusts' performance in meeting the patients charter standard on emergency admission through accident and emergency departments.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to limit direct care payments to physically disabled people under 65 years of age. [14132]

Mr. Bowis: The Government issued a consultation paper on 15 January 1996 on the Community Care (Direct Payments) Bill and copies are available in the Library. The paper sets out a number of alternatives as to which groups of people will be eligible in the first instance to receive direct payments in lieu of community care services, and seeks views. We shall consider carefully the responses that we receive before deciding on the definition of eligibility to be used.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that those asylum seekers who are granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom are not required to renew that leave annually. [14128]

Mr. Kirkhope: Exceptional leave to remain is not a permanent status and it is appropriate to review periodically whether a person granted it continues to qualify. Although exceptional leave is normally granted for 12 months in the first instance, extensions are usually for a three-year period.

Immigration Officers

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration officers there are under the enforcement directorate employed in the areas of (a) London, (b) west London, (c) the south-west, (d) the midlands, (e) East Anglia, (f) the north-west, (g) the north-east and (h) Scotland. [14239]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information set out in the table relates to warrant-holders at all levels in the enforcement directorate engaged in the enforcement of the immigration laws or in detention-related activities. In addition, immigration officers within the ports directorate are engaged in after-entry enforcement work subject to the needs of the on-entry control.

Numbers of immigration officers in the enforcement directorate

	Number
London (excluding west London)	153
West London	144
South-west	1
Midlands	33
East Anglia	1
North-west	13
North-east	7
Scotland	1

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Crown Copyright

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the arrangements proposed for the administration of Crown copyright. [14926]

Mr. Freeman: The Government propose to privatise Her Majesty's Stationery Office during the summer of 1996. We shall retain a residual body, which will keep the title "HMSO", to administer Crown copyright and to fulfil certain statutory responsibilities and oversight of the Gazettes. The residual body could also administer parliamentary copyright if Parliament so wished. Irrespective of the privatisation, we intend that administration of Crown copyright should be further separated from official publishing functions.

The residual HMSO will continue to administer Crown copyright with a view to making official information as widely and readily available as possible, taking into account the need to protect the interests of the taxpayer.

The Government will continue the existing arrangements for non-exclusive licensing of Crown material. These include concessionary arrangements for certain educational and non-commercial purposes. The Government will continue the existing policy of allowing secondary publishers, without charge or prior permission and on a non-exclusive basis, to reproduce in value-added print format Acts, statutory instruments and statutory rules and orders. I have decided that this concession should now be extended to electronic and microform formats.

Reproduction in printed format of quasi-legislative material will continue to be licensed on a non-exclusive basis, according to the policy described in HMSO's "Dear Publisher" letter of 6 February 1995, reference QLM/2, and the Cabinet Office circular DEO (PM)(95)4), copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Protection and enforcement of Crown copyright will be a function of residual HMSO, in collaboration with the originating Department or agency. Where material created in Government has inherent commercial value and the interests of the taxpayer in recovering the costs of preparation and production can best be ensured by a commercial approach to copyright licensing and charging, this will be continued. The existing delegations covering Ordnance Survey and the Hydrographic Office will remain unchanged.

Copyright and charging policy on the statute law database, a value-added electronic version of the whole statute book now in preparation by the Statutory Publications Office, will be decided nearer the time of implementation in 1997.

On privatisation, Crown copyright will be retained by the Crown for all the Crown copyright material in the back catalogue of HMSO publications. The new owner will be licensed to reprint back list titles, but will have obligations to make them readily available. The aim will be to ensure the continuing availability of official publications in response to public demand. In respect of future Crown copyright material, the privatised Stationery Office will be required to be licensed, in the same way as other private sector publishers.

Arrangements for printing and publishing Government material are already designed to secure best value for money in making information available to the public at least cost to taxpayers and purchasers of publications. Except for current arrangements covering certain documents published by order of Parliament, Departments are not tied to HMSO and there will be no change in competitive purchasing arrangements after privatisation of the Stationery Office. There will also be no change in the need to recover, where appropriate, the costs of preparation, production and dissemination of material. As now, some official publications will be made available free of charge while others will be priced.

In addition to paper publications, I shall continue to encourage developments in publishing suitable information by electronic means, including the Internet, other on-line services and CD-ROMs. HMSO is now releasing on to its Internet service the summaries of more than 200 Acts of Parliament from 1984 to date, and is planning to publish henceforth on the Internet the full text of all new Acts.

Parliament, rather than Government, is responsible for policy on charging for reproduction of parliamentary material, including Hansard and Select Committee reports.

Deregulation Appeals

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress is being made towards the formulation of a model appeals mechanism as set out in the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994. [13645]

Mr. Roger Freeman: Following consultation on policy options relating to the model appeals mechanism last year, I intend to issue shortly a draft statutory instrument setting out the model for a further period of public consultation.

Government Surveys

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Government will undertake the independent study proposed by the deregulation task force into how the total burden of Government surveys might be reduced by up to 25 per cent. [14976]

Mr. Freeman: I have appointed Edward Osmotherly, chairman of the Commission for Local Administration in England, to chair a steering board to look at ways of cutting the burden of surveys on businesses. The terms of reference for the study are:

> To consider how Government survey compliance costs to business, particularly SMEs, might be reduced; to assess cumulative options for achieving reductions, in light of the Deregulation Task Force recommendation to examine a 25 per cent. saving; to consider any impact on the quality of essential Government statistics and associated policies; and to prepare advice by June 1996.

Internet

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, if he will list all (a) Internet and (b) other computer network, sites or bulletin boards operated by his Department or containing information supplied by his Department, indicating for each site or bulletin boards (a) the inaugural date, (b) the timetable and policy in respect of updates, (c) the Internet, or other network address and (d) to whom the site or board is currently made available and the criteria which must be fulfilled by applicants for access. [14208]

Mr. David Willetts: CCTA, the Government Centre for Information Systems, which is part of the Office of Public Service, operates the CCTA Government Information Service on the Internet. This service was launched in November 1994 and provides front-end indexing and retrieval facilities to information from over 180 public sector organisations, of which 79 are based on the CCTA server. The Internet address is http://www.open.gov.uk/.

Within the CCTA Government information service, the Office of Public Service has home pages for the Cabinet Office (http://www.open.gov.uk/co/cohome.htm), the citizens charter unit, and the machinery of government and standards group. There is also information on open government, competitiveness, civil service personnel statistics and public bodies, and home pages for CCTA, the Buying Agency, the Central Office of Information, the Civil Service College, and HMSO.

The service is updated daily, although individual Departments are responsible for determining policy and practice for updating their own pages. Access to the service is freely available to all Internet users.

TRANSPORT

British Transport Police

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of the British Transport police under rail privatisation. [14520]

Mr. Watts: As we have made clear on many occasions, the British Transport police will continue as a unified public force responsible for policing Britain's rail network.

Saltaire Tunnel, A650

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost to public funds of investigating the option of the Saltaire tunnel on the A650. [14140]

Mr. Watts: The answer is £915,000.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many spot checks were carried out on heavy goods vehicles and how many were found (a) not to have a valid heavy goods vehicle licence and (b) not to be insured in the last year for which figures are available. [14451]

Mr. Norris: During 1994–95, the Vehicle Inspectorate carried out a total of 243,128 roadside traffic enforcement checks of UK registered vehicles and prosecuted 169 cases for various categories of offence relating to vehicle excise duty, such as expired or no vehicle excise duty or incorrect rate. The Vehicle Inspectorate takes forward a vehicle excise duty offence only where it is one of a number of offences found and the figures given relate to cases brought for prosecution by VI only. If a single VED offence is found, it is reported to the local vehicle registration office for action. I understand from the DVLA that in 1994–95, 800 such cases were pursued, of which 466 resulted in successful enforcement action.

We have no responsibility for the enforcement of insurance; this is a matter dealt with by the police.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects his Department's research into reducing water spray from heavy goods vehicles to be completed. [14488]

Mr. Norris: The report on the work currently commissioned with Transport Research Laboratory is expected to be delivered to the Department by the end of March 1996.

Agencies (Reviews)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the dates of each organisational and structural review of (a) the Highways Agency and (b) the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency since their creation. [14430]

Mr. Norris: The Highways Agency, which was created in 1994, carried out an organisational and structural review in its first year and embarked on a further review, which is still in progress, in November 1995.

The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, which was created in 1990, carried out a pay and grading review in 1991–92; a senior structure review and reorganisation in 1993; job evaluation of senior posts in 1994; and a further reorganisation of its management structure in August 1994 in order to take forward its on-going change programme, including the restructuring of its local office network.

Vehicle Operator Licensing

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if inspections of operating centres are undertaken by traffic examiners prior to the issue of a goods vehicles operator's licence. [14431]

Mr. Norris: When considering an application for an operator's licence, a traffic commissioner will request an inspection of the operating centre by the Vehicle Inspectorate's traffic examiners where he has any doubts about the suitability of the proposed operating centre.

Royal Train

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of the royal train when privatisation of rail services is completed. [14417]

Mr. Watts: The royal train will continue to be available for use by Her Majesty the Queen and other members of the royal family.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to seek private sponsorship for the cost of the royal train. [14342]

Mr. Watts: None.

Driving Tests, Northumberland

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what facilities are to be provided for residents of the Berwick and Alnwick areas to take the written part of the driving test. [14343]

Mr. Norris: Facilities for residents of the Berwick and Alnwick areas to take the written part of the driving test will be provided by dedicated theory test centres at Galashiels and Morpeth respectively. Initially, daytime test sessions at Galashiels are planned to be available on Mondays and Saturdays, and evening sessions on Fridays. Daytime sessions at Morpeth area planned for Mondays, Wednesday, Fridays and Saturdays, and evening sessions on Tuesday.

Rail Franchise Agreements

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the franchise agreements and related documents for the LTS Rail, Great Western Trains and South West Trains passenger rail franchise. [13589]

Mr. Watts [pursuant to his reply, 5 February 1996, c. 8]: On Thursday 8 February, the chairman of British Rail informed me that the British Railways Board had redeployed the managing director and finance director of LTS Rail. Their decision followed the completion by British Rail's internal auditors of an investigation into alleged ticket irregularities in the company. The investigation found no evidence that they had any involvement in the irregularities. Nevertheless, in the circumstances, the board believed that senior management changes were necessary.

In the light of this decision, the franchising director has told me that he will not proceed with the completion of the franchise agreement. It remains his intention to transfer the LTS franchise to the private sector as soon as practicable, and he intends therefore to give previously shortlised bidders the opportunity to re-tender for the franchise. Consequently, a franchise agreement and other relevant documentation for LTS Rail will be placed in the Library once it has been completed.

I have consistently made it clear that irregularities of the sort which occurred on LTS Rail are completely unacceptable in either the public or the private sector. I welcome the fact that the systems put in place detected these irregularities so quickly and that the British Railways Board has taken decisive action.

I share the franchising director's desire to see an early transfer of the LTS Rail franchise to the private sector on terms which satisfy his rigorous requirements and those of the Rail Regulator.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts (Staffordshire)

Ms Walley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received from members of the public and organisations within Staffordshire regarding the closure of magistrates courts within the county. [13728]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In the last three months, my officials have received three representations against the closure of magistrates courts in Staffordshire.

Ms Walley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list for each magistrates court within Staffordshire, the number of cases held there in each of the last five years and the number of staff currently employed. [13725]

Mr. Evans: The numbers of defendants in criminal cases completed and civil applications in respect of which a final adjudication was made, in areas under the control of justices' clerks in magistrates courts in Staffordshire, for the last five years are shown in the table.

At the end of September 1995, there were approximately 195 staff employed in the magistrates courts in Staffordshire.

Number of completed cases in Staffordshire

	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995
Cannock	13,132	13,016	12,142	19,357	19,080
Lichfield	18,490	16,384	17,232	19,798	19,041
Newcastle-under-Lyme	13,730	13,587	11,113	12,243	13,167
Mid-Staffordshire	10,276	10,156	8,585	[1]—	[1]—
Stoke on Trent	26,121	23,771	23,387	24,152	25,888

[1] Mid-Staffordshire was amalgamated with Cannock on 1 January 1994.

Ms Walley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) if he will list the magistrates courts within Staffordshire that will be (a) closed and (b) merged as a result of his Department's proposals to rationalise the magistrates service; [13726]

(2) if he will list those magistrates courts in Staffordshire that have been closed over the last five years. [13727]

Mr. Evans: Magistrates courts are provided by the local paying authority for the use of the magistrates courts committee. Closure decisions are for the MCC to determine, although the paying authority may appeal to the Lord Chancellor against a proposed closure.

Staffordshire MCC closed Eccleshall magistrates court in 1992 and Uttoxeter magistrates court in 1995.

No decision has been made by the Staffordshire MCC to close or merge any other magistrates courts.

Mary Bell Orders

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many Mary Bell orders are currently in force. [13681]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Rhodri Morgan, dated 9 February 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about Mary Bell orders currently in force.

The information requested is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

SCOTLAND

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 31 January Official Report, column 499, about the lapse of time since the destruction of Flight PA 103, what considerations he has given to implications of the statute of [illegible]tions for the prosecutions of those accused of t[illegible]rime; and if he will make a statement. [13613]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Having consulted my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate, I can confirm that the only time limits applying in this case are those which commence after the appearance of the accused on petition before a sheriff in Scotland. In terms of section 101 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975 an overall time limit of 12 months from the date of first appearance until the commencement of the trial would apply. This would also be subject to the custody time limits of (a) 80 days from full committal (which may be up to 10 days after first appearance) within which an indictment must be served and of (b) 110 days from full committal, within which time the trial must commence.

Food Hygiene

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the annual cost of implementing food and hygiene legislation. [13552]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has had from local authorities on matters relating to food hygiene. [13581]

Mr. Robertson: Officials of the Scottish Office regularly receive inquiries from local authorities about food hygiene matters. Within the last 12 months, formal representations have been received about the payment of the costs of a court case and procedures laid down in codes of practice. Representations were also received about the sale of raw goats' milk.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what support he affords local authorities who face legal action for implementing their statutory responsibility under food and hygiene legislation. [13554]

Mr. Robertson: Although my right hon. Friend provides around 85 per cent. of local authorities' total funding for non-housing net current expenditure, most of that support is provided by way of a block grant. No allowance is made, either in deciding the overall level of support or in the distribution of support among authorities, for expenditure resulting from legal action of any kind.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prosecutions there have been of businesses for breach of the food and hygiene legislation in Scotland in each year since 1992. [13580]

Mr. Robertson: The following figures show the numbers of companies in Scotland against which proceedings were brought where the main alleged offence was a breach of the Food Safety Act 1990 or of food hygiene regulations.

1992: 52

1993: 34

1994: 26

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how he ensures that local authorities implement food and hygiene legislation. [13553]

Mr. Robertson: Local authorities submit quarterly statistical returns to the Scottish Office which summarise their activities carried out under food safety legislation.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has had from industry concerning food hygiene legislation; and if he will make a statement. [13582]

Mr. Robertson: During the last 12 months my right hon. Friend has received representations from the industry about the enforcement of food safety legislation and the sale of unpasteurised goats' milk.

Industry guides to good hygiene practice are being developed by various sectors of the food industry in consultation with the Government and food legislation enforcers. These guides should help industry to meet their legal obligations and to ensure food safety.

Soft Cheese

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in the last five years he has reminded local authorities of their statutory responsibility to inspect the production of soft cheese. [13585]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Guidance notes and code of practice No. 18 were issued on 7 November 1995 to all food authorities in Scotland in relation to their responsibilities under the Dairy Products (Hygiene) (Scotland) Regulations 1995.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of soft cheese producers; and what subjects were discussed. [13583]

Mr. Robertson: Although my right hon. Friend has not met representatives of soft cheese producers, they have regular meetings and correspondence with officials of his Department. The development of a code of best practice is currently under discussion.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the dangers posed to public health by listeria in soft cheese; and if he will make a statement. [13584]

Mr. Robertson: None. However, the current Scottish Office co-ordinated programme on listeria is concentrating on molecular techniques for identifying virulent strains, and on survival and growth of the pathogen in the gut, food and silage systems. The Expert Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food has been asked by the Scottish Office and Department of Health for an expert assessment of current scientific knowledge on the pathogenesis and virulence of listeria with particular emphasis on cheese.

Countryside Conservation

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the annual expenditure figures and forecasts for the (a) countryside access scheme, (b) environmentally sensitive areas, (c) farm conservation grant scheme, (d) farm woodland premium scheme, (e) habitat scheme, (f) nitrate sensitive areas, (g) moorland scheme, (h) organic aid scheme and (i) countryside stewardship for each year between 1990–91 and 1997–98. [13634]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 5 February 1996]: There is no countryside stewardship scheme and there are no nitrate sensitive areas. Information about the other schemes is set out in the following table. Provision for 1997–98 has not yet been determined.

Beaufort's Dyke

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals have been made to him by the British Geological Survey for help with monitoring of explosions and related work at Beaufort's dyke and other arms dumps; when he expects to be able to respond; and if he will make a statement. [14112]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 8 February 1996]: Arrangements have been made to discuss the British Geological Survey proposals. My noble Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Forestry and the Environment will write to the hon. Member after these discussions have taken place.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Internet

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what web site her Department maintains on the Internet; what information is provided there; how often it is updated; what is the address; and if she or her Department answers questions and supplies additional information through the Internet. [7565]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department for Education and Employment maintains a web site on the Internet, address http://www.open.gov.uk/dfee/dfeehome.htm. The site is frequently updated and carries a wide range of information pages, including the responsibilities of Ministers, departmental press releases, departmental charters, the 1994 and 1995 school and college performance tables, a guide to the school curriculum, information on nursery education, the national targets for education and training, details for young people and employers on modern apprenticeships and catalogues of careers publications.

The site is also the UK's official site for the encouragement, promotion and development of lifelong learning and will be supporting the 1996 European Year of Lifelong Learning. The Department has an Internet E-mail address—info@dfee.gov.uk. This is sited within the public inquiry unit and it receives and responds to a small but steady stream of general education and employment-related inquiries from home and overseas. Ministers do not use the E-mail for answering inquiries.

Schools Expenditure

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of each of the shire counties education budgets is currently spent on (a) school and (b) non-school expenditure; and what amount of money this represents per school pupil in each case. [14577]

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale (Mr. Jopling) on 13 December 1995, Official Report, columns 698–700.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of each of the London borough's education budgets is currently spent on (a) schools and (b) non-school expenditure together with the amount of money this represents per school pupil in each case. [14578]

Mr. Squire: The following table shows for each London borough the percentage of net recurrent expenditure in 1993–94, the latest year for which figures are available, on: (a) pre-primary, primary, secondary and special schools; and (b) other education services, including education other than at school, adult education, continuing education, discretionary awards, youth and other community services, service strategy and regulation and education support services. The table also shows the amount per pupil which this expenditure represents, though in the case of non-schools expenditure school pupils are not the principal clients.

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 12 December, Official Report, column 563, if she will publish the training and enterprise council operating agreement in respect of priorities for training for work for particular age groups when a waiting list for entry may occur. [7644]

Mr. Paice: A copy of the training and enterprise council operating agreement has been placed in the Library. Schedule D of the agreement covers the requirements on TECs as they relate to training for work. Training for work is available to individuals aged 18 to 63.

DEFENCE

Porton Down

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 December 1995, Official Report, column 763, if he will make the film of LSD experiments on service personnel available for broadcast when recovered; and if he will make a statement. [14540]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Dr. David Clark, dated 9 February 1996:

Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking if he will make the film of LSD experiments on service personnel available for broadcast when recovered has been passed to me to reply as the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency which includes the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

We are making arrangements for the transfer of the film material related to the field trials conducted with LSD to the Film Department of the Imperial War Museum which is an appointed place of deposit for public records.

I am unable to give you a date of transfer at this stage as a number of administrative procedures, including the authorisation of the early release of some material under the Public Records Act, has to be completed before this can take place. I will write to you again to let you know the date from which they will be released to the Imperial War Museum.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments since 1987, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14083]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Generally, spare capacity is not something that the Department builds in when designing its computer systems. On occasions, computer facilities may be made available to other Departments which have requested assistance and this would normally be on a repayment basis. However, no central record is held of the degree to which its computer systems might contain spare capacity or the extent to which it has been made available for use by other Departments. This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

RB44 Light Vehicle

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which company carried out the repairs to his Department's RB44 light vehicle; how many vehicles were sent for repair; what was the total cost of repair; and who will pay this bill. [9952]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 18 January 1996]: Modifications to the RB44 heavy utility truck in 1992 were made at the manufacturer's expense. Following the identification of continuing braking problems in 1993, and analysis of these by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, in consultation with the manufacturer, a further modification programme to 824 vehicles was started in October 1995 and is due to be complete by the end of March 1996. The modification kits have been provided by the company, and about 100 of them have been fitted by the company, at its own expense. The remainder are being fitted by military or civilian personnel in unit workshops. The direct cost to the Department of carrying out these modifications is estimated at some £100,000. In addition, other costs to the Department associated with rectifying the problem include the analysis and trials of DERA at a cost of some £310,000 together with the costs of returning vehicles to serviceable and roadworthy condition and maintaining other vehicles used while RB44 have been out of service. The latter costs are not readily quantifiable. The total costs to the Department on this basis are assessed to be less than £1,000,000.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the ad hoc programme will be run to resolve the inquiries of Mr. Peter Sutton, national insurance number 25 06 52 67D, into his national insurance contributions as communicated to the hon. Member for Wakefield by the chief executive of the Contributions Agency in December 1995. [13621]

Mr. Heald: This is a matter for Mrs. Faith Boardman, the chief executive of the Contributions Agency. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mrs. Faith Boardman to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 8 February 1996:

As Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency, I have responsibility for answering questions about operational matters relating to the Agency and the National Insurance (NI) scheme.

I have been asked to reply to your enquiry on behalf of Mr Peter Sutton, NI number ZS 065267D, regarding difficulties with his NI affairs.

An amendment was introduced to the live code in late January 1996 to ensure no further occurrences such as Mr Sutton's can reoccur.

The analysis work necessary for the Ad Hoc recovery program, referred to in my previous communication, to identify those affected in the same way as Mr Sutton has now been completed. I am however unable to state how many accounts were affected by the error due to the costs involved in obtaining the information. The programme work will commence on 12 February 1996 followed by a live run in early March 1996.

I am sorry for any difficulties this has caused Mr Sutton, hopefully the action highlighted above will enable the situation to be finally resolved.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the present number of (a) temporary and casual staff and (b) permanent staff employed by the CSA; and what is the number of DSS staff seconded to, or engaged in, CSA work within the agency. [13501]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Bill Michie, dated 8 February 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the numbers of staff within the Child Support Agency.

At 31 December 1995, the following staff were employed by the Agency in the relevant categories.

	Child Support Agency	Belfast CSAC (Northern Ireland Civil Servants)
Permanent staff	6,221	594
Temporary and casual staff	547	110

Notes:
Staff shown as whole time equivalents.
The Child Support Agency is an integral part of the Department of Social Security; everyone working for the Agency is a Department of Social Security member of staff.

Benefit Claims

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the claims which are disallowed are successful on appeal. [13175]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, columns 584–85, how the figures for savings on the disability living allowance as a result of improving the quality and level of information to decision-makers were calculated. [13435]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: An examination of a statistically valid sample of new claims suggested that without further evidence the higher rate mobility component would be inappropriately awarded in about 12 per cent. of cases and inappropriately disallowed in a further 1 per cent. Further work to test the assumptions underlying these estimates is currently being evaluated.

The estimated savings took account of factors including forecasts of new claims and survival rates, the proportion of cases already subject to further evidence, the rate at which cases are reviewed, and passporting on to other benefits.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions his officials have had with those of National Grid in respect of the additional power required by the announcement of eligible areas under the cold weather payments scheme. [14046]

Mr. Roger Evans: No discussions have taken place between departmental officials and those of the National Grid. The impact of cold weather on demand for electricity is monitored separately from social fund cold weather payment triggers.

TREASURY

Income Tax

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the full year yield of restricting income tax reliefs and allowances to (a) £2,000, (b) £3,000, (c) £4,000, (d) £6,000, (e) £8,000, (f) £10,000 and (g) £12,000, indicating in each case the number of people affected. [14326]

Mr. Jack: The full-year yield of restricting income tax allowances and reliefs and the number of people affected at 1996–97 income levels are given in the table. The estimates do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of such a limit.

Upper limit for total allowances and reliefs[1] £	Yield in full year £ million	Number of taxpayers Thousands
2,000	18,300	[2]25,800
3,000	11,100	[2]25,800
4,000	4,800	15,600
6,000	1,200	1,200
8,000	700	380
10,000	500	190
12,000	400	120

[1] Including only allowances and reliefs given at marginal rates.
[2] This will effect all taxpayers and bring a number of people into tax.

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the yield from imposing a ceiling of (a) £10,000, (b) £20,000 and (c) £30,000 on the amount that may be held a PEP by any one individual. [14331]

Mr. Jack: Total tax relief for personal equity plans is provisionally estimated at £425 million for 1995–96. Information about PEPs is derived from annual returns provided by plan managers. These show the total value of funds, amount of subscriptions received and number of investors, but do not include information on the distribution of the number of investors by size of total PEP investment on which to base estimates of the yield from imposing ceilings on the amount individuals may hold in PEPs.

Accrued Income Scheme

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the cost of complying with the accrued income scheme following the introduction of the loan relationships legislation; and what is the average annual yield from the accrued income scheme from personal taxpayers. [13797]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 8 February 1996]: The loan relationship provisions contained in the current Finance Bill will materially reduce the costs of compliance with the accrued income scheme, since companies will no longer be subject to it. So far as individuals are concerned, no yield is necessarily to be expected from the scheme, since it affords relief from tax as readily as it brings additional income into charge. The limited figures available suggest that the scheme does in practice generate a small net yield. its main purpose, however, is to avoid the much larger loss of revenue which would arise in its absence, from tax-motivated "bond washing" transactions.

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments since 1987, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14076]

Mrs. Angela Knight: So far as I am aware, no spare computer capacity has been sold by Her Majesty's Treasury to other Departments since 1987.

Departmental Publications

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of his Department's administrative manuals and internal guidance are now made public; and which remain private. [14027]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Treasury makes available to the public a large number of publications on various issues, details of which are included in the Treasury's booklet, "Publications in Print". The booklet has been deposited in the Libraries of both Houses.

Publications include guidance notes from the central unit on procurement, reports of the Treasury's fundamental expenditure review and a variety of other documents plus information via the Internet.

Those manuals and guidance notes which are not published deal mainly with internal staff and security issues. No central record is kept.

Pensions

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amount of trivial occupational or private pension can be converted into a lump sum; when the figure was last increased and from what sum; and what plans to increase it. [13785]

Mr. Jack: Under the rules for occupational pension schemes, commutation on grounds of triviality is currently permitted if the aggregate benefits, including the pension equivalent of any lump sum benefits, payable from all schemes in respect of the employment are not more than £260 per annum. If total benefits exceed that amount, any residual pension left after taking the normal lump sum retirement benefit cannot be commuted even though it may not exceed the triviality limit.

The limit was increased from £104 to £260 in 1991.

There are no existing arrangements under the personal pension scheme rules to allow the conversion of trivial pensions to lump sums. However, as from 6 April 1996 procedures will be in place to allow personal pension funds which are insufficient to buy a pension of at least £260 per annum and total £2,500 or less to be taken in cash.

The Inland Revenue periodically reviews all administrative limits and announces any changes at the same time. The triviality limit for both occupational and personal pension schemes will be reconsidered at the time of the next review.

EC Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on which occasions in the last three years officials have vetoed draft EC legislation on the grounds that a fiche d'impact had not been correctly prepared. [13646]

Mr. Jack: The correct preparation of fiches d'impact is a very important part of our consideration of proposals for EC legislation. It is one of the factors taken into account when Ministers consider the UK's negotiating position on a particular proposal.

Tax Yield

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of the yield in 1998–99 to the Inland Revenue forecast in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1996–97", resulting from the change to self-assessment, is attributable to (a) business growth and (b) changing from the previous year to current year basis. [13748]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 February 1996]: As I said in the debate on clause 112 of the Finance Bill, Official Report, 25 January 1996, column 530, just over £700 million of the 1989–99 self-assessment yield shown in table 5B.2 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1996–97" relates to income tax and class 4 national insurance contributions on the profits of trades, professions and vocations. This yield is almost wholly attributable to the interaction between the assumed growth in taxable profits and the move from the preceding year basis of assessment to the current year basis. If either of those factors were not present, there would be no significant effects on tax receipts from these sources of income attributable to self-assessment.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Civil Servants (Vested Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assessment he has made of the proportion of his officials who have a declared interest in the arms industry; [12331]

(2) in what form his Department's officials' declaration of vested interests are kept; and if he will make a statement. [12332]

Mr. Hanley: We are not aware of any such declarations in recent years, but a check of all personnel files would incur disproportionate cost. I also refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 1 February 1996, Official Report, column 854.

Turkey (Helicopter Sales)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to ensure that helicopters sold by the United Kingdom to the Turkish Government are not used against civilians; and if he will make a statement. [12878]

Mr. David Davis: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 7 February 1995, Official Report, column 229.

Uranium Sales

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received about the possibility of Russia selling weapons-grade enriched uranium to European nuclear research reactors; what assessment he has made of the implications of such sales for nuclear proliferation; and if he will make a statement. [14231]

Mr. David Davis: Euratom has since 1995 been negotiating with Minatom, the Russian nuclear ministry, about the possibility of acquiring non-irradiated highly enriched uranium from the Russian Federation for use in European research reactors. The material in question would be subject to Euratom and international safeguards and to stringent security arrangements and does not, therefore, create a proliferation risk.

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments since 1987, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14080]

Mr. Hanley: The FCO diplomatic and aid wings have not sold spare computer capacity to other Government Departments since 1987.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Telecommunications Licences

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he has given to amending telecommunications operating licences so that telecommunication companies are required to offer discounts and concessions to (a) pensioners and (b) pensioners who are in receipt of income support. [13550]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Modification of operating licences issued under the Telecommunications Act 1984 is a matter for the Director General of Telecommunications. He is currently consulting on a range of proposals intended to increase the range of tariff packages available to consumers, especially vulnerable users. There are no current plans to develop a special regime for pensioners, as vulnerable users may also come from other sections of society.

Company Bills

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to encourage larger companies to pay smaller companies more speedily. [14465]

Mr. Page: The Government encourage all businesses to settle their bills on time. The 1994 White Paper, "Competitiveness—Helping Business To Win, Cm 2563, announced a number of practical measures to tackle the late payment of commercial debts. These included additional prompt payment requirements for Government departments and their agencies; further development of proposals for a British Standard for prompt payment and the implementation of proposals to require public companies to state their payment policies in their directors' reports. In addition, my Department has published a free guide to credit management and debt recovery for both buyers and suppliers.

Balance of Trade

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 1996, Official Report, column 316, what estimate he has made of (a) the visible trade balance, (b) the invisible trade balance and (c) the non-oil visible trade balance for 1995, as a percentage of gross domestic product. [14576]

Mr. Page: The information, which is available only for the first three quarters of 1995, is shown in the table.

Percentage of gross domestic product

	Number
Visible trade balance	–1.6
Of which: Non oil visible trade balance	–2.2
Invisible trade balance	1.0

ENVIRONMENT

Clinical Waste Incinerator (Bolton)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the proposed clinical waste incinerator at Bolton general hospital; when a decision is planned to be made on the proposal; and if he will make a statement. [13630]

Sir Paul Beresford: Approximately 100 individual letters, 2,100 pro forma letters, and a petition containing some 300 signatures have been received concerning the appeal under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 against refusal to authorise operation of the clinical waste incinerator at Bolton general hospital. The hearing into the appeal was attended by 34 members of the public, including representatives of Bolton Friends of the Earth and Clean Air Above All. Correspondence has been received from the appellant concerning the timing of the appeal decision.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State hopes to issue a decision on the appeal by the end of this month.

Industrial Emissions to Air

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions of the Clean Air Act 1993, controlling industrial emissions to air, he intends to repeal. [13674]

Mr. Clappison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Worsley (Mr. Lewis) on 22 November 1995, Official Report, column 116.

Departmental Publications

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of his Department's administrative manuals and internal guidance are now made public; and which remain private. [14033]

Sir Paul Beresford: In line with the code of practice on access to Government information, my Department publishes an index of the explanatory material on how it deals with the public. Each of the manuals and the guidance notes listed in the index is available to the public or is available for public inspection.

The Health and Safety Executive has a programme to make administrative manuals and internal guidance publicly available, except a small proportion coming within the exemptions in the code of practice on access to Government information.

Beyond that, each request for access to manuals and guidance is treated on its merits. The case for allowing access to manuals and so on which are not made public is reviewed regularly.

Hedgerows

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government will publish their consultation paper on the draft regulations to protect important hedgerows as provided for by section 97 of the Environment Act 1995; and when he envisages the final regulations will be brought into effect. [14071]

Mr. Clappison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on 20 December 1995, Official Report, column 1239.

London Borough of Brent

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what complaints his Department has received alleging anti-competitive actions by the London borough of Brent. [14101]

Sir Paul Beresford: None.

Planning Applications

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 5 February, Official Report, column 39, concerning planning application No. W95/8535 at Folly lane, Warminster, if he will place the written representations he has received from individuals in the Library. [14392]

Sir Paul Beresford: No. Representations sent to the Secretary of State cannot be copied to third parties without the consent of the individuals concerned.

Legislation (Compliance Cost Assessments)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for primary and secondary legislation passed since 5 April 1995, which measures were subject to a compliance costs assessment; and what was the compliance cost in each instance. [13649]

Sir Paul Beresford: Details of compliance cost assessments for primary and secondary legislation passed in the first half of 1995 are included in a Command Paper, Cm 3075, which was presented to Parliament on 25 January 1996. Copies of the compliance cost assessments listed are available in the House libraries. Further Command Papers listing compliance cost assessments issued in the preceding six-month period will be published at six-monthly intervals.

EU Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he ensures that the negotiating brief for his officials discussing EU legislation takes fully into account the need to minimise the burdens on United Kingdom business. [13714]

Sir Paul Beresford: Guidance on how officials are to apply deregulatory principles when negotiating EC legislation is contained in the booklet "Getting a Good Deal in Europe". This guidance has been supplemented by the recent publication of guidance on the preparation of compliance cost assessments, which stresses that the likely burdens on business highlighted by UK compliance cost assessments of EC proposals should be integral to the UK's negotiating strategy. Copies of both pieces of guidance are in the Library of the House.

Water Leakages

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total leakage from (a) water company pipes and (b) domestic pipes in 1994–95 in gallons per day; and if he will publish statistics relating to water leakage from domestic pipes and company pipes, referred to in the oral answer of 15 February 1995, Official Report, columns 982–83. [14215]

Mr. Gummer: Estimated total leakage, in millions of litres per day, is given in Ofwat's 1994–95 report on the cost of water delivered and sewage collected.

The levels of leakage from household and water company pipes are calculable from the same publication and show that the leakage from household pipes represented some 23 per cent. of the total. I regret if my right hon. Friend's earlier answer misled the House.

English Partnerships

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each year since its inception (a) the expenditure and (b) the retained asset base of English Partnerships in each of its six regions. [14329]

Mr. Gummer: The pattern of English Partnerships' programme expenditure and the distribution of its asset portfolio between its six regions since it came into full operation on 1 April 1994 is as follows:

£ thousand

Region	1994–95 Outturn development programme	1995–96 Anticipated development programme	Asset portfolio as at 1 April 1994	Asset portfolio as at 31 March 1995
North-east	47,661	31,673	98,595	106,800
North-west	52,929	51,149	86,088	84,000
Yorkshire and Humberside	43,786	60,698	40,198	44,700
Midlands	63,433	53,773	14,305	18,000
South-east	10,311	26,831	23,453	22,100
South-west	7,260	10,064	4,361	3,900
Total	225,380	234,188	267,000	279,500

Exhibition Centre, London

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will establish a public inquiry into the planning permission granted by the London Docklands development corporation to London International Exhibition Centre Ltd. for the construction of an 110,000 sq m exhibition centre on the site of the former royal docks. [14429]

Sir Paul Beresford: I expect my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to announce soon his decision on whether or not to call in for his own determination the planning application for which the LDDC has resolved to grant planning permission.

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments since 1987, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14081]

Sir Paul Beresford: No spare computer capacity has been sold by my Department to other Government Departments.

WALES

NHS (Children's Services)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new measures he proposes to ensure an integrated child health service. [13813]

Mr. Richards: I do not, at present, propose any new measures to ensure an integrated child health service.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on children's services in the NHS. [13812]

Mr. Richards: The policy for children's services in the NHS in Wales is to promote improvements in health by providing the right guidance and care, by the right people, at the right time and place, whether in the hospital, surgery or in the home.

Young People with Disabilities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish in north-east Wales a consultant in rehabilitative medicine with the remit of improving the translation between paediatric and adult services for young people with disabilities. [13811]

Mr. Richards: The responsibility for the establishment of a consultant in rehabilitative medicine, in north-east Wales, is a matter for the relevant district health authorities or trusts to consider, having regard to locally assessed needs and circumstances.

Consultant Paediatricians

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many consultant paediatricians there are in Wales; in which locations; and if he will make a statement. [13814]

Mr. Richards: Information on medical staff in the NHS in Wales is collected annually on the basis of the NHS trust or directly managed unit in which they work. Provisional information on the whole-time equivalent number of consultant paediatricians in post on 30 September 1995 is given in the following table.

Whole-time equivalent number of consultant paediatricans in post on 30 September 1995[1] (a)

South Wales Sea Fisheries Committee

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to ensure that the services provided by the South Wales sea fisheries committee are maintained at present levels in the event of reduced funding from the new unitary authorities in South Wales. [14532]

Mr. Hague: None. Sea fisheries committees are statutory committees of local government. They are created under the Sea Fisheries Act 1966, and they are financed by means of a levy charged to their constituent councils in percentage proportions set down in the individual orders creating them.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the new unitary authorities in south Wales concerning the combined funding of the South Wales sea fisheries committee. [14537]

Mr. Hague: I am currently consulting interested authorities, in accordance with section 1 of the Sea Fisheries Regulation Act 1966, on proposals submitted by the south Wales sea fisheries committee for changes to that committee's constitution.

Bristol Channel Aggregates

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the remit of his Department's steering group on the resources and constraints with regard to Bristol Channel aggregates; who are the members of the steering group; which organisations they represent; on what date they will commence their study; and when he expects its completion. [14534]

Mr. Hague: The steering group will be convened when a contractor has been appointed to carry out the study. It is expected to include representatives from central Government, the Crown estate, mineral planning authorities, coast protection authorities, statutory conservation agencies, port authorities, fisheries organisations and dredging companies. The group's purpose will be to advise the Welsh Office about the research and how best to progress it. The project is expected to commence in the summer and take two to three years to complete. I will ensure that the hon. Member is informed of the steering group's composition when it is established.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the environmental impact on marine ecology and fisheries of aggregate dredging (a) from the Nash bank and (b) from the Bristol channel more generally. [14533]

Mr. Hague: An environmental assessment is being carried out as part of the application for a licence to dredge sand from the Nash bank. It will include a comprehensive assessment of the impact on the marine ecology and fisheries. A research project, "Bristol Channel Marine Aggregates: Resources and Constraints", which will begin this summer, will provide a systematic overview of the potential environmental impacts of dredging.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning keeping the barrage construction contract within budget; and if he will make a statement. [14536]

Mr. Hague: I wrote to the chairman in January noting the good progress being made on barrage construction which is being managed within the figure announced to Parliament.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the difference between grant in aid to the Cardiff Bay development corporation for 1994–95 and the final outturn; and how it has arisen. [14531]

Mr. Hague: The grant in aid budget for 1994–95 was £52.272 million and the outturn was £57.237 million. Additional funds come from European regional development fund grants and other receipts.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning the outturn expenditure for the year 1995–96; and if his current estimate involves a variation relative to planned (i) expenditure by the corporation and (ii) grant in aid to the corporation. [14535]

Mr. Hague: None. The Cardiff Bay development corporation estimates its outturn for gross expenditure this year to be around £66 million supported by £57.541 million grant in aid. Planned expenditure at the start of the year was £65.283 million supported by £51.441 million grant in aid.

Hazardous Substances

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hazardous substance consents were made by local councils in Wales in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [15057]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In the period between 1 April 1994 and 31 March 1995, one hazardous substance consent was issued in Wales. Consents are issued under the Planning (Hazardous Substances) Act 1990, which came into force on 1 June 1992. The Act requires that the storage or use of certain substances on particular sites are consented to by the local council.

The one consent issued was a deemed consent relating to a site where hazardous substances were already being stored or used before the Act came into force.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when her Department became aware of a family relationship between the director general of Oflot and directors of companies involved in running the national lottery. [9858]

Mr. Sproat: There is no known kinship between the director general of the national lottery and any of the directors of companies involved in the running of the national lottery. The Department became aware of an acquaintance between the director general and Mr. Menges on 15 December 1995. Mr. Menges's US investment company has a financial interest in GTECH and Mr. Menges is a non-executive director of GTECH. Mr. Menges is not involved in the running of the UK national lottery. The director general declared his acquaintance with Mr. Menges in February 1994, in accordance with agreed procedures for declaring any financial, personal or professional connections with any of the applicants for the licence to run the national lottery.

Offa's Dyke

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans his Department has to preserve the section of Offa's dyke at Rhostyllen, near Wrexham, Clwyd, currently offered for sale; and if he will make a statement. [12871]

Mr. Sproat: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) on 2 February 1996, Official Report, column 979.

Windsor Castle and Uppark

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to her answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 693, over what period the £25.2 million for the restoration of Windsor castle will be raised. [14539]

Mr. Sproat: It is planned to raise the £25.2 million over the six years 1993 to 1998.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will place in the Library all documents relating to her Department's involvement with the aftermath of the fires at Windsor castle and Uppark. [11999]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 5 February 1996]: Copies of the report, "Fire Protection Measures for the Royal Palaces", produced following the Windsor castle fire, were placed in the Library of the House on 26 May 1993.

The annual report for 1994–95, "The Grant-in-Aid for the Maintenance of the Occupied Royal Palaces in England" reports progress with the Windsor castle fire restoration. Copies were placed in the Library of the House on 28 June 1995.

Subsequent annual reports will update progress. A written record will be produced on behalf of the royal household when the restoration is completed.

My Department was not involved in the aftermath of the fire at Uppark, which is owned by the National Trust.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 12 February 1996

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Ordtech

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what documents were given by the Law Officers' Departments to (a) the prosecuting authorities, (b) the defence counsel and (c) the judge in the recent appeal case of Ordtech; and if he will make a statement. [14206]

The Attorney-General: The Ordtech case is a matter falling within the scope of Sir Richard Scott's inquiry. The Government do not propose to comment on such matters until it has considered Sir Richard Scott's report.

ENVIRONMENT

House Renovation Grant

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) pensioner households, (b) men aged over 65 years and (c) women aged over 60 years received a house renovation grant in the latest year for which figures are available. [13783]

Mr. Curry: The Department does not routinely collect information on the age and sex of applicants whose grant application is approved by local housing authorities. Reseach commissioned by the Department estimated, from data collected during 1990–91, the percentage of approvals in England for each type of grant under the current renovation grant system where the applicant was aged 60 or over. Applying these percentages would provide the following estimates for England in 1994, the last calendar year for which data are available:

Type of grant	All approvals (mandatory and discretionary) Number (000s)	Estimates of approvals to applicants aged 60 or over
		Percentage	Number (000s)
Renovation	40.3	48	19.3
Disabled facilties	23.7	71	16.8
Minor works assistance	32.5	88	28.6

Research data are not available for common parts grants and HMSO grants; the latter is provided to landlords only.

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many pensioner households, men aged over 65 years and women aged over 60 years are currently on the house renovation grant waiting list. [13784]

Mr. Curry: No information is available. The Department does not routinely collect information from local authorities on the status of grant inquiries received by it.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to take account of care for the disabled when deciding the revenue support grant settlement for local authorities; and what estimate he has made of the cost to local authorities of meeting the specific needs of disabled people. [14204]

Sir Paul Beresford: Funding of services for disabled people is provided for through the standard spending assessments for personal social services. In 1993–94, based on figures provided by local authorities, the net cost of providing social services for physically disabled adults aged under 65 was some £350 million. Expenditure on services for disabled children or elderly people cannot be extracted from the figures available: 1993–94 is the latest year for which we have outturn figures.

London Borough of Brent

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of whether the London borough of Brent's procurement of a computer system by its social services department complied with EC procurement rules. [14099]

Sir Paul Beresford: None. The London borough of Brent is responsible for making its own decisions in awarding public procurement contracts.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance his Department has given to the London borough of Brent as to competition policy. [14100]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department has issued guidance about compulsory competitive tendering to all local authorities specifically in Department circular 10/93.

EC Directives

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice his Department has given to local authorities as to EEC Council directive 77/62/EEC, as amended by directive 88/295/EEC; and if he will list the local authorities to which such advice was given. [14102]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department gave advice to all local authorities in circular 46/78 about the provisions of directive 77/62/EEC. This circular was overtaken by circular 6/89, which gave similar advice about directive 88/295/EEC. Further advice was given to authorities in circular 7/90 about avoiding national discrimination in tender documents for supply contracts. These circulars were made available to county councils and district councils in England, London borough councils, the council of the Isle of Scilly, and the City of London.

British Coal Pumping Station, Ushaw Moor

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of environmental problems caused by the closure of the British Coal pumping station at Ushaw Moor, Durham. [14515]

Mr. Clappison: Ushaw Moor pumping station, now under the control of the Coal Authority, has not been closed. Pumping was temporarily suspended in October 1995, as part of a controlled test programme designed to obtain more information about groundwater flows in the area, and has since been resumed. The National Rivers Authority is monitoring the situation, and I understand that no environmental problems have been identified.

Environmental Services Association

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had and what plans he has to discuss with the Environmental Services Association its planning guidelines for waste management facilities. [14834]

Sir Paul Beresford: My officials discussed the planning guidelines for waste management facilities produced by the Environmental Services Association with representatives of the association on Friday 26 January 1996. They also feature in on-going discussions between the Department and the association and others in connection with the Department's preparation of a planning policy guidance note on waste.

Waste Management

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the organisations which have responded to the consultation paper on the development of a national waste classification scheme. [14494]

Mr. Clappison: My Department has received more than 200 responses to the consultation paper. I am therefore writing to the hon. Member with a list of those organisations that have responded to date.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the final system for the classification of waste substances. [14495]

Mr. Clappison: The precise timing of the publication of the final waste classification scheme will depend on the responses to the second stage, which we are assessing. We are, in any case, committed to a third stage of consultation, which we expect to issue after the responses to this stage have been taken into account.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the organisations charged with the duty of determining the classification of different types of waste; and if there will be an appeals mechanism in respect of waste classification. [14496]

Mr. Clappison: No organisation has been charged with the duty of determining the classification of different types of waste. However, the consultation paper issued on 15 December 1995 invited comments on the possibility of the Environmental Protection (Duty of Care) Regulations 1991 being amended to provide that waste is identified on the duty of care transfer note by reference to the classification system. The responsibility under the duty of care rests with the parties completing the transfer note and an appeals mechanism is not required.

Severe Weather Conditions

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what extra assistance his Department has the power to offer to Copeland borough council and Cumbria county council following the recent severe weather conditions. [14816]

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend has powers to establish a Bellwin scheme, under section 155 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, to provide emergency financial assistance to local authorities. Such schemes are established and resources provided where, as a consequence of an emergency, an authority would otherwise incur an undue financial burden in providing relief and carrying out immediate works to safeguard life or property, or to prevent suffering or severe inconvenience to affected communities.

We have not, to date, received any request from either Copeland borough council or Cumbria county council for support under Bellwin for additional expenditure incurred as a consequence of the recent poor weather conditions. Were we to receive a request, we would, of course, consider it very carefully.

Local Government Ombudsman

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on the review of the local government ombudsman service; and if he will make a statement. [15016]

Mr. Curry: The first stage of the review, in which the need for a local ombudsman service was examined, has been completed. On 30 November 1995, the reviewer—Sir Geoffrey Chipperfield—presented his report to my right hon. Friend and to the chairman of the Commission for Local Administration in England, and today I have arranged for copies of the report to be placed in the Library of the House.

Sir Geoffrey has concluded that the present centralised investigation and review processes of the CLA would not be able to handle effectively the increasing volume of complaints, which he foresaw with the growth of citizens' awareness of their rights and remedies. He has proposed, therefore, a new complaints regime, under which each local authority would be statutorily obliged to operate its own local complaints system, involving both internal review and an external reviewer or adjudicator. The role of any independent, central body, such as the CLA, would be limited to the validation and monitoring of each local authority's system; such a body would not have any role to investigate specific complaints.

We have carefully considered Sir Geoffrey's report and the CLA's representations on it. We recognise the importance of all local authorities having their own effective local complaints systems, although we are not persuaded of the need to seek legislation imposing a new statutory duty on local authorities to establish and maintain such systems. Nor do we believe that the case has been made that there is at present no continued need for the CLA's role as a wholly independent body to investigate complaints of maladministration.

We have concluded, therefore, that we should proceed with the second stage of the review, which will focus particularly on the efficiency and effectiveness of the CLA's procedures as an investigatory body. I have today asked Andrew Whetnall, a senior official in my Department, to undertake this stage of the review. I propose that he should be assisted by the advisory group, including representatives of the local authority associations and citizens' advice bureaux, which we established for the first stage of the review. In parallel, I am inviting comments from local authorities and all interested parties on the wider issues raised in the review's first stage. In the light of these comments and the findings of the review's second stage, we intend to take our decisions on the CLA's future.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Arms Exports

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the top 10 companies that have been leading beneficiaries of export credits backing arms sales since 1979. [14866]

Mr. Nelson: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to disclose information about commercial relations between the Export Credits Guarantee Department and individual companies unless the relevant parties have agreed to this.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the largest sum put up by Her Majesty's Government as a financial guarantee or collateral in respect of securing an arms deal; in what year; and with what country the deal was concerned. [14461]

Mr. Lang: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to disclose details of individual contracts unless the relevant parties have agreed to this. I am therefore unable to provide the information which the hon. Member requests.

Late Payment

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy regarding the late payment of commercial debt. [14653]

Mr. Page: The Government recognise the problems that late payment can cause for smaller firms and are committed to tackling the issue. In the 1994 White Paper, "Competitiveness-Helping Business to Win", the Government announced a number of practical measures to tackle late payment, including support for the development, by business of a British standard on prompt payment, improvements to court procedures for debt recovery and a requirement for public companies to disclose their payment policies. In addition, we are helping small businesses to improve their cash-flow management.

I also announced to the House on 11 January 1996, Official Report, columns 293, that I have agreed to look again at the arguments for statutory interest and will report the outcome in the summer.

Rom Data Corporation

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade between which dates Mr. Holmes was employed in the Department of Trade and Industry south-west regional office; and what was the nature of his work. [8924]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 January 1996]: While he was not an employee of the DTI south-west regional office, Mr. Kenneth Holmes advised it on accountancy and financial issues on an external consultancy basis between 5 February 1991 and 15 April 1995.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 335, when he expects to be able to report the findings of his Department's inquiries into the circumstances of the regional selective assistance for the Rom Data Corporation. [8924]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 January 1996]: No DTI south-west regional office employees or former employees are known to have subsequently acted as directors or been otherwise employed by the Rom Data Corporation. However, Mr. Kenneth Holmes, who advised the regional office on regional selective assistance applications on a consultancy basis, became a director and chairman of the Rom Data Corporation.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice was received by the Department of Trade and Industry south-west regional office from other DTI regional offices regarding Mr. John Dawson. [8926]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 January 1996]: None was sought or received.

Small Businesses

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next expects the small business ministerial group to meet; and how frequently and on what dates it is expected to meet in the coming year. [14583]

Mr. Page: The small business ministerial group will meet twice a year. The next meeting has been arranged for 1 July 1996.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the remit of his review of the small firms loan guarantee scheme. [14584]

Mr. Page: The review of the small firms loan guarantee scheme rules was announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his November 1994 Budget statement with a view to making the scheme simpler and more attractive.

Regional Supply Network

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what system of monitoring he intends to establish to discover what level of use the regional supply network has had from (a) small and medium enterprises and (b) all businesses (i) in each region and (ii) in total. [14585]

Mr. Page: A system of monitoring regional supply network usage has been in place since offices opened in April 1995. Quarterly monitoring information reports are obtained from each regional supply office. These include information on the number of businesses that ask the RSN to find suppliers, the number of suppliers who meet the requirements of purchasers and the number of businesses gaining contracts as a result of these inquiries. These figures are collected for each region and collated as national totals. Information on the size of businesses using the RSN services is not collected.

Trade Union Ballots

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what amount has been paid to date in 1995–96 for the carrying out of ballots by trade unions. [14542]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 9 February 1996]: During the financial year 1995–96, £831,938 has been authorised for payment to trade unions by the certification office by 31 January 1996 in respect of the statutory funds for trade union ballots scheme.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

International Criminal Tribunals

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to introduce legislation to enable co-operation with the international criminal tribunals for (a) the former republic of Yugoslavia and (b) Rwanda; and if he will make a statement. [14308]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Legislation to enable the United Kingdom to surrender those indicted by the international criminal tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and for Rwanda will be presented to the Privy Council shortly.

The UK has been co-operating informally with the international criminal tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda. We have made voluntary contributions of almost £450,000 to help fund the secondment of seven members of the police force and a military lawyer, and to buy computer and camera equipment. We have also provided a substantial quantity of information.

United Nations Relief and Works Agency

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future of UNRWA in the middle east peace process. [14554]

Mr. Hanley: We support UNRWA's valuable work the Palestinian refugees in the middle east and remain one of its largest donors. UNRWA has an important role to play in the context of a final settlement of the refugee issue.

Bosnia (War Criminals)

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what powers NATO troops in Bosnia have to arrest individuals suspected of war crimes. [14738]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The North Atlantic Council has authorised IFOR to detain any individuals indicted by the tribunal with whom it comes into contact in the execution of its assigned tasks, and to transfer them to the tribunal. However, it is not part of IFOR's mandate to search for these individuals.

EU Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on which occasions in the last three years officials have vetoed draft EU legislation on the grounds that a fiche d'impact had not been correctly prepared. [13652]

Mr. David Davis: The correct preparation of fiches d'impact is a very important part of our consideration of proposals for EC legislation. It is one of the factors taken into account when Ministers consider the United Kingdom's negotiating position on a particular proposal.

European Courts

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total cost to public funds of the United Kingdom's participation in the work of the European Court of Human Rights and the European Court of Justice over the past three years for which figures are available. [14007]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I refer the hon Member to the replies given to the hon. Member for Southend, East (Sir T. Taylor) by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General on 30 October 1995, Official Report, column 12, and my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 7 November 1995, Official Report, column 697.

These provide costs to public funds relating to decisions of the European Court of Justice and the European Court of Human Rights over a two year period from October 1993 to October 1995. These costs include counsels' fees, costs and damages. Wider costs, if any, arising from a particular decision are a matter for the relevant departmental Minister.

The cost to public funds in respect of ECHR judgments for which figures are available including the remaining periods—February to October 1993 and October 1995 to February 1996—is £484,018.90.

On costs to pubic funds for European Court of Justice judgments, and European Court of Human Rights counsels' fees for the two periods above, I shall write to the hon. Member.

Treaty of Rarotonga

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government intend to sign the protocols to the treaty of Rarotonga; and if he will make a statement. [14298]

Mr. David Davis: We announced in October last year that we would sign the relevant protocols to the treaty of Rarotonga in the first half of 1996. A firm date has yet to be fixed. But preparations are in hand and we expect to sign in the near future.

Missiles

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the maximum number of warheads that the United States Government intend to deploy on each of their Trident D5 missiles to comply with the START II restrictions will affect the maximum number of warheads which the United Kingdom Government intend to deploy on each of their D5 missiles. [14291]

Mr. David Davis: No.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from the United Nations Special Commission on Iraq in regard to the loss reported on 30 January by the International Atomic Energy Agency of a high technology furnace ordered by Iraq for use in a centrifuge uranium enrichment plant in 1990. [14855]

Mr. David Davis: We are not aware of any report form the IAEA relating to the loss of a high technology furnace ordered by Iraq for use in a centrifuge uranium enrichment plant.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those magistrates courts that have been closed in each county in England and Wales since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [14275]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Decisions to close magistrates courts are made by the local magistrates courts committee. The Lord Chancellor is involved only when there is an appeal by a local authority against a proposed closure. Information on magistrates court closures where there has not been an appeal is not collected centrally.

Solicitors Complaints Bureau

Mr. Amess: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what recent assessment he has made of the (a) effectiveness, (b) speed of delivery and (c) independence of the Solicitors Complaints Bureau; [13899]

(2) what assessment he has made of the balance between solicitors, officials and lay people on an adjudication committee of the Solicitors Complaints Bureau; and if he will make it his policy to increase the number of lay people. [13892]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: None. These are matters for the Law Society, which has responsibility for maintaining standards of conduct among solicitors.

However, the Government have established the legal services ombudsman to provide an independent check on the complaints handling procedures of the General Council of the Bar and the Council for Licensed Conveyancers, as well as the SCB. Both in his reports in individual cases, and in his annual report to the Lord Chancellor, which is laid before Parliament, the ombudsman highlights areas of concern and makes recommendations to the professional bodies for improvements in their arrangements for investigating complaints.

Legal Ombudsman

Mr. Amess: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases the legal ombudsman has (a) accepted and (b) finalised in 1995; and what is the average time between (a) and (b). [13889]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In 1995 the legal services ombudsman (a) accepted 1,436 cases for investigation and (b) finalised and issued reports in 1,041 cases. The average time between (a) and (b) in 1995 was six and a half months.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many appeals by port-of-entry applicants for asylum were determined; and how many of such appeals succeeded wholly or in part in the last two years for which figures are available. [14490]

Mr. Kirkhope: Over half the 2,440 appeals determined by adjudicators in 1994 had been made by people who had applied for asylum at ports of entry. Table 8.3 of the Home Office statistical bulletin, issue 15/95, provides the available information on the outcomes of asylum appeals to adjudicators and the tribunal. A copy of this publication is available in the Library. Figures for 1995 are not yet available.

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments since 1987, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14088]

Mr. Howard: There are no records of spare computer capacity in my Department having been sold to other Departments since 1987.

Departmental Publications

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of his Department's administrative manuals and internal guidance are now made public; and which remain private. [14031]

Mr. Howard: The following manuals and guidance are now made public:

Manuals and guidance issued by the United Kingdom Passport Agency.

The Immigration Service complaints handbook.

The Immigration and Nationality Department complaints staff instruction.

74 handouts issued to trainee immigration officers.

Home Office Criminal Statistics:

Volume I Counting Rules for Notifiable Offence.

Volume II Codes for classifying the offence.

Manual on achieving the transfer of data on court ppearances direct from the magistrates' courts computer systems to the Home Office.

Guidance for magistrates' court staff on how to produce accurate statistics for the Home Office from the ICL, EQUIS and UNISYS systems. Data interchange user guides for ICL, EQUIS and UNISYS systems.

Crown Court Statistics Data Interchange Guide.

The National Strategy for Police Information Systems.

Fire Service College:

Safety Management Policy.

Environment Policy.

Quality Policy.

Training Performance Indicators.

Prison Service Standing Order 5—communications.

Instructions to Governors 82/94—Victim Helpline.

Procedures for Open Government.

Guidance setting out the circumstances in which requests for privileged access to closed records may be granted.

It is not possible to list the administrative manuals and internal guidance used in the Home Office which remain private, because there is no comprehensive list of these. However work is in hand in assessing whether more of this material could be made available in future. Current plans include the release of new guidance now being prepared on applying the 1951 United Nations convention on the status of refugees.

Job Advertisements

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many jobs have been advertised in each grade in his Department during the last three months for which records are available; and how many people have applied for such job. [13824]

Mr. Howard: The following information relates to those posts advertised in the Home Office, including its agencies, other than posts advertised by prison establishments. Information about the latter could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Grade	Number of posts	Applications
Grade 5	1	152
Grade 7	1	17
Grade 7	1	31
Senior Executive Officer	1	20
Higher Executive Officer	3	62

Chaplains	1	11
Catering Manager	1	9
Medical Officer	1	7
Medical Officer	1	9
Support Grade	1	25
Support Grade	2	18
Scientists	3	83
Stores Attendant	2	33

EU Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on which occasions in the last three years officials have vetoed draft EC legislation on the grounds that a fiche d'imapct had not been correctly prepared. [13651]

Mr. Howard: The correct preparation of fiches d'impact is a very important part of our consideration of proposals for European Community legislation. It is one of the factors taken into account when Ministers consider the United Kingdom's negotiating position on a particular proposal.

Prisoners

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the relative cost, at the latest estimate, of keeping a prisoner in (a) secure prison establishments and (b) open prisons and related establishments. [14002]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alan Walker to Mr. Archy Kirkwood, dated 12 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the relative cost of keeping a prisoner in (a) secure prison establishments and (b) open prisons and related establishments.

In 1994–95 the average annual net operating cost per place for open establishments was £13,662, and for secure establishments it was £20,813.

"Haven't They Suffered Enough"

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what aid and assistance his Department proposes to give to the Refugee Council's appeal, "Haven't They Suffered Enough"; and if he will make a statement. [14244]

Mr. Kirkhope: We have no plans to provide assistance to the appeal.

Asylum Seekers and Refugees

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines his Department issues on provision of accommodation for asylum seekers and refugees (a) to landlords and (b) to other bodies; and if he will make a statement. [14246]

Mr. Kirkhope: No guidelines on such matters are issued by the Home Office.

Wood Green Crown Court

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations his Department has received regarding the quality of meals provided by Securicor at Wood Green Crown court; and what response his Department has made. [14582]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mrs. Barabara Roche, dated 12 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the provision of meals by Securicor Custodial Services at Wood Green Crown Court.

No representations have been received about the quality of meals provided by Securicor at Wood Green Crown Court.

Duchess of York

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times during each of the last three years police officers have travelled abroad as part of their duties in connection with the Duchess of York and her family. [14813]

Mr. Howard: For security reasons, it is not the practice to give details of the measures taken to protect the Duchess of York and her family.

Home Country Reports

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of all home country reports currently available; if he will undertake to place in the Library all such reports relating to countries designated as safe; and if he will place in the Library the home country report on Pakistan used by a Home Office presenting officer at an immigration appeal hearing in Leeds during 1995. [14120]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 8 February 1996]: Two country assessments—on Ghana and on Nigeria—have been completed and have been placed in the Library. Assessments on other countries, including Pakistan, are in preparation and will also be placed in the Library when they have been finalised.

PRIME MINISTER

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will ask Lord Justice Scott to disclose the names of journalists to be briefed and the dates of briefings in relation to the forthcoming report and the progress of the inquiry. [14269]

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Rail Privatisation (Directorships)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Prime Minister what guidance he is giving retiring members or former members of his Administration or hon. Members in respect of their accepting directorships in privatised rail companies. [14144]

The Prime Minister: From the start of the current session of Parliament, Ministers who leave office will be expected to ask the independent advisory committee on business appointments about any appointment outside Government which they wish to take up within two years.

Senior Salaries Review Body

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Prime Minister what is the average of the pay increases recommended by the Senior Salaries Review Body in the past year. [14617]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Uxbridge (Sir M. Shersby) on 8 February, Official Report, columns 294–96.

TRANSPORT

Crash Barriers

16. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria are used when deciding if crash barriers should be installed. [13033]

Mr. Watts: The criteria for the provision of crash barriers are contained in the Highway Agency's departmental standard TD 19/85. "Safety Fences and Barriers" and TD 32/93 "Wire Rope Safety Fences". Copies are lodged in the Libraries.

Disabled People (Access)

21. Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet representatives of the regional rail users consultative committees to discuss disabled persons' access to (a) railway stations and (b) trains. [13038]

Mr. Watts: My right hon. Friend meets members of the Rail Users' Consultative Committee from time to time to discuss a range of issues.

26. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the Rail Regulator to discuss disabled persons' access to the rail network. [13043]

28. Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the Rail Regulator to discuss disabled persons' access to the rail network. [13045]

Mr. Watts: The Secretary of State meets the Rail Regulator on a regular basis to discuss all aspects of Rail Transport. His next meeting will be on Thursday 22 February.

29. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss disabled persons' access to, and safety on, air transport. [13046]

Mr. Norris: I have no plans to do so.

The Civil Aviation Authority is represented on the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee—DPTAC—working group on airports and on the Access to the Skies Committee.

Both these committees, on which my Department is also represented, are concerned with disabled persons' access to, and safety on, air transport.

A540

23. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the delayed start of the A540 Ormskirk bypass. [13040]

Mr. Watts: I met a delegation from Ormskirk in September 1995. I visited Ormskirk and the bypass route in October 1995. I answered a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Southport (Mr. Banks) on 9 January. Following the review of the trunk road programme, the Ormskirk bypass remains in the main programme.

Gospel Oak-Barking Line

25. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had recently with local authorities regarding infrastructure improvements on the Gospel Oak to Barking line. [13042]

Mr. Norris: None.

Public Transport Investment

27. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to increase the level of investment in public transport. [13044]

Mr. Norris: Funding for public transport was given priority in allocating the Department's resources in the last public expenditure round, and we are pressing forward with the policies we have announced for privatising and deregulating the transport market, so giving the private sector the chance to respond to passengers' demands for efficient, modern transport services.

Safe Town Initiative

30. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the first results of his Department's safe town initiative will be available. [13047]

Mr. Norris: The initiative will be closely monitored by the Transport Research Laboratory in conjunction with Gloucester city and county councils to ensure the maximum road safety benefits are obtained. Although full results will not be available until some time after the project is completed in 2001, interim results relating to some of the measures should become available in two to three years.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when consultation work will start on the modernisation of the west coast main line. [14252]

Mr. Watts: Railtrack consulted extensively with local authorities and other parties during the feasibility study. Railtrack continues to communicate with, and inform, those people likely to be affected by the modernisation and will be considering their views at each stage of the modernisation project.

Rail Safety

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many rail vehicles are being prevented from entering service awaiting completion of Railtrack's safety procedure; what is the total value of these vehicles; and what charge is being made by Railtrack for their safety assessment. [14487]

Mr. Watts: Railtrack has advised me that it is not preventing any rail vehicle from entering service. I understand that the relevant safety work is being carried out by the train manufacturers and operators, who are preparing their own safety assessments. Railtrack is working with the manufacturers and operators in accepting these safety assessments. Railtrack does not charge for the acceptance procedure.

Railtrack has appointed a panel of independent experts to review the safety appraisal process for new rolling stock, and to recommend areas for improvement while safeguarding safety.

Driver Licensing

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on (a) the progress of the implementation of the second EC directive on driver licensing and (b) how the Driving Standards Agency intends to comply with the directive with regard to large goods vehicles. [14434]

Mr. Norris: Work on preparation of the regulations and the operational arrangements to implement the directive is in hand. Last November, the Driving Standards Agency wrote to some 600 interested parties announcing the detailed plans for implementing the directive with regard to driving tests for large goods vehicles, and I have arranged for a copy of that letter to be placed in the Library.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what resources he intends to make available to the Driving Standards Agency for compliance with the second EC directive on driver licensing by July 1996. [14437]

Mr. Norris: The Driving Standards Agency is an on vote non-statutory trading body whose expenditure is fully recovered by the income it receives in fees and charges. Its resources are planned in accordance with expected levels of demand for tests within unit cost targets at agreed service levels. The agency's business plan for 1996–97 is in preparation and will be deposited in the House Libraries, when completed, in accordance with our usual practice.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many large goods vehicle driving tests were conducted by delegated examiners in each of the last three years; and what were the results of those tests; [14433]

(2) if he will list the number of delegated driving examiners employed on large goods vehicle tests by his Department; and if he will make a statement on the arrangements in place for the supervision of such examinations by the Driving Standards Agency. [14438]

Mr. Norris: The Secretary of State for Transport has not appointed any delegated driving examiners to undertake large goods vehicle tests.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many heavy goods vehicles were (a) inspected and (b) found defective in the last year for which figures are available. [14489]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate Executive Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 12 February 1996:

The Secretary of State had asked me to reply to your question concerning the number of heavy goods vehicles inspected and found defective in the last year for which figures are available.

The number of vehicles inspected for their roadworthiness during the year April 1994–March 1995, and found with defects serious enough to warrant a prohibition being issued, is shown below.

	Total number inspected	Number of prohibitions
		Immediate	Delayed
Fleet checks	50,942	1,813	1,416
Roadside checks	145,157	9,633	9,971
Special checks (smoke checks and lighting checks)	14,878	70	401

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the maximum driving hours within which HGV drivers must operate in the United Kingdom. [14521]

Mr. Norris: Drivers of HGVs over 3.5 tonnes, with the exception of vehicles used for certain purposes, are subject to European Union rules on drivers' hour. They may drive for not more than 90 hours in any fortnight, 56 hours between weekly rest periods, and nine hours between daily rest periods, extendable to 10 hours twice a week. They must also take a break of at least 45 minutes for every four and a half hours of driving.

Certain categories of HGV which are exempt from the EU rules are subject to United Kingdom national rules on drivers' hours which restrict daily driving to 10 hours and daily duty to 11 hours.

Driving Instructors

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the risk assessment of the operational aspects of the duties of the senior examiner (approved driving instructor) grade within his Department to be completed; and if he intends to place a copy of the results in the Library. [14435]

Mr. Norris: The working practices of supervising examiners—approved driving instructor—are covered by several existing generic risk assessments. I will have these placed in the Library.

Peakes Parkway

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when funds from his Department will be released to enable Humberside county council and its successor authorities to construct phase 3 of the Peakes parkway; and if he will make a statement. [14325]

Mr. Norris: My Department is supporting stage 3 of the Peakes parkway with a supplementary credit approval of £2.55 million in 1995–96. This has enabled Humberside country council to carry out works in advance of the main contract. North East Lincolnshire district council has been allocated funds of £1 million to continue work on the scheme 1996–97. It is expected that this will enable the start to be made on the main contract. Subject to satisfactory progress, we expect to continue support for the scheme until its completion.

Departmental Publications

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which of his Department's administrative manuals and internal guidance are now made public; and which remain private. [14025]

Mr. Norris: My Department is reviewing its manuals and guidance. The aim is to make information available to staff and the public in a clear and accessible form. Material may be kept private for security, commercial or legal reasons. The following material is either published by the Department or may be seen on request:

Sugar Beet Transportation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action is being taken to enforce the requirement to net open loads of sugar beet in heavy goods vehicles on public roads. [14449]

Mr. Norris: The Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations require loads carried on vehicles to be secured at all times so that neither danger nor nuisance is likely to be caused by reason of the load falling from the vehicle. These requirements are amplified in the Department's code of practice on load security which advises that loose loads should be covered. The requirements are enforced by the police and the vehicle inspectorate as part of their general duties.

Workplace Regulations

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each agency within his Department the date of completion of the risk assessments required (a) by the display screen equipment regulations and (b) by the workplace regulations. [14436]

Mr. Norris: Where major programmes of risk assessment have been completed or have a planned completion date that is given in the table. However, the requirement to undertake risk assessments is ongoing, for example, where there are changes in staff and in the workplace, as shown in the table.

Agency	(a) Display screen equipment	(b) Workplace regulations
Driver and Vehicle Licensing agency	April 1995	HQ completed October 1995; local office network to be completed by May 1996
Driving Standards Agency	Ongoing	Ongoing
Highways Agency	To be completed by March 1996	Inspections completed by January 1996
Marine Safety Agency	September 1995	September 1995
The Coastguard Agency	Ongoing	Ongoing
Transport Research Laboratory	August 1993	February 1996
Vehicle Certification Agency	January 1993	November 1995
Vehicle Inspectorate	To be completed by December 1996	To be completed by December 1996

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by traffic area office the dates on which the risk assessment required by the display screen equipment regulations was carried out. [14441]

Mr. Norris: Information is not readily available on the exact dates of the initiation or completion of the risk assessments. But assessments of workstations already in place before the regulations came into force were carried out during 1994 and 1995 in all offices except the South Eastern and Metropolitan office, where the assessment is expected to be completed shortly.

Assessments of new workstations normally take place as and when the latter are installed.

Job Advertisements

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many jobs have been advertised in each grade in his Department during the last three months for which records are available; and how many people have applied for each such job. [13826]

Mr. Norris: Details of the number of jobs advertised in each grade in the Department and its agencies in the last three months—November and December 1995 and January 1996—are set out in the following table.

Central transport group figures

Road Traffic Act 1988

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the Department of Health about repealing section 157 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 (a) in total and (b) for pensioners only. [14307]

Mr. Norris: None. This is a matter for which the Secretary of State for Health has policy responsibility.

EU Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on which occasions in the last three years officials have vetoed draft EC legislation on the grounds that a fiche d'impact had not been correctly prepared. [13650]

Mr. Watts: The correct preparation of fiches d'impact is a very important part of our consideration of proposals for EC legislation. It is one of the factors taken into account when Ministers consider the United Kingdom's negotiating position on a particular proposal.

Traffic Lights

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to speed up the installation of traffic lights at roundabouts at appropriate locations; and if he will make a statement. [13223]

Mr. Norris: It is for the highway authority concerned to decide whether to instal traffic signals at particular roundabouts, normally for reasons of safety or capacity.

Roadside Checks

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the results of the roadside survey of illegal operators undertaken by the Vehicle Inspectorate in October 1995. [15167]

Mr. Norris: The preliminary results of the survey indicate that, of the total heavy goods vehicle mileage travelled in Great Britain, around 1.6 per cent. is by vehicles operated without an operator's licence where one should be held. The survey also indicate that vehicles operating without a licence are disproportionately likely to have roadworthiness defects and to be involved in other traffic offences such as drivers' hours and driver licensing offences. A number of more minor operator licensing offences were also found, for example involving vehicles operating outside the terms of the licence of their operator. A detailed report on the survey will be published shortly, once all the figures have been fully checked.

Severe Weather Conditions

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what extra assistance his Department has the power to offer to Copeland borough council and Cumbria county council following the recent severe weather conditions. [14817]

Mr. Norris: The winter maintenance of local authority roads is funded through revenue support grant. Emergency assistance to local authorities is covered by the Bellwin scheme, which may be activated by my right

hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment under powers in section 155 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is his estimate of the costs arising from the provisions of the Street Works (Sharing of Costs of Works) Regulations 1992 to (a) gas, (b) electricity, (c) water and sewerage and (d) telecommunications industries associated with the planned rapid transit schemes known as (i) Docklands light railway extension, (ii) Rochdale to Manchester/Oldham extension to Metrolink, (iii) Reading bus lane construction and (iv) Greater Nottingham rapid transit; and if he will make a statement; [14627]

(2) what estimate he has made of the costs to (a) the gas, (b) the electricity, (c) the water and sewerage and (d) the telecommunications industries associated with the planned rapid transit schemes known as (i) Croydon Tramlink, (ii) Birmingham Metrolink, (iii) Leeds Supertram and (iv) the channel tunnel rail link under the provisions of the Street Works (Sharing of Costs and Works) regulations 1992; and if he will make a statement. [14469]

Mr. Norris: The regulations provide for the utilities to bear 18 per cent. of the allowable costs of diversionary works, the remaining 82 per cent. being borne by the promoter. Estimates of scheme costs, including diversionary works costs, are a matter for the promoter in the first instance.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many written parliamentary questions were passed for answer to executive agencies and non-governmental departments in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [14991]

Mr. Norris: The information requested is a matter of public record.

Public Transport

Mr. Alan Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet representatives of the Disabled Persons' Transport Advisory Committee to discuss access to public transport. [13031]

Sir George Young: My Department has regular meetings with the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee to discuss a wide range of issues relating to the transport needs of disabled people. I will be seeing the Chairman on the day of the June quarterly meeting.

Public Records Office

Mr. Tam Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 4 December, Official Report, column 57, in what circumstances he is able to release official files other than at the appropriate time under the procedures and criteria set down by the Public Records Office. [13032]

Sir George Young: My Department may grant "privileged" access to official files earlier than their normal review date. The decision to give such access, and the conditions which are imposed with it, are at the discretion of the Department, in line with the criteria set down by the Public Records Office.

TREASURY

VAT (Computer Equipment)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what considerations led Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to begin to collect VAT on computer equipment for the blind and partially sighted; and if he will publish the directive ordering the change. [14526]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 31 January 1996, Official Report, column 754.

Trusts

Miss Hoey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount of money held in trust (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) outside the United Kingdom by United Kingdom residents. [14260]

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not available.

Housing Investment Trusts

Miss Hoey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of tax relief provided to the proposed housing investment trusts in the first full year; and how many properties he anticipates will be made available for rent under the scheme in a full year. [14258]

Mr. Jack: We estimate the cost of tax relief in the first full year to be negligible. We have made no estimate of the number of properties that will be made available for rent through housing investment trusts. That will depend on how promoters and prospective investors respond to the new opportunity.

Cross-channel Shopping

Miss Hoey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his most recent estimate of the loss of revenue from cross-channel shopping; if he will make a statement on his underlying assumptions in formulating this estimate; and what estimate he has made of the number of cross-channel trips made annually for the primary purpose of avoiding excise duties. [14261]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise's latest estimate of the loss of revenue cross channel shopping is as follows:

Total revenue losses

£ million

	12 Months to June 1995
	Excise duty	VAT	Total
Alcoholic drinks	160	60	220
Tobacco products	120	30	150
Total	280	90	370

Source:
OPCS Omnibus Survey.

The estimate of revenue loss assumes that only 50 per cent. of cross-border purchases of alcohol represent a loss of UK sales and duty; the other 50 per cent., is assumed to be additional spending associated with the lower prices on the continent. For tobacco, it is assumed that all cross-border shopping replaces UK sales. The calculation also requires assumptions about the average strength of alcohol purchased abroad and the average prices at which this alcohol or tobacco would have been sold in the UK.

The omnibus survey does not identify how many trips are made for the primary purpose of purchasing alcohol or tobacco abroad.

Public Supply Contracts

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans his Department has to seek to raise the limit on the value of public supply contracts in excess of which EC directive 77/62/EEC as amended by 88/295/EEC applies. [14103]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Council directive 77/62/EEC, as subsequently amended, on the award of public supply contracts, has been replaced by Council directive 93/36/EEC. The Commission has proposed a marginal increase to align the threshold at which the directive applies with the multilateral Government procurement agreement under the World Trade Organisation that came into effect on 1 January 1996. My Department has no plans to seek a further increase but will wish to consider an impact assessment being undertaken for the Commission.

Job Advertisements

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many jobs have been advertised in each grade in his Department during the last three months for which records are available; and how many people have applied for each such job. [13836]

Mrs. Angela Knight: In the period from November 1995 to January 1996 there were two advertisements to recruit staff. One is to fill the post of head of internal audit, which may be filled at grade 5, 6 or 7 and the application process is currently on-going. The other was to fill economic adviser posts in a number of departments, including two Treasury grade 7 economist posts, for which there were 33 applications.

European Monetary Institute

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the capital cost provided by the Bank of England toward the funding of the EMI, in total and annually including projected contributions to 2000; and if this will be refunded if a European central bank is created but Britain does not participate in a single currency. [13439]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Article 16 of the protocol on the statute of the European Monetary Institute, annexed to the EC treaty, provides for member states' central banks to make contributions towards the capital resources of the EMI. The Bank of England has contributed 94.5 million ecu—equivalent to £74.7 million at the time—towards the capital of the EMI. The Bank of England made its contributions to the EMI from its own resources and its share of the EMI's capital is one of its own assets.

Article 1091 of the treaty states that the EMI shall go into liquidation upon the establishment of the ECB—European central bank. The proceeds of the liquidation will be distributed to national central banks in the same proportion as capital was provided, under the terms of article 23 of the protocol. This procedure will apply whether or not the United Kingdom participates in the single currency.

Suppliers Charter

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to publish a suppliers charter to ensure that (a) all suppliers and (b) small and medium enterprises have the opportunity to compete for the provision of goods and services in open competition. [14586]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Treasury follows the good customer practice for Government relationships with suppliers. This is set out on page 41 of the White Paper "Setting New Standards, A Strategy for Government Procurement", published by HMSO in May 1995.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the annual limits below which no tax is paid on contributions for (a) employers' contributions and (b) employees' contributions to (i) executive pension plans, (ii) personal pension plans and (iii) small self-administered pension schemes. [14667]

Mr. Jack: In occupational pension schemes, which includes executive pension plans and small self-administered pension schemes, employee members may annually contribute up to 15 per cent. of their salary with tax relief. There is no specific limit on employer contributions, but they should not exceed the amount required to provide the benefits promised by the scheme.

In personal pension plans, employee members may annually pay a percentage of their salary as follows:

Age of member on first day of tax year	Maximum percentage of salary payable
35 or less	17.5
36–45	20
46–50	25
51–55	30
56–60	35
61–74	40

These annual limits for personal pension schemes may be increased by unused contributions relief from past tax years. Any employer contributions to personal pensions must, when aggregate with the employee's contribution fall within the above limits.

Government Bonds (Payment)

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to ensure that a present purchaser of Her Majesty's Government's bonds with a redemption date after 1999 will receive payment in pound sterling. [13615]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The presidency conclusion from the European Council on 15 to 16 December 1995 in Madrid state that, on the assumption that the third stage of EMU starts on 1 January 1999, in participating member states,

"by 1 January 2002 at the latest, public debt denominated in the former national currencies will be redeemable only in the single currency".

Protocol No. 11 annexed to the EC treaty means that the United Kingdom shall not be obliged or committed to participate in the third stage of economic and monetary union without a separate decision to do so by the Government and Parliament. We will agree to take part in the single currency only if it is in our national interest to do so, given the circumstances at the time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Visitors' Facilities

31. Mr. Flynn: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission what new proposals he has to improve facilities for visitors to the House. [13049]

Mr. Beith: On 12 July 1994, the House approved a recommendation from the Catering Committee that the area currently occupied by the Westminster Hall cafeteria should be converted into a visitors' centre.

Cleaning Contracts

Mr. Key: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission which company holds the cleaning contract in respect of common areas, kitchens and men's and women's lavatories, and rooms other than Members and Members' staff rooms, at 7 Millbank; when it commenced; when it will terminate; what is its value; and if it was awarded by competitive tender. [14467]

Mr. Beith: The cleaning contract for the parliamentary estate, including 7 Millbank is held by ISS London Ltd. The contract commenced in August 1992 and will terminate in August 1997. The value of the contract is subject to commercial confidentiality, but the annual cost of contract cleaning at 7 Millbank, excluding the rooms of Members and their staff, is £190,000. The contract was awarded by competitive tender.

Job Advertisements

Mr. Janner: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, how many jobs have been advertised in each grade in each Department of the House during the last three months for which records are available; and how many people have been applied for each such job. [13894]

Mr. Beith: In the three months ending 31 January 1996 details of recruitment exercises held to fill vacancies in Departments of the House, together with the number of applicants for each, are as follows:

Vacancy	Department	Number of applications
Legal Assistant (Grade 8–10)	Clerk's	48
Secretary (Grade 3)	Serjeant at Arms	33
Network Planning Officer (Grade 7)	Serjeant at Arms	24
Doorkeeper (Grade 12)	Serjeant at Arms	1,002
Word Processing Assistant (Grade 13)	Official Report	66
Foreman (DEL1)	Parliamentary Works Directorate	6
Fitter (DEL3)	Parliamentary Works Directorate	18
Storekeeper (DEL4)	Parliamentary Works Directorate	14
Craft Auxiliary (DEL6)	Parliamentary Works Directorate	5
Heating Attendant (DEL6)	Parliamentary Works Directorate	19
Assistant Financial Controller (Grade 10)	Refreshment	13
Income Control Clerk (Grade 13)	Refreshment	5
Food and Beverage Control Clerk (Grade 13)	Refreshment	14
Chefs (7 vacancies)	Refreshment	28

Westminster Hall (Media Use)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will assess the advantages of allowing live media use of Westminster Hall. [13054]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: The authorities controlling Westminster Hall have already agreed that permission may be granted to film interviews in the Hall before 9.30 am on sitting Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, and during recesses.

Filming is also permitted in any of the six interview rooms off the Hall, and in the Jubilee Room.

Photocopiers

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what are the rules governing the use of photocopiers owned and maintained by the House authorities; what assessment he has made of the extent to which photocopiers are being used to excess; and what measures are being pursued to prevent such abuses. [13051]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: Photocopiers owned and maintained by the House are intended for use by hon. Members in connection with their parliamentary duties. They are not intended to be used for work in connection with hon. Members' party political or non-parliamentary work outside Parliament. Detailed guidance on their use is given in a notice adjacent to each photocopier.

As a result of a recent study into control systems to prevent abuse of photocopying facilities, the Administration Committee approved a trial of overprinted photocopy paper in 7 Millbank, to run from the return of the House from the Christmas adjournment, until its rise for the Easter adjournment. The results will then be considered in order to establish what effect the introduction of this paper has had on consumption, and will enable the Committee to decide on any further action.

Catering Facilities

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what plans he has to upgrade catering facilities for visitors to the Palace of Westminster. [13052]

Sir Colin Shepherd: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 15 January, Official Report, column 350.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what additional provision he plans to make for additional catering facilities at the House of Commons in the next financial year. [13056]

Sir Colin Shepherd: There are no additional catering facilities planned in the next financial year.

However, the refurbishment of existing outlets will continue, which will update and improve the facilities currently available to hon. Members and all others who work in the Palace.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will make a statement on the measures taken to combat the presence of Legionnaires' disease. [13060]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply I gave on 15 January, Official Report column 350.

EU Decision Making

38. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has to improve parliamentary scrutiny of European Union decision making; and if he will make a statement. [13064]

Mr. Newton: Scrutiny procedures are kept under review, but I have no specific plans for change at present. Careful consideration will be given to any proposals emerging from the Select Committee on European Legislation intergovernmental conference inquiry.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 15 January, Official Report column 365, what factors preclude him from setting up a Select Committee on the destruction of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie. [13063]

Mr. Newton: There have already been a number of investigations and inquiries including the fatal accident inquiry, the Transport Select Committee and the US presidential commission. It is difficult to see what further areas a Select Committee on the destruction of Pan Am 103 could look at without encroaching on evidence which can properly be addressed only in the context of a criminal trial of the two Libyans accused.

All-night Sittings

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many all-night sittings there have been in the period since the Jopling report recommendations were introduced. [13062]

Mr. Newton: None.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Departmental Publications

Dr. Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which is his Department's administrative manuals and internal guidance are now made public; and which remain private. [14037]

Mr. Boswell: In accordance with paragraph 3(ii) of the "Code of Practice on Access to Government Information", we have already made available the great majority of the Ministry's administrative guidelines on our dealings with the public. These are as listed. The remainder, some chapters in the "Instructions for Regional Service Centres and Instructions for Veterinary Officers", will be made available as soon as possible.

Where guidance contains information which should properly be kept confidential under the code, relevant sections have been removed and each has been marked to this effect.

Consultants (Expenditure)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the expenditure of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on all external consultants including management consultants for each of the years (a) 1979–80, (b) 1989–90, (c) 1991–92, (d) 1993–94, (e) 1994–95 and (f) 1995–96 (i) to date and (ii) as estimated for the whole year; what estimate he has made of such expenditure for 1996–97; and if he will estimate the savings accruing to his Department for the use of consultants in each of these years. [11351]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 25 January 1996]: Expenditure on consultants in the financial year 1979–80 could be provided only at disproportionate expense. Expenditure in each of the other years concerned was as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure (£)
1989–90	2,972,150
1991–92	5,374,284
1993–94	13,071,785
1994–95	12,259,782
1995–96 (to date)	10,245,969
1995–96 (whole year estimated)	14,736,635
1996–97 (estimated)	11,328,389

These figures exclude the Veterinary Medicines Directorate and the Meat Hygiene Service, which will be submitting separate replies.

It is not possible to quantify savings accruing from this expenditure, since most of the benefits derive from new systems and working methods, and from the consultants' expertise in certain fields, in which permanent staff do not have the necessary knowledge and experience.

Letter from J. M. Rutter to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 26 January 1996:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about expenditure on external consultants by the Veterinary Medicines Directorate, for 1979–80 and each year since 1989–90, as this is an operational matter for which I am responsible.

The Directorate was established as a Next Steps Agency on 2 April 1990 and did not maintain its own accounts until 1991–92.

Details of expenditure on external consultants since that date are as follows:

1991–92: £ 5,869

1992–93: £ 41,272

1993–94: £ 34,281

1994–95: £ 12,705

1995–96: £ 4,042 (to date)

1995–96: £ 5,500 (Forecast)

1996–97: £ 6,000 (Forecast)

It is not possible to quantify savings accruing from this expenditure, since most of the benefits derive from new systems and working methods and from the consultants expertise in certain fields, in which permanent staff do not have the necessary knowledge and experience.

Imported Animals and Birds

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list mortalities amongst wild birds imported into the United Kingdom in each year since 1989. [8776]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 19 January 1996]: Mortality statistics for wild birds imported into the UK have been published for the years 1988 and 1992 and copies have been placed in the Library of the House. A summary of the results is set out. Statistics for 1993 and 1994 are in preparation and these will also be placed in the Library as soon as they are published.

Water Leakage

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made over the last five years of leakage from the public water supply on a comparable basis with those figures that have been produced by the privatised water companies in England and Wales. [13422]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 6 February 1996]: Losses from the public water distribution system in Northern Ireland are currently estimated to be 9.5 cu m per kilometre of main per day. This is in the mid range of figures issued by Ofwat for England and Wales. Earlier leakage assessments for Northern Ireland were not made on the comparative basis issued by Ofwat.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the expenditure of his Department, his Department's agencies and non-departmental public bodies on all forms of overseas travel, overseas accommodation and other associated expenses for (a) 1979–80, (b) 1989–90, (c) 1991–92, (d) 1993–94, (e) 1994–95, (f) 1995–96 and (g) 1996–97. [11426]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 30 January 1996]: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, information on all travel, accommodation and other associated expenses of Northern Ireland Departments is listed.

1995–96: 15,798

1996–97: 4,657[2]

Note:

[1] Information not available in DHSS and DANI.

[2] Excludes DED, DOE and DHSS as budgets have not yet been agreed.

Information on the Northern Ireland Office is not included.

Information on non-departmental public bodies could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

River Maine (Pollution)

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what attempts have been made by the fishery division to investigate the damage inflicted on the River Maine system by pollution. [13203]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 5 February 1996]: The statutory responsibility for investigating damage inflicted on water courses by pollution incidents lies with the Department of the Environment. The Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland, acting as agents for the DOE, investigated a total of 29 reported incidents of pollution in the River Maine and its tributaries in 1995. As a result five prosecutions are pending and 12 warning letters were issued.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the expenditure on regional selective assistance offers accepted by companies in (a) 1991–92, (b) 1992–93, (c) 1993–94 and (d) 1994–95, the proportion of regional selective assistance expenditure on foreign-owned firms and regional selective assistance expenditure per employee in manufacturing. [12701]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 30 January 1996]: In Northern Ireland selective financial assistance is administered by the Industrial Development Board and the local enterprise development unit. The information set out in the following tables shows the value of SFA offers accepted, total expenditure to date under such offers, the proportion paid to foreign-owned firms, and expenditure per employee in manufacturing industry.

Selective financial assistance

Industrial Development Board

	Value of SFA offers accepted in each year (£ million)	Payments to date under those offers (£ million)	Percentage of payments by value made to foreign owned firms
1991–92	64.34	30.29	37
1992–93	95.12	46.74	63
1993–94	127.08	64.23	49
1994–95	102.14	26.26	36

Local Enterprise Development Unit

	Value of SFA offers accepted in each year (£ million)	Payments to date under those offers (£ million)	Percentage of payments by value made to foreign owned firms
1991–92	not available	not available	nil
1992–93	not available	not available	nil
1993–94	19.54	10.58	nil
1994–95	21.93	10.62	nil

Foreign-owned firms are those whose country of ownership is outside the United Kingdom.

The average selective financial assistance expenditure to date per employee in manufacturing was £732 in respect of the 1993–94 offers and £355 in respect of the 1994–95 offers.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Student Funding (North Yorkshire)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students received funding from the North Yorkshire county council for courses outside the county in 1994 and 1995. [14238]

Mr. Forth: Information is not available in the form requested.

In the academic year 1993–94, the latest year for which data are available, North Yorkshire local education authority made 12,380 mandatory awards and 230 discretionary awards to higher education students and 5,880 discretionary awards to students on courses of further education. Information on the place of study is not collected by the Department for these award holders.

Information Technology

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 285, if the current survey into IT provision will list information relating to (a) the number of schools and pupils with access to the Internet, (b) the number of schools with a local area network, (c) the number of CD-ROM machines in each school and (d) the number and type of computers available to pupils in their home. [14197]

Mr. Robin Squire: The survey will collect information on access to the Internet, the number of computers linked by internal networks and the number of computers with CD-ROM drives. No information is being collected on computers used by pupils at home. Information on the number of households with home computers is collected by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on the general household survey and published in "Social Trends".

Benefit Agency Staff (Safety)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will carry out an audit of safety for staff working in Government benefit agencies throughout the country. [14050]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Ms Joan Walley, dated 12 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question about safety for staff working in government benefit agencies.

I can confirm that all of our offices carry out regular risk assessments that take account of all known risks that arise out of our work. These include customer aggression, general office hazards and use of display screen equipment.

All assessments are reviewed regularly through our normal safety inspection procedures.

I hope that this is helpful.

Education Funding (Warwickshire)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment pursuant to her answer of 2 February, Official Report, columns 982–83, (1) what proportion of the figure of £52,239,000 is apportioned to schools in Warwickshire; [14265]

(2) how much is spent by Warwickshire local education authority in administration; and if this is additional to the figure of £52,239,000. [14266]

Mr. Robin Squire: The figure of £52,239,000 quoted in my answer of 2 February, Official Report, columns 982–83, is taken from the authority's 1995–96 local management of schools budget statement and, as such, relates wholly to schools covered by the authority's LMS scheme. Within that total the budget head "management and administration" accounts for £2,924,000.

Figures for expenditure on administration outside the general schools budget for 1995–96 are not yet available.

Jobcentres

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make it her policy that jobcentres should identify to hon. Members companies using the jobcentre services. [14090]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Denis McShane, dated 12 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question asking if she will make it her policy that Jobcentres should disclose to honourable Members the companies using the Jobcentre services.

The Employment Service treats information provided by companies using our services as confidential and will only use such information for the purpose it was provided. In the case of vacancies, the information is used in discussion with interested applicants. The Employment Service will not disclose information from companies for other purposes without informing them of the nature of any request and obtaining their permission.

I hope this is helpful.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the estimated cost (a) to each local education authority in England and (b) nationally of a 3.8 per cent. increase in teachers' pay in 1996–97. [14480]

Mr. Robin Squire: The total estimated cost in England of a teachers' pay increase in 1996–97 of 3.8 per cent. is around £395 million. The following table illustrates the cost of such an award by updating the 1993–94 expenditure recorded by local education authorities in England for teaching staff salaries in nursery, primary, secondary and special schools by the teachers' pay awards of 2.9 per cent. in 1994–95 and 2.7 per cent. in 1995–96 and an increase of 3.8 per cent. in 1996–97. The 1993–94 expenditure figures are the latest available for local education authority maintained schools in England. The figures in the table take no account of changes in teacher numbers or other factors that affect the teachers' pay bill.

Teachers' Pensions

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what was the total amount paid in pension contributions (a) by employers of teachers in the public sector and (b) by teachers; [14810]

(2) if she will estimate the cost of the pensions of teachers in the public sector for the current year. [14790]

Mr. Robin Squire: The total amounts paid in pension contributions to the teachers' superannuation scheme during 1994–95 were £971,009,000 by teachers' employers and £687,743,000 by teachers. The cost of pensions for teachers in the teachers' superannuation scheme, as measured by the most recent approved estimate for gross expenditure for 1995–96 on the teachers' superannuation vote is £2,952,145,000.

Access to Work

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations she has had on the decision to limit the access to work scheme announced in her answer on 14 December, Official Report, column 738; and if she will make a statement. [14137]

Mr. Paice: Since the announcement about access to work, made on 14 December by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, we have received requests for further clarification of the announcement; expressions of concern about the immediate measures taken and about the level of planned expenditure for 1996–97 and requests for information about the review of the programme and its future operation.

Nursery Inspectors

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has for nursery inspectors to be required to undergo police checks. [14771]

Mr. Robin Squire: Subject to parliamentary approval, it will be for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools to recruit, train and register funded nursery education inspectors. This Department will agree with the chief inspector general criteria relating to suitability.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what instructions jobcentre staff receive about reporting employers to the Equal Opportunities Commission when there has been no complaint of sex discrimination. [14501]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Barry Field, dated 12 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about what instructions Jobcentre staff receive about reporting employers to the Equal Opportunities Commission (EOC) when there has been no complaint of sex discrimination.

It may be helpful if I begin by explaining that both employers and the Employment Service (ES) are required to operate within the provisions of the Sex Discrimination Acts 1975 and 1986. Whilst doing all we can to help employers fill their vacancies, the ES is required to challenge any indication that an employer may be seeking to recruit unlawfully. In the first instance, my people would attempt to resolve the matter by explaining what the law requires and asking the employer to reconsider their recruitment practices. Where instances of this sort cannot be resolved by the ES in that way, details are referred to the EOC for their consideration.

I should also stress that my people at Jobcentres run the risk of being a party to discrimination if they display a vacancy for an employer who has indicated they intend unlawfully to discriminate against a job applicant. This position is not affected by the absence of a complaint by a jobseeker.

I hope this helps to clarify the position.

DEFENCE

Joint Service Command and Staff College

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what (a) was his original estimate and (b) is his current estimate of the total cost of locating the new joint service command and staff college at Camberley; [14421]

(2) when his Department concluded that the works programme for the new joint service command and staff college would be delayed; and what reasons were given; [14422]

(3) what studies his Department has commissioned to investigate the feasibility and cost-effectiveness of locating the new joint service command and staff college at Camberley; from whom; and at what cost; [14423]

(4) if he has commissioned studies investigating the feasibility and cost-effectiveness of locating the new joint service command and staff college elsewhere than Camberley; from whom; and at what cost; [14424]

(5) what is his estimate of the financial involvement expected from the private sector in the provision of accommodation and services for the new joint service command and staff college; [14425]

(6) what sites in (i) Scotland, (ii) England and (iii) Wales he has examined as possible locations for the joint service command and staff college; [14426]

(7) how many proposals he has received for alternative locations for the joint service command and staff college; [14427]

(8) what is his estimate of the financial cost of the delay to the works programme for the new joint service command and staff college. [14428]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 9 February 1996]: My Department has examined in detail the Royal Naval college Greenwich, the Army staff college at Camberley and RAF Bracknell as potential locations for the joint service command and staff college.

The estimated cost of establishing a JSCSC at Camberley, which I placed in the Library of the House on 31 March 1995 following the consultation period, was £208 million over 25 years at net present value. Our current estimate of the costs, on a comparable basis, is some £239 million.

The increase in estimated cost is principally the result of an increase in student numbers—from 312 to 367 on the main course—IT and academic support. These changes would be applicable to the JSCSC irrespective of its location, so the conclusion that Camberley is the most cost-effective and appropriate of the sites examined remains robust.

By bringing to the project private sector skills and disciplines, we expect to make significant savings over the current estimate. No proposals exploring the feasibility of alternative locations for the JSCSC have yet been received, nor will we be able to estimate the financial involvement from the private sector until we have received expressions of interest, for which we will advertise shortly.

In September 1995, we received the initial report from the works project manager and subsequently concluded that the works programme for the JSCSC buildings could not realistically be completed by September 1997.

We have since commissioned work to examine how staff training would best be delivered until the main works programme is complete. We have examined Queen Elizabeth Park barracks at Guildford and the royal military academy Sandhurst as possible options for an interim site for the JSCSC as well as split site options, but work to date indicates that RAF Bracknell is likely to be the most appropriate and cost-effective temporary site.

There will be some additional costs in establishing the JSCSC at an interim site and I will publish these once the formal appraisal of the options is complete. It will, however, enable us to avoid delay in introducing this key change to officer training, and, on current evidence, is also likely to be significantly cheaper than running on the existing staff colleges.

Details of the studies into the JSCSC are as follows:

£ thousand

Subject	Consultant	Cost
JSCSC options study locations for JSCSC	Building design partnership	43
Further investigations of Camberley site	Building design partnership	10
Detailed work to develop JSCSC proposals at Camberley	White Young (works project manager)	328

Royal Flights

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a breakdown of the sum spent by his Department on royal flights in civil aircraft in 1994–95. [14894]

Mr. Soames: The Ministry of Defence arranges commercial air travel for certain members of the royal family where such travel is made on official business and where a commercial aircraft would provide a more appropriate form of transport than a military aircraft. The details for 1994–95 are:

Destination	Cost £	Member of the Royal Family
Brasilia	[1]27,545	HRH The Prince of Wales
Zimbabwe	23,245	HRH The Princess of Wales
Geneva	[2]1,445	HRH The Princess of Wales
Los Angeles and Hong Kong	82,410	HRH The Prince of Wales
Japan	[3]24,906	HRH The Prince of Wales
Total	[4]160,000	HRH The Princess of Wales

[1] Relates to a visit made in an earlier financial year.
[2] Amount covers 2 separate visits.
[3] Amount covers the outward leg of the journey only. Payment for the return leg will fall in financial year 1995–96.
[4] Rounded to nearest £ thousand.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which members of the Government used the services of No. 32 (the Royal) Squadron in 1994–95 and the Queen's Flight in 1993–94. [14812]

Mr. Soames: The following members of the Government used the services of the Queen's Flight in financial years 1993–94 and 1994–95:

1993–94

Prime Minister;

Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs;

Secretary of State for Defence;

Secretary of State for Northern Ireland;

Minister of State for Defence Procurement;

Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence.

1994–95

Prime Minister;

Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs;

Secretary of State for Defence;

Secretary of state for Northern Ireland;

Minister of State for the Armed Forces.

No. 32 (the Royal) Squadron was not formed until 1 April 1995.

Munitions Exports (Form F680)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the nature and number of missiles and munitions involved and their destination country, together with the country named as an end user on each occasion Ministers or officials in his Department signed form F680 since 1985 covering the export of munitions or missiles having either a nuclear conversion capability or a nuclear engineered version. [14856]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have nothing to add to the replies that I gave to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 7 February, Official Report, columns 247-48.

Unexploded Bombs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the procedures to be followed by construction companies on (a) private sector building contracts and (b) Government contracts, when they discover unexploded bombs and other ordnance material in the course of excavation or other work; and if he will make a statement. [14303]

Mr. Soames: Any building contractor discovering a suspected piece of unexploded ordnance should immediately contact the local police, who, after conducting a risk assessment, will request assistance from the joint services EOD operations centre at Didcot. A service explosive ordnance team will be tasked to deal with the item.

International Criminal Tribunal

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many troops serving with the implementation force are under orders to co-operate with the international criminal tribunal; if this co-operation extends to (a) searching for, (b) reporting, (c) detaining and (d) handing over any persons suspected of committing crimes within the jurisdiction of the tribunal; and if he will make a statement. [14315]

Mr. Soames: NATO and IFOR fully support the efforts of the United Nations tribunal, which is responsible for investigating war crimes in the former Yugoslavia and bringing to justice those individuals indicted by the tribunal. IFOR has clear instructions to pass on to the tribunal any information it acquires about indicted war criminals, to detain any such individuals encountered during operations and to transfer them immediately to the tribunal. It is not part of IFOR's mandate to search for these individuals. The chief prosecutor of the tribunal has said that he is satisfied with the level of support offered by IFOR and has agreed that this should be provided within the limits of its mandate and available resources.

Land Mines

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what countries (a) the Ranger or (b) the Barmine mine systems have been exported. [14556]

Mr. Arbuthnot: It remains Government policy normally not to reveal details of specific exports. However, we have not exported land mines for over a decade.

Asbestos

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to expedite the processing of compensation claims relating to asbestos injuries relating to the work of his Department. [14349]

Mr. Soames: Claims for compensation from MOD civilian employees, both past and present, for asbestos-related illness are dealt with on our behalf by an insurance company. Neither the company nor the Ministry of Defence is aware of any unwarranted delay in settling these claims. However, if the hon. Member has specific cases in mind I should be glad to take them up.

Bosnia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what have been the costs incurred by his Department in chartering merchant vessels to transport British troops and equipment to the IFOR operation in Bosnia. [14602]

Mr. Soames: The cost of chartering merchant vessels for the IFOR operation is £483,599.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by name of vessel and flag of registration the merchant vessels chartered by his Department to transport British troops and equipment to the IFOR operation in Bosnia. [14603]

Mr. Soames: The names and flags of registration of merchant vessels chartered for the IFOR operation are as follows:

Yuriy Maksaryov: Ukrainian

Elein K: Cypriot

Women Officers (Pregnancy)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost to public funds to date of compensating serving women who lost their service careers through pregnancy. [14008]

Mr. Soames: As at 5 February 1996, £5,704,197 has been paid to 342 officers discharged on grounds of pregnancy between 1978 and 1990—an average of £16,678 each.

Trident

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 December, Official Report, column 985, what is (a) the full complement deployment of the two Trident submarines currently operational and (b) the full potential complement for HMS Victorious; for what reason there is a difference between these figures and the number of missiles collected by his Department for deployment on (i) the two submarines and (ii) HMS Victorious. [14292]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Each of our Trident submarines is capable of carrying 16 missiles. To date, we have collected 32 missiles from the US, of which four have been test fired. I am not prepared to give details of missile deployment.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 18 December, Official Report, column 985, if HMS Vigilant and HMS Vengeance will each need to conduct two test firings of Trident missiles before entering operational service. [14290]

Mr. Arbuthnot: It is the norm for each strategic submarine ballistic nuclear to conduct at least one test firing, as part of its demonstration and shakedown operation, before its entry into operational service. The actual number fired will depend on a variety of factors, including the requirement to gather launch data for various modelling purposes.

Aircraft Sales (Indonesia and Nigeria)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his current policy on the sale of (a) aircraft and (b) other armaments to Indonesia and Nigeria. [14345]

Mr. Arbuthnot: It is the Government's policy to support the sale of British defence equipment overseas where this is compatible with our political, strategic and security interests. All licence applications for the export of defence equipment are considered on a case-by-case basis in the light of established criteria, including the international guidelines to which we are committed. In particular, we do not export defence equipment that is likely to be used for internal repression.

In the case of Nigeria, the Prime Minister announced a full UK arms embargo against the Nigerian military on 11 November 1995. On 20 November 1995, the European Union adopted a full scope EU-wide arms embargo against the Nigerian regimes.

Equerries

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 537, if he will list the differences between the stated duties of equerries and those of other staff responsible for visits, engagements and dealing with routine correspondence. [14888]

Mr. Soames: Equerries provide support across the full range of activities undertaken by members of the royal family but they have special responsibilities relating to the many ceremonies and military events in which the Queen, as head of the armed services, and other members of the royal family participate at home and abroad.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Deregulation

Dr. Spink: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consultation he is undertaking with small and medium enterprises regarding deregulation. [13058]

Mr. Freeman: I have regular meetings with various representative bodies of small and medium businesses about deregulation. I have invited all businesses, including members of the Federation of Small Businesses, to write to me with details of those regulations which are unnecessarily hampering their business and have so far received over 400 replies. I am also responsible for implementing the small business litmus test, which requires all Government Departments to consult some typical small businesses to ensure they will not be disproportionately affected by proposed regulations.

Fire Safety Legislation and Enforcement

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will publish his response to the recommendations made by the interdepartmental review of fire safety legislation and enforcement. [14670]

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will announce his response to the interdepartmental review of fire safety legislation and enforcement. [14595]

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will publish the response of the Government to the recommendations contained in the report of the interdepartmental review team into fire safety legislation and enforcement. [14846]

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to respond to the recommendations of the interdepartmental review of fire safety legislation and enforcement in the United Kingdom. [14796]

Mr. Willets: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 8 February, 1996, Official Report, column 283.

Departmental Publications

Dr. Wright: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which of his Department's administrative manuals and internal guidance are now made public; and which remain private. [14020]

Mr. Willetts: The Cabinet Office and Office of Public Service make available internal guidance and administrative manuals in line with the Government's code of practice on access to Government information. A significant number of such documents have been published, including:

Code of Practice on Access to Government information.

Code of Practice on Access to Government Information: Guidance on Interpretation.

Civil Service Code.

Civil Service Management Code.

Departmental Report.

NDPBs: A Guide to Departments.

The Ombudsman in Your Files.

The Governments Guide to Market Testing.

Efficiency plans: Guidance for Development and Use.

Efficiency Scrutinies: Guidance for Ministers and Managers, Action Managers and Scrutiny Teams.

CCTA's Total Acquisition Process Guidance.

A Guide on Public Appointments Procedures.

A Review of Guidance on Public Appointments.

Dear Publisher Letter.

Dear Librarian Letter.

Dear Establishment Officer Letter.

Copyright: A brief guide for Government Departments.

HMSO catalogues.

Agencies' annual reports.

Agencies' framework documents.

This is not a complete list, as there is no central record of manuals made public, nor of those where disclosure is not in the public interest.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what is his estimate of the expenditure of his Department and his Department's agencies and non-departmental public bodies on all forms of overseas travel, overseas accommodation and other associated expenses for (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [11507]

Mr. Willetts [pursuant to his reply, 7 February 1996, c. 203-04]: I regret that the figure quoted on total expenditure by the Cabinet Office, including the Prime Minister's office and the Office of Public Service, and its executive agencies, excluding HMSO and the Buying Agency, on overseas travel, overseas accommodation and other associated expenses of £1,178,000 in 1993–94 was incorrect. The correct figure should have been £1,850,000.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

"Tackling Drugs Together"

39. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Lord President of the Council what recent consultations he has had with ministerial colleagues about the implementation of "Tackling Drugs Together"; and if he will make a statement. [13065]

Mr. Newton: I have received regular progress reports on the implementation of "Tackling Drugs Together" from ministerial colleagues. I am pleased to say that all Departments are on track with their major White Paper commitments. For example, the Department of Health has launched a £5 million per annum publicity strategy, run by the Health Education Authority; the Department for Education and Employment has disseminated guidance on drugs issues to all schools; and all criminal justice agencies have completed their operational reviews and are on track to produce their drug strategies in line with the White Paper. In addition, 105 drug action teams have been set up across England to tackle the drugs problem at local level, and have submitted their first plans.

SCOTLAND

Official Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent on official hospitality by agencies associated with his Department in 1993–94, 1994–95 and projected for 1995–96. [9091]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is set out in the table.

Agency	1993–94 £	1994–95 £	Projected budget 1995–96 £
Scottish Office Pensions Agency	2,232	628	1,000
Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency	700	1,015	1,015
Scottish Agricultural Science Agency	6,341	4,973	3,889
Student Awards Agency for Scotland	—	332	215
Historic Scotland	4,687	8,538	4,500
Scottish Courts Service	—	—	2,100
Scottish Prison Service	4,000	6,000	8,000
Scottish Record Office	185	117	1,166
Registers of Scotland	6,000	7,000	7,250
Total	24,145	28,603	29,135

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 817, if the figures for hospitality spending in 1994–95 and 1995–96 included expenditure by his Department's agencies. [9092]

Mr. Forsyth: No. Moreover, it has come to my attention that the information provided in my answer of 14 December was in other respects incomplete. This arose from a misunderstanding of the implications of a change made in the financial year 1990–91 to the arrangements for recording hospitality expenditure by my Department.

The corrected information is as follows:

1994–95: £79,510

1995–96: £89,868 (Projected outturn)[1]

Note:

[1] In addition, in 1995–96, the Scottish Office spent £34,680 on hospitality as part of the Government's contribution to the VE-day and VJ-day commemorations.

I regret that, for the same reason, information previously provided to hon. Members on hospitality expenditure for the years 1991–92 to 1993–94 was similarly incomplete. The correct information for these years is as follows:

1991–92: £83,836

1992–93: £125,118

1993–94: £76,088

Farm Holdings

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of farm holdings in Scotland, the number of (a) self-employed and (b) employed people working in Scottish agriculture, and the number of people employed in agricultural contract work (i) in 1978 and (ii) in the most recent year for which figures are available. [11967]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The information required is shown in the table. The data on farm holdings and the farm work force are from the June agricultural census of main holdings and the information on agricultural contractors' employees is drawn from the March 1980—the nearest date to 1978—machinery census and the April 1994 survey of agricultural contractors.

	1978	1995
Number of holdings	31,090	32,800
Occupiers	23,600	21,700
Spouses	8,000	12,000
Employees	40,600	25,600

Figures rounded to nearest 100.

	1980	1994
Contractors' employees	960	1,090

Figures rounded to nearest 10.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of expenditure on all forms of hospitality and entertainment by (a) his Department, (b) his Department's agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, for (i) 1979–80, (ii) 1989–90, (iii) 1991–92, (iv) 1993–94, (v) 1994–95, (vi) 1995–96 and (vii) 1996–97. [11408]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1996]: Following is the information:

Year	The Scottish Office £	Scottish Office Agencies £
1979–80	15,283	Not applicable
1989–90	60,173	Not applicable
1919–92	83,836	5,700
1993–94	76,088	24,145
1994–95	79,510	28,603
1995–96 (estimate)	[1]89,868	29,135
1996–97 (estimate)	86,400	26,825

[1] In addition, in 1995–96, the Scottish Office spent £34,680 on hospitality as part of the Government's contribution to the VE-day and VJ-day commemorations.

Information on hospitality spending by non-departmental public bodies is not held centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

Prison Service

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what proportion of the prison population in Scotland is currently held in (a) secure prisons and (b) open prisons and related units; [14004]

(2) how many prisoners are currently held in open prisons and related units in Scotland. [14006]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the questions relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Archy Kirkwood, dated 12 February 1996:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your two Questions relating to the current prison population in Scotland.

The information as at Friday 2 February 1996 is given in the table.

	Number of prisoners	Percentage[1]

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the relative cost and latest estimate of keeping a prisoner in (a) secure prisons establishments and (b) open prisons and related units. [14005]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Archy Kirkwood, dated 12 February 1996:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your question about the relative cost and latest estimate of keeping a prisoner in (a) secure prison establishments and (b) open prisons and related units.

The average cost per prisoner place at HMP Prisons in Scotland in 1994–95 was £23,324 for secure prisons and £18,046 for open prisons and is estimated to be £23,217 and £18,150 respectively in 1995–96. This has been calculated as total net expenditure (excluding capital, Headquarters and other central costs) divided by the average number of places available.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what resources have been made available to the Scottish Prison Service in each of the last two financial years; what resources are proposed for the next financial year to support the drug reduction and rehabilitation programme; and if he will make a statement. [14581]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. James Wallace, dated 12 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked the Chief Executive, Mr Frizzell, to reply to your Question about resources made available to the Scottish Prison Service in each of the last two financial years and resources for drug reduction and rehabilitation programmes in 1996–97. I am replying to his absence from the office.

The total net resources made available to the Scottish Prison Service was £162.5 million in 1994–95 (of which £15.4 million was capital) and £166.0 million in 1995–96 (of which £16.8 million was capital). The total net resources for 1996–97 is £173.9 million (of which £16.8 million is capital). Resources for 1996–97 will be allocated to governors of establishments on the basis of their strategic plans for all purposes: provision for drug reduction and rehabilitation programmes is not separately identified but is taken into account as appropriate in the budgets allocated for staffing, medical expenses etc.

Health Boards (Administrative Costs)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the administrative costs of health boards expressed as a percentage of the total spend for each of the last five financial years for which figures are available. [14133]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is shown in the table. The figures have been calculated using audited annual accounts of health boards. From 1992–93 onwards, the percentage decreases relative to total spend are due to an increasing proportion of NHS administration costs being attributable to NHS trusts. The figures are not therefore directly comparable.

1990–91: 7.6 per cent.

1991–92: 7.4 per cent.

1992–93: 8.0 per cent.

1993–94: 6.0 per cent.

1994–95: 3.4 per cent.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what factors determine the dates on which he (a) closes applications for financial assistance under the financial instrument for fisheries guidance and (b) announces the award of grant; and when he expects to give his decision in respect of applications for financial assistance under the financial instrument for fisheries guidance submitted for consideration in the current round. [14134]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The financial instrument for fisheries guidance—FIFG—schemes opened on 1 July 1994 and applications may be submitted at any time. However, to allow sufficient time to appraise, consult and select the best applications, only applications submitted earlier than three months prior to the planned announcement of awards are considered in that tranche. The timing of each tranche is determined by the number of applications and the total amount of grant sought, the quality of applications, and the availability of funds at the appropriate time to service successful projects.

The present intention is that the next round of FIFG awards will be announced in June 1996.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been (a) the grant value and (b) the number of applications for financial assistance under the financial instrument for fisheries guidance currently lodged with his Department which (i) have been received since the present round opened and (ii) have been carried over from an earlier round. [14136]

Mr. Robertson: There have been 42 applications seeking grant totalling £5,031,319 since the last tranche closed. In addition, there are 50 applicants carried over from previous rounds seeking grant of £7,765,172.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his oral answer of 5 February 1996, Official Report, Scottish Grand Committee, column 6, if he will relax his policy of non-disclosure in respect of the location and current possession of the timing device; and if he will make a statement. [14544]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has made it quite clear that he cannot discuss evidence in the case.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he has given to general practitioner fundholders via their health boards concerning the placing of contracts for their long waiting list patients with individual private consultants and the British United Provident Association; if he will place a copy of such guidance in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [14883]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No specific guidance on this matter has been issued to general practitioner fundholders.

Glasgow Zoo

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) to which organisations CITES-listed animals from Glasgow zoo have been transferred; [14777]

(2) if he will set up an inquiry into the transfer of ocelots, Geoffroy's cats and margay cats from Glasgow zoo to other organisations. [14776]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally and my right hon. Friend has no reason to set up an inquiry. The Department of the Environment has issued Glasgow zoo with sales exemptions in relation to several ocelots, geffroy cats and margay cats, all of which are CITES listed animals. These exemptions allow Glasgow zoo to sell the animals within the UK. There is no requirement for the zoo to specify the destination of the animals.

HEALTH

NHS Pension Scheme

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the appeals procedure for members of the NHS pension scheme who have been refused pension benefits after submitting positive medical evidence that they can no longer follow their regular employment. [13568]

Mr. Malone: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the NHS Pensions Agency under its chief executive, Mr. A. F. Cowan. I have asked him to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mr. William O'Brien, dated 12 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Health has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question as it falls within my area of responsibility.

There are no formal rights of appeal, but members of the NHS Pension Scheme have a number of avenues for challenging a decision affecting their pension rights. The NHS Pensions Agency operates it own internal procedures, involving reviews through senior officers not involved in the original decision. In ill-health retirement cases, where the Agency's medical advisors are unable to recommend acceptance of an application, they will at any time reconsider against further medical evidence.

If in any case a member remains dissatisfied with the Agency's decision they can request a formal determination by the Secretary of State, under Regulation U2 of the NHS Pension Scheme Regulations 1995 [SI 1995 No. 300]. If the dispute relates to a divergence of medical opinion it would be usual to seek an independent specialist's report before making a determination. Determinations are handled outside the Agency, by the NHS Executive.

If the member remains discontent they have the right to raise their complaint with the Occupational Pensions Advisory Board and the Pensions Ombudsman. The findings of the Ombudsman are binding upon the Scheme and may only be overturned by a High Court ruling.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the trustees of the NHS pension scheme. [13570]

Mr. Malone: The national health service pension scheme is a notionally funded statutory scheme set up under the provisions of sections 10 and 12 of the Superannuation Act 1972 and therefore does not have trustees.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the qualified medical advisors who advise on the payment of NHS pension benefits to NHS employees who are unable to continue their work because of illness. [13565]

Mr. Malone: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the NHS Pensions Agency under its chief executive, Mr. A. F. Cowan. I have asked him to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mr. William O'Brien, dated 12 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Health has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question as it falls within my area of responsibility.

The NHS Pensions Agency receives independent medical advice under an agreement from BA Medical Services, part of the Department of Social Security. BAMS employ only registered full-time and sessional doctors to co-ordinate and provide advice to the NHS Pensions Agency. In doing so they may seek views of professional colleagues both inside and externally in order to reach consensus medical opinion on advice appropriate to each case.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many members of the NHS pension scheme who have had their application for retirement pension payment on ill health grounds turned down by his Department or the NHS executive have been the subject of an independent specialist medical report; and if he will make a statement. [13569]

Mr. Malone: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the NHS Pensions Agency under its chief executive, Mr. A. F. Cowan. I have asked him to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mr. William O'Brien, dated 12 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Health has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question as it falls within my area of responsibility.

I am afraid I cannot provide information in the form requested except at disproportionate cost, because it would require a review of the files of the individuals concerned.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the procedure for applicants who apply for pension rights under the NHS pension scheme for a medical examination by the medical advisers appointed by his Department. [13567]

Mr. Malone: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the NHS Pensions Agency under its chief executive, Mr. A. F. Cowan. I have asked him to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mr. William O'Brien, dated 12 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Health has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question as it falls within my area of responsibility.

In order to approve the award of an ill-health pension the NHS Pensions Agency must be satisfied that the illness will permanently prevent the member continuing in their employment. Applications must, therefore be supported by medical evidence. The type of evidence is not currently prescribed, but in all cases the Agency will seek advice upon it from its independent medical advisers, the Benefits Agency Medical Service (BAMS). Where it is appropriate, BAMS may seek a specialists report to augment the initial evidence. If BAMS cannot advise that the illness will permanently prevent the member continuing in their employment the Agency will usually reject the application, but procedures currently allow for the submission of further medical evidence at any time. This always leads reconsideration of the case by BAMS. I should add that once an ill-health pension is awarded, the Agency has no powers to withdraw it.

Northern RHA Headquarters

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent on repairs, maintenance and improvement of the former Northern regional health authority headquarters at Benfield road, Newcastle, since January 1986; who owns the building; when it will be vacated; and what receipts from the sale of the lease or freehold of this building will be released. [13731]

Mr. Malone: Capital expenditure on repairs, maintenance and improvement of the former Northern regional health authority headquarters at Benfield road, Newcastle since 1986 totals £896,500, mostly before 1992. The building is owned by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Following the move of the staff from Benfield road to Durham in Spring 1996, the building will be occupied by Newcastle and North Tyneside district health authority, and North Tyneside family health services authority—Newcastle and North Tyneside health authority from 1 April 1996—who had previously occupied four separate buildings in Newcastle and north Tyneside. As the property will remain in use for health service accommodation, there will be no receipts for the sale of the freehold.

Waiting List Helplines

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding was given to waiting list helplines in each of the last five years. [14055]

Mr. Horam: In 1992–93, the College of Health received £25,600 in support of the development of a national waiting list clearing house which encompassed a telephone helpline. A further £109,750 was allocated to the project in 1993–94.

Waiting times information is now available to the public on a freephone telephone link—0800 66 55 44—through the health information services which were established in 1993. For details of the funding for health information services, which is the responsibility of regional health authorities, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South (Mr. Donohoe) on 25 January, Official Report, column 377.

Patient Referrals

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what differences apply in relation to the options available to (a) fundholders and (b) non-fundholders when referring patients for treatment. [14063]

Mr. Malone: The difference between fundholding and non-fundholding general practitioners is the freedom fundholders have to manage resources and directly to purchase the care they judge best on their patients' behalf.

Multiple Sclerosis

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will be making a statement on the content of the executive letter to the national health service in November concerning new drugs for multiple sclerosis. [14093]

(2) if he will set out the guidelines which has been issued to authorities regarding the prescription of interferon-beta-1b for the treatment of multiple sclerosis. [14091]

Mr. Malone: Executive letter EL(95)97 about the introduction of beta-interferon drugs for multiple sclerosis was issued on 15 November 1995. It suggested that beta-interferon should be prescribed by hospital neurologists where clinically appropriate. The guidance was accompanied by clinical advice from the Standing Medical Advisory Committee. Copies of both documents are available in the Library.

Hospices

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is his policy on the provision of health authority funds to hospices; and if he will make a statement; [14109]

(2) what regulations or agreements cover the provision of NHS funds to assist in the running costs of hospices. [14108]

Mr. Horam: As with other services, health authorities have a duty to ensure that specialist palliative care services, including hospice care, are in line with the assessed health needs of their populations. Since 1994–95, funding for specialist palliative care has been built into health authorities' general funding allocations. Those providing the care, including hospices, receive funding from health authorities according to their contracts. The level and form of financial support is a matter for local negotiation.

Accident and Emergency Services (Private Hospitals)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of private hospitals provide full accident and emergency services. [14107]

Mr. Horam: This information is not collected.

Drugs (Side-effects)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent guidance he has issued in respect of side-effect warnings for (a) doctor-prescribed drugs and (b) drugs bought across the counter. [14057]

Mr. Malone: No guidelines have been issued. However all medicines have data sheets which give details of side-effect. New medicines now have patient information leaflets which also give this information, and all other medicines will have such a leaflet by 1998. Information on side-effects of medicines is also available in the "British National Formulary", which is provided free to all doctors by the Department of Health.

In addition, all health professionals are sent the bulletin from the Committee on Safety of Medicines, "Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance", four times a year and the bulletin "Update" from the Chief Medical Officer, which contain information on the safe use of medicines whether they are prescribed by a doctor or brought over-the-counter. Both the Committee on Safety of Medicines and the Chief Medical Officer may also send out letters of advice to health professionals on specific issues as they arise.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what duty a doctor has in relation to informing patients about the side-effects of drugs. [14058]

Mr. Malone: Doctors have an ethical responsibility to inform patients about the treatment proposed, including the effects of prescribed medicines.

Renal Services

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will place a copy of the review of renal services commissioned by his Department in the Library; [14562]

(2) what assessment he has made of the review of renal services; and if he will make a statement. [14563]

Mr. Horam: We are still considering the review of renal services, including the question of publication, and intend to issue purchasing guidelines in time for the next contracting round.

Steroid Treatment (Deaths)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have died as a result of steroid treatment in each of the last five years. [14059]

Mr. Horam: Deaths in England and Wales due to adrenal cortical steroids—ICD[1] E932.0—causing adverse effects in therapeutic use, as an underlying or secondary cause of death[2]:

	Underlying cause	Secondary cause	Total
1988	0	9	9
1989	0	9	9
1990	1	9	10
1991	1	7	8
1992	0	5	5

[1] International Classification of diseases, 9th Revision.
[2] Does not include adverse effects from androgens and anabolic congeners (ICD E932.1) or ovarian hormones or synthetic substitutes (ICD E932.2).

Drugs Prescription

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if a drug which has been given market authorisation to be prescribed can be prevented from being administered to patients if the national health service executive so wishes; [14094]

(2) in what circumstances the national health service executive can restrict the prescription of a drug which has received market authorisation. [14092]

Mr. Malone: Doctors have the clinical freedom to prescribe the drugs their patients need, whether or not the product has a marketing authorisation or product licence. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has powers under the National Health Service Act 1977 to list in schedules 10 and 11 of the NHS (General Medical Services) Regulations 1992 drugs or other substances which are not to be prescribed, or which are to be prescribed only in certain circumstances, by general practitioners under the NHS. Drugs or other substances can be included in these schedules on the advice of the Advisory Committee for NHS Drugs and the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances.

Doctor Recruitment

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the amount of money paid by NHS trusts to agencies for the purpose of recruiting doctors in each year since 1985. [14106]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally. It is the responsibility of trusts at local level to decide whether or not they wish to use an employment agency for the purpose of recruiting doctors.

Accident and Emergency Units (Doctors)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the NHS trusts which in the past 12 months used recruitment agencies to hire doctors on short-term contracts to work in accident and emergency units. [14104]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally. It is the responsibility of trusts at local level to decide whether or not they wish to use an employment agency.

Social Services Information

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has given local authorities advice on the purchase of social service information database systems. [14098]

Mr. Bowis: My Department has issued in various contexts advice on the importance of soundly based local information systems, and has provided nearly £50 million of supplementary credit approvals in cash terms over the period 1991–92 to 1995–96 for the purchase of computers and systems as part of the implementation of "Caring of People". The Department has also from time to time supported projects to develop information systems of use to social services departments, but in all cases decision to purchase a system is one for individual authorities to take.

Empty Buildings

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many empty buildings his Department currently owns; what is the cost of insuring and securing these buildings; how many were designed as residential properties; and what was the total amount spent by his Department on empty property taxes in each of the last five years. [14572]

Mr. Horam: The buildings occupied by the Department of Health are part of the Government common user estate. Vacant buildings on the common user estate are the responsibility of Property Holdings. Over the last five years, the Department of Health has not incurred any costs in respect of empty taxes on the common user estate.

Paediatric Consultant Posts

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS paediatric consultant posts are (a) currently unfilled or (b) filled by a locum; and how many of the vacant posts have been unfilled for (i) six months, (ii) 12 months, (iii) 18 months and (iv) 24 months. [14525]

Mr. Malone: Data are not available in the form requested. The available information is shown in the table.

Hospital staff in England—as at 30 September 1994 Paediatrics—vacant consultant posts

Consultants	All vacant posts		Locum occupied		Unoccupied
	Number	WTE	Number	WTE	Number	WTE
Paediatrics	21	20.6	5	5.0	16	15.6
Paediatric neurology	1	1.0	1	1.0	—	—
Total	22	21.6	6	6.0	16	15.6

WTE = whole time equivalents.

EU Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he ensures that the negotiating brief for his officials discussing EU legislation takes fully into account the need to minimise the burdens on United Kingdom business. [13715]

Mr. Horam: Guidance on how officials are to apply deregulatory principles when negotiating EC regulations is contained in the booklet "Getting a Good Deal in Europe". This guidance has been supplemented by the recent publication of guidance on the preparation of compliance cost assessments, which stresses that the likely burdens on business highlighted by United Kingdom compliance cost assessment of EC proposals should be integral to the UK's negotiating strategy. Copies of both pieces of guidance are in the Library.

Unsafe Medicines

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statutory responsibility applies to the licensing authority in respect of the protection of public health from unsafe medicines. [14296]

Mr. Malone: Functions of the competent authorities of member states in respect of the licensing of medicinal products for human use are laid down in directive 65/65/EEC and subsequent EC legislation. For the United Kingdom, these functions fall to the licensing authority and these obligations and licensing requirements are set out in SI 1994/3144, the Medicines Acts and other relevant subordinate legislation. The requirements are intended to ensure that unsafe medicines are not marketed, and to safeguard public health.

Refugee and Asylum Seekers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the services of (a) NHS general practitioners and (b) health visitors are available to refugee and asylum seekers; and if he will make a statement. [14492]

Mr. Malone: Refugees and asylum seekers have access to any NHS services which are immediately required.

Oral Contraceptives

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the risks posed by (a) second and (b) third generation oral contraceptives. [14293]

Mr. Malone: The safety of second and third generation combined oral contraceptives has been assessed according to normal procedures over a period of many years since they were first marketed. In October 1995, the Committee on Safety of Medicines, an independent expert advisory committee which advises the licensing authority, reviewed the safety of these oral contraceptives after new evidence about the cardiovascular risks associated with them became available. I refer the hon. Member to the statement my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made in the House on 23 October 1995, Official Report, columns 701–02.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the licensing authority will vary the product licences of combined oral contraceptives containing desogestrel and gestodene. [14295]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 19 December 1995, Official Report, column 1149.

Paracetamol Deaths

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths attributable to paracetamol were reported via the yellow card system for each year from 1990 to 1995; and what proportion of fatal reports received these deaths represented for each year. [14294]

Mr. Malone: The available information is shown in the table.

Suspected adverse reaction reports to the Committee on Safety of Medicines from 1990–1995 related to the use of paracetamol and all drugs in the United Kingdom

Year received	Reports with a fatal outcome where paracetamol is a suspect drug (percentage of all fatal)	All reports where paracetamol is a suspect drug	Total number of reports to all human medicinal products with a fatal outcome	Total number of reports
1990	3(0.91)	65	328	17,963
1991	2(0.43)	56	467	19,492
1992	1(0.22)	60	455	20,184
1993	3(0.64)	60	471	18,082
1994	1(0.25)	43	408	17,566
1995	3(0.63)	49	476	17,749

The table provides information on the numbers of reports of suspected adverse drug reactions received by the Committee on Safety of Medicines from health professionals over the period1990–1995. This includes the number of reports associated with paracetamol and with all drugs and the number associated with a fatal outcome. A report does not necessarily mean that the reaction was caused by the drug. Many factors influence reporting rate, comparisons across drugs may therefore be misleading.

Bradford Health Commission

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to announce the name of the chairman of the Bradford health commission. [14468]

Mr. Horam: Mrs. Zahida Manzoor was named as chairman of the proposed Bradford health authority in a press release issued by the Northern and Yorkshire regional office of the NHS executive on 21 December 1995.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 810, when information on GP fundholding savings will be available. [14890]

Mr. Malone: Information about fundholder efficiency savings for 1994–95 will not be available until final audits are completed.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has given to general practitioner fundholders via their family health service authorities concerning the placing of contracts for their long waiting list patients with individual private consultants and

BUPA; and if he will place a copy of such guidance notes in the Library. [14884]

Mr. Malone: The 1994 review of contracting guidance, which was issued to general practitioner fundholders, as well as district health authorities, encourages them to secure the best quality and value for money services possible from either NHS or independent sector providers. A copy of the guidance, EL(93)103, is in the Library.

Psychiatric Beds

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the average cost of a psychiatric bed in each year since 1980. [14876]

Mr. Bowis: The information is shown in the table.

Average cost of a psychiatric bed in the Hospital and Community Health Services in each year since 1980.

Year	Unit cost £
1980–81	16,600
1981–82	17,000
1982–83	17,000
1983–84	17,500
1984–85	18,300
1985–86	18,800
1986–87	20,500
1987–88	24,000
1988–89	26,300
1989–90	27,500
1990–91	28,700
1991–92	36,200
1992–93	38,500
1993–94	39,500

1. All figures are rounded to the nearest £100 and are expressed in real terms at 1993–94 prices using the gross domestic product deflators issued by Treasury on 20 November 1995.

2. Unit costs are calculated by dividing expenditure by available beds in the mental health sector of Hospital and Community Services.

3. Figures for 1991–92 onwards cannot be compared with those for earlier years due to changes in accounting practices following the NHS reforms.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what he estimates the level of savings to be from psychiatric bed closures since 1986. [14877]

Mr. Bowis: The reprovision programme for mental health has been geared to improved care and treatment of mentally ill patients. Closure or adaptations of old-style long-stay hospitals have resulted in resources being available for the provision of a spectrum of care, including new long-stay beds, hospitals, hostel and supported accommodation and services to support patients in home and homely settings. It is not possible to estimate an exact figure for this.

Clinical Negligence Scheme

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those trusts which (a) are and (b) are not members of the clinical negligence scheme in each region. [14774]

Mr. Malone: The latest information will be placed in the Library.

Psychiatric Care

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people his Department estimates need access to medium-secure psychiatric care; and how many beds are available in each region. [14878]

Mr. Bowis: The Glancy committee in 1974 recommended a total of 1,000 medium secure beds. By 1979, there were none provided. We are now on target to reach a total of 1,200 places in medium-secure units by the end of this year. A further 300 secure places are being developed from the mainstream NHS capital programme. In addition, there are about 450 places in other secure units and some 400 NHS-purchased places in the independent sector.

Assessment of further local needs is the responsibilities of the health authorities concerned.

For the number of beds in each NHS region, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 5 February, Official Report, columns 19–20.

Registered Homes (Police Checks)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that owners, managers and staff of registered homes for the elderly are subject to police checks. [14874]

Mr. Bowis: The Registered Homes Act 1984 requires local and health authorities to ensure that anyone running or intending to run a residential care or nursing home is suitable to do so. Departmental guidance has been issued about procedures for making criminal checks on applicants for registration as owners or managers of homes. Regulations under the Act require anyone running a home to provide adequate and suitable staff, and it is for employers to ensure that procedures are in place for vetting prospective employees.

Special Transitional Grant

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 531, when he will make available the special transitional grant figures. [14892]

Mr. Bowis: The Audit Commission is following up the outstanding audited returns for the 1994–95 special transitional grant. Final figures will not be available until all returns have been received and any queries raised by the auditors resolved with the local authorities concerned.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish indicative budgets for the special transitional grant in 1996–97; and what conditions will be applied to it. [14875]

Mr. Bowis: Indicative allocations of the special transitional grant for 1996–97 were issued to local authorities on 30 November. The conditions to be attached to the special transitional grant for 1996–97 will be announced shortly.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review his policy that, in the event of a doctor being instructed by a local authority to carry out the examination of a child for signs of sexual abuse, the doctor does not owe a duty of care to the child or parents; and if he will make a statement. [14724]

Mr. Bowis: It is a matter of law, not policy, as set out in the judgment in the House of Lords in the case of M(A minor) and Another v. Newham London borough council that the doctor's duties in such cases are to the local authority by whom he is instructed.

Consultants Complaints Procedure

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review his policy that, under the hospital consultants complaints procedure, a complaint to the health service commissioner about a consultant's clinical judgment cannot progress to stage 3 if the consultant in question does not agree to co-operate; and if he will make a statement. [14725]

Mr. Horam: Under the existing legislation, the Health Service Commissioner may not investigate a complaint about action arising solely from the exercise of clinical judgment. The Government have introduced a Bill to extend the commissioner's jurisdiction to cover complaints about clinical judgment, and this is being considered currently by Parliament. The commissioner has wide-ranging powers to require co-operation with his investigations where necessary. There are no plans to change this.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 25 January, Official Report, column 373, what has been the annual expenditure on mental health services in each year since 1988–89 in each region. [14889]

Mr. Bowis: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Bolton Hospitals

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) administrative and (b) medical staff were on the staff of each Bolton hospital in each of the last five years. [10465]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 22 January 1996]: The number of staff in each Bolton hospital is not available centrally.

Bolton Hospitals national health service trust attained trust attained trust status in April 1994. The only year for which administrative and clerical staff figures are available is 1994. Before then, administrative and clerical staff at the district health authority provided some services to directly managed units and so comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

The number of administrative and clerical staff is collected by the Department of Health's non-medical work force census. The census results are published at national level in a statistical bulletin, copies of which are available in the Library. Regional tables for the 1994 census will also be placed in the Library shortly. Results are not normally published below regional level but are available on request for 1994 at health authority, trust or directly managed unit level. Only limited detailed figures are available for earlier years.

Figures for medical staff are collected by the Department of Health's medical and dental work force census. Since some medical staff are reported at regional level rather than by the individual organisations for which they work it is not possible to identify all medical staff in individual organisations. The results of the medical and dental work force census are available at national and regional level in the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Payment Card

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will name the consortia bidding to act as prime contractors for the automated benefit payment scheme; when he will make a final decision on the contract; who will be the first group to receive the card; and when the system will become fully operational. [11752]

Mr. Heald: The final three shortlisted service providers are; Cardlink, UK, IBM and Pathway. Subject to a successful completion of the procurement process, we expect to award a contract by late spring. Our current planning assumption is that the first group to be issued with a benefit payment card will be child benefit customers, although this may be subject to change. It is expected that the first payments by card will be made in the autumn with full roll-out taking up to three years from that date.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the proposed social security smart card will bear a photograph of the claimant and have a memory capacity. [14862]

Mr. Heald: The card technology and security features are a matter for the supplier under the private finance initiative.

Decisions will not be finalised until a successful supplier is chosen. It is not mandatory for the initial version to be a smart card, but there will be provision to migrate to a smart card technology in the future if required.

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what effect the possession of a nursery voucher will have (a) on a claimant's entitlement to income-related benefits and (b) on the child care disregard under family credit and disability working allowance. [13094]

Mr. Roger Evans: Possession of nursery education vouchers will not generally affect entitlement to income-related benefits. In family credit and disability working allowance, parents will continue to be eligible for help with the child care charges for which they pay, subject to the normal qualifying conditions.

Office Thefts

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the number and (b) the value of items of equipment and furniture that have been (i) stolen and (ii) are otherwise unaccounted for from (1) DSS offices and (2) executive agency offices in each region, for each of the last five years; and if he will list by name those items valued at £5,000 or more. [13088]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. The Department of Social Security does not separately maintain centralised records of individual items stolen. Losses due to theft, fraud, arson or sabotage are recorded in a single category. The number of individual losses recorded within this category, and the total value for each of the last five years is in the table:

Financial year	Number of individual cases	Total value £
1990–91	364	89,799
1991–92	411	72,315
1992–93	94	84,500
1993–94	192	222,382
1994–95	360	851,020

The estimated total value of the Department's tangible fixed assets, excluding land and buildings, is approximately £330 million for 1994–95.

Benefits Agency Medical Service

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the savings to his Department resulting from the contracting out of the Benefits Agency medical service. [14769]

Mr. Burt: It is not possible at this stage to estimate the precise level of savings. However, experience of similar exercises within the Department has identified that both savings and a better service for customers are achieved by competitively tendering the service.

Income Support

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of income support payable with a disability premium also receive housing benefit; and what is the average amount payable. [14775]

Mr. Roger Evans: A total of 460,000 recipients of income support payable with a disability premium were also receiving housing benefit at an average weekly rate of £39.02 in May 1994, the latest date for which figures are available.

Source:
Housing benefit management information system annual 1 per cent. sample inquiry, taken May 1994.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of income support receive housing benefit; and what is the average amount payable. [14772]

Mr. Evans: In August 1995, the latest date for which information is available, 3.1 million income support recipients were receiving housing benefit, at an average weekly rate of £45.14.

Family Credit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently claiming family credit; and what are (a) the total administration costs and (b) the average weekly administration cost per beneficiary. [14773]

Mr. Roger Evans: As at 30 April 1995, 606,000 families were receiving family credit. The estimated total administration costs for 1993–94, the latest date for which information is available, was £53 million, an estimated weekly average cost of £1.90 per beneficiary.

Note:
Administration costs include an apportionment of DSS general and central administrative costs not related to specific benefits.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time it currently takes to process (a) a new claim for family credit and (b) a claim renewal. [13177]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 9 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what is the average time it currently takes to process (a) a new claim for Family Credit (FC) and (b) a claim renewal.

Statistics are produced on a monthly basis and the latest details available are for December 1995. These show the average clearance times to be as follows:-

New Claims: 11.87 working days

Renewal Claims: 10.90 working days

The Secretary of State for Social Security has set a target for the clearance of claims to FC. This is that 60% of claims be processed within 13 working days and that 95% be processed within 42 working days. As at 31 December 1995, the FC unit had cleared 70.4% within 13 working days and 98.3% within 42 working days.

The FC Unit also operates a Fast Track system for processing claims from the newly employed through the Employment Service. Information required for the assessment is provided by the customer's Client Adviser which enables the unit to assess the claim more quickly. Figures for the month ending 31 December 1995 show that 97.2% of customers using the Fast Track system had their claim decided in 5 working days.

I hope you find this reply useful.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants there are of invalidity benefit; what is the annual cost; and what were the equivalent figures for (a) 1985 and (b) 1975. [14880]

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table.

Year	1975–76	1985–86	1995–96
Number of claimants	[1]450,000	[1]849,000	[3]1,700,000

Child Benefit

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to reform child benefit. [14860]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: Two reforms of child benefit are planned:

(i) Draft regulations are currently the subject of statutory consultation with the Social Security Advisory Committee and the local authorities. These restructure child and one-parent benefit to provide a more flexible mechanism for considering the relative level of support provided to lone parents as against that for two-parent families with children.

(ii) Clause 10 of the Asylum and Immigration Bill provides that persons who require leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom shall not be entitled to child benefit except under such conditions as may be prescribed in regulations. The intention is to bring child benefit into line with other social security benefits.

Benefit Claims

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time for a claim renewal. [13174]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 9 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what is the average time for a claim renewal.

The benefits that require renewal claims are Family Credit, Disability Living Allowance, Disability Working Allowance and Attendance Allowance.

Statistics for the average clearance time of a renewal claim are produced on a monthly basis and the figures below show the year to date achievement between April 1995 and December 1995:-

Family Credit: 11.7 days

Disability Working Allowance: 18.5 days

Disability Living Allowance: 23.0 days

Information about Attendance Allowance could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Official Documents (Braille)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 is available in braille. [13446]

Mr. Burt: Yes. Braille copies of the Act can be obtained from the Department's information division. The Department has sent out a number of braille copies to individuals.

Disability Living Allowance

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the types of disability for which information is available for the numbers of (a) applications for, and (b) awards of, disability living allowance. [13561]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available in the format requested. Information about a person's main disabling condition is recorded only where an award of disability living allowance is made. The table sets out the different types of disability and the numbers of first awards arising from initial, review or appeal decisions. Where there is more than one disabling condition, only the main condition is recorded.

Fraud, Northumberland

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the level of social security fraud in (a) Blyth Valley and (b) south-east Northumberland. [13489]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Statistics for individual fraud cases investigated by the Benefits Agency are collected for the Northumberland area, which covers Ashington, Berwick-on-Tweed, Blyth and Hexham, and are given in the table. Figures for organised fraud investigations are not available locally.

	Number of cases where fraud established	Benefit savings £	Prosecutions
1994–95	1,484	3,046,542	37
1995 to 31 October 1996	1,397	3,024,750	29

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the SERPS pension that would be paid, on retirement, under current regulations to a person with an annual income of (a) £5,000, (b) £7,500 and (c) £10,000 and (i) 45 years contribution record and (ii) 30 years contribution record and no contributions in other years. [13767]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the table.

Additional Pension £pw 1996–97 prices

	Annual gross income
	5,000	7,500	10,000
45 years contributions	28.50	51.80	71.50
30 years contributions	20.10	35.80	48.90

1. It is assumed that the annual gross income was the same in all years at either £5,000, £7,500 or £10,000, i.e. that the gross income was at these levels in 1978 and was not increased in line with increases in prices or earnings.
2. It is assumed the individual retires at SPA in 2023 after a working life of 45 years. Where the individual has made just 30 years of contributions it is assumed that their working life was also 45 years, but that they did not contribute in every third year.
3. In the calculation of additional pension, earnings have been revalued on the basis of historical data from the Average Earnings Index: all employees and on the assumption of constant future real terms earnings growth of 2 per cent. per annum.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his yield from employers class 1A national insurance contributions on (a) company cars and (b) fuel for the year 1996–97. [13773]

Mr. Heald: The latest estimate for the total class 1A receipts to the national insurance fund in 1996–97 from both company cars and fuel is £439 million. Of that total £379 million is attributable to cars and £60 million to fuel.

Government Actuary's Department.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many employees fell (a) below the lower earnings limit and (b) above the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions in each year since 1978. [14628]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is below.

The estimated number of employees who fell below the lower earnings limit at April 1994 is 2.7 million[1].

Information regarding the number of employees earning at the upper earnings limit and above for every week in the tax years from 1986–87 to 1992–93 is in the table.

Tax year	Number of employees (millions)[2]
1986–87	1.09
1987–88	1.27
1988–89	1.59

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the amounts paid out on benefit claims from political refugees and asylum seekers in the United Kingdom over the last five years for which figures are available. [14010]

Mr. Roger Evans: Information about benefit expenditure in relation to political refugees is not available because they are not identified separately in departmental records. Information about asylum seekers has been recorded only for income support purposes from May 1993. Estimated annual expenditure is set out in the table.

Asylum seekers claiming income support: estimated annual expenditure

May 1994	124
February 1995	125

Notes:

1. Expenditure has been rounded to the nearest million.
2. Estimated annual expenditure has been calculated by multiplying the number of cases by the average weekly income support paid, then by multiplying the resulting figure by 52.
3. Figures given relate to Great Britain. No data are available in this format for Northern Ireland.
4. Data was not collected prior to 1993.

One-parent Benefit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of those currently claiming one-parent benefit are (a) single, (b) divorced, (c) widowed, (d) legally separated and (e) living apart. [14011]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parents under the age of 25 years are currently in receipt of one-parent benefit. [14012]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: It is estimated that there are 107,500 parents aged under 25 who are in receipt of one-parent benefit.

Retirement Pensioners

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the total sum of the social security budget for the financial year 1996–97 which will be devoted to benefits, pensions and other payments made to people over retirement age. [14013]

Mr. Heald: The information is set out in table 5 of the 1995 social security departmental report (Cm 2813), a copy of which is in the Library.

The 1996 departmental report, to be published at the end of March, will include updated figures. Copies of the report will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the total cost of increasing the state retirement pension level by £1 for every entitled pensioner in the financial year 1996–97. [14014]

Mr. Heald: The gross cost of giving all pensioner who receive some basic retirement pension a flat £1 per week increase in their pension is £540 million in the 1996–97 financial year. This cost includes giving £1 per week to the small number of pensioners receiving non-contribution retirement pensions.

The total cost, net of income related benefits is estimated at £400 million.

Note: All costs are rounded to the nearest £10 million.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the change in income in real terms of the average pensioner since 1979; and how this is made up between (a) state retirement pension, (b) state earnings-related pension scheme and (c) personal or occupational pension. [14859]

Mr. Heald: Pensioners' average gross incomes increased by 50 per cent. in real terms between 1979 and 1993, the latest available information—a rise of £56.80 per week. It is not possible to provide separate figures for basic retirement pension and SERPS but taken together they account for approximately a quarter of the increase, while occupational pensions account for about two-fifths. No separate information on personal pensions is available.

Note:

The information contained in this reply is based upon pensioner units. A pensioner unit is defined as a single person over state pension age or a couple where the head of the household, or husband, is over state pension age.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons of pensionable age are in receipt of (a) occupational pension, (b) personal pension and (c) state earnings-related pension scheme. [14870]

Mr. Heald: The latest information available shows that 6.5 million people were in receipt of an occupational pension in 1991, and that an estimated 60 per cent. of occupational pensioners are over state pension age[1]. A total of 4.2 million people were in receipt of a SERPS pension in March 1995. It is estimated that in 1993–94, around 150,000 taxpayers over state pension age were in receipt of income from a personal pension[2].

Private Pensions

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total sum invested in funded private pensions in the United Kingdom; and what are the equivalent figures for (a) each country in the European Union and (b) each country in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. [14861]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Note:

Information on the level of pension funds in OECD countries, other than for those countries which are members of the EU, is not available.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the effects of reduced equity investment yields on the incomes to beneficiaries of occupational and personal pensions. [14873]

Mr. Heald: All things being equal, any reduction in yield would mean that members of occupational and personal pension schemes would retire with lower pensions or that they and their employers would have to contribute more.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of contributors to occupational pension schemes in (a) 1966, (b) 1975, (c) 1985 and (d) 1995. [14868]

Mr. Heald: Information on the number of active members of occupational pension schemes, some of whom will be in non-contributory schemes, is given by the "Survey of Occupational Pension Schemes" by the Government Actuary's Department. This is conducted every four years. The available information is in the table. Data for 1995 are not yet available.

Year	Active members of occupational pension schemes (millions)
1967	12.2
1975	11.4
1983	11.1
1987	10.6
1991	10.7

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many retired persons were in receipt of occupational private pensions in (a) 1979 and (b) 1995. [14863]

Mr. Heald: It is estimated that around 6.5 million people were in receipt of an occupational pension in 1991, the latest year for which information is available. Some of these people received more than one pension. The total number of occupational pensions in payment was 7 million. In 1979, there were 3.7 million occupational pensions in payment; information on the number of people receiving these pensions is not available.

Long-term Sick and Disabled People

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the current total spending on long-term sick and disabled people and their carers; and what were the equivalent figures for 1979, 1985 and 1990. [14869]

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table.

WALES

Cardiff Bay Land Sales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average price per acre of land sold for (a) industrial, (b) housing and (c) office development by the Cardiff Bay development corporation in each year since 1989. [14304]

Mr. Hague: I have asked the chief executive of the Cardiff Bay development corporation to write to the hon. Member and will arrange for a copy of his reply to be placed in the Library of the House.

EU Funding

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was for each county and for Wales in constant prices for each of the last four years for which figures are available (a) the total amount and (b) the amount per 100,000 population in pounds sterling of money received in grants from the European Union, indicating for each year the percentage change for each category. [13395]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The figures are not readily available by county. For Wales, the information is as follows for each structural fund.

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 5 February 1996, Official Report, column 58, what assessment he has made of the factors underlying the increase in numbers in Wales classified as NVQ sub-level 1 and the decrease in the numbers classified as NVQ level 2 between 1993–94 and 1994–95; and if he will make a statement. [14908]

Mr. Hague: NVQ sub-level 1 relates to basic skills training in literacy and numeracy. My Department has encouraged training and enterprise councils in Wales to do more to promote these qualifications as a means of helping unemployed people who need to improve their basic skills to find work. I am very encouraged by the improvement in the number of trainees achieving these qualifications.

There is no obvious explanation for the decrease in the number of level 2 NVQs achieved, but is more than compensated for by the increase in the attainment of the other levels.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Morgan: To ask Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of his recent departmental letter of guidance to the South Glamorgan family health services authority encouraging the use of individual private consultants and the British United Provident Association by general practitioner fundholders to obtain out-patient and in-patient access to consultants for their long waiting list patients; [14882]

(2) if the recent departmental letter of guidance to the South Glamorgan family health services authority on the placing of contracts by general practitioner fundholders for their long waiting list patients with individual private consultants and BUPA has been copied to the other family health service authorities; what representations he has received on its contents; and if he will make a statement. [14885]

Mr. Hague: I have arranged for a copy of the correspondence with South Glamorgan family health services authority to be placed in the Library of the House. It has not been copied to other health authorities.

The letter neither encourages nor discourages the use of private consultants or hospitals. It is the duty of all commissioners, whether health authorities or fundholders, to provide the best possible care for the patient, having regard to value for money and the patient's best interests. If earlier treatment can be obtained in the private sector, I expect commissioners to consider this option rather than allow a patient to suffer unnecessarily.

ENVIRONMENT

Empty Buildings

Dr. Lynne Jones : To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many empty buildings his Department currently owns; what is the cost of insuring and securing these buildings; how many were designed as residential properties; and what was the total amount spent by his Department on empty property taxes in each of the last five years. [14574]

Sir Paul Beresford: Property Holdings is responsible for the whole of the Government civil office estate known as the common user (office) estate in which Government Departments and their agencies are housed. At 31 December 1995 there were 195 empty buildings on the CUE, 38 owned by the Government and the remainder held on lease.

As a general rule, the Government carry their own insurance risk. Where premises are leasehold, some landlords require formal insurance cover. This invariably forms part of the service charges. The security and insurance elements within such charges cannot readily be disaggregated and consolidated without disproportionate cost.

Until vacation the empty properties on the CUE have been used by the Government as business premises. An assessment of their original design criteria is not available centrally.

The Government make a contribution in lieu of rates on their CUE properties. The figures for payments of CILOR made by Property Holdings on its vacant space, leased and owned, are as follows:

1991–92: £16.0 million

1992–93: £18.0 million

1993–94: £17.2 million

1994–95: £15.0 million

1995–96: £24.6 million (estimate)

Sewage Outfalls (Solent)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the length of the sewage outfall pipe at Norton for which the National Rivers Authority gave its discharge consent; and what is the actual length of the pipe as it now exists; [14335]

(2) if he will list those outfall pipes that (a) have been and (b) have not been measured for length by the National Rivers Authority for which it has discharge consent; [14323]

(3) when the National Rivers Authority measured the outfall pipes for which it has given consents. [14341]

Mr. Clappison: I understand that the National Rivers Authority does not usually measure the length of outfalls, but does verify locations of the discharge positions. The consent for the discharge at Norton, which pre-dates the establishment of the NRA, does not specify a pipe length but does specify the discharge location by national grid reference.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessment the National Rivers Authority has made of the advantages of introducing a computer model of the tidal flow off the Norton outfall; [14339]

(2) when the National Rivers Authority expects to have a model for the flow of dispersal off the Norton outfall. [14340]

Mr. Clappison: I understand that the National Rivers Authority already has a model which can be applied to any discharge to the Solent.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the National Rivers Authority gave permission for the discharge of sewage on the flood tide at Norton. [14337]

Mr. Clappison: I understand that, since its establishment in 1989, the National Rivers Authority has not altered the discharge consent for the Norton outfall.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what enforcement action the National Rivers Authority intends to take for non-compliance with its consents at the Norton outfall. [14336]

Mr. Clappison: I understand that the National Rivers Authority is not aware of any current breaches of the consent for the Norton outfall.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the National Rivers Authority's response to the imposition of tertiary treatment plants for Solent outfalls. [14324]

Mr. Clappison: There is no requirement for tertiary treatment in the Solent.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies the NRA has made of the closure of the Totland outfall and the consequential effects on outflow at Norton; and what studies were made by the NRA of increasing the volume of discharge inside the Solent as opposed to outside it. [14408]

Mr. Clappison: I understand that the National Rivers Authority has carried out monitoring at Totland for bathing water directive and other purposes. Bacteriological quality at Norton foreshore has also been monitored by the NRA and has shown an improvement since 1993.

Detailed studies of the dispersion characteristics of the Solent for the purposes of the urban waste water treatment directive have resulted in a requirement for full secondary biological treatment for all significant sewage discharges into these waters.

Solent Shellfish Beds

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to designate the Solent's native oyster beds under the biodiversity plan; and what other bi-valve oyster beds and eco-systems in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the EU are of similar ecological importance. [14409]

Mr. Clappison: "Biodiversity: The UK Steering Group Report", published on 13 December 1995, contains no plans to designate the Solent's native oyster beds. The report does recommend that the native or European oyster, Ostrea edulis, be among 1,253 species whose conservation status should be monitored. The Government expect to publish their response to the report in spring of 1996.

Important native oyster beds are found in the Fal and Helford estuaries, River Tamar, River Lynher, the Crouch, Blackwater, Roach and West Mersea estuaries in England; Loch Ryan in Scotland and Milford Haven and Swansea bay in Wales. In the European Union important native oyster beds include Oosterscheldte in the Netherlands and the north Brittany coast around St. Malo in France.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment the National Rivers Authority has made of the advantages of monitoring the Solent under the shellfish waters directive. [14334]

Mr. Clappison: The National Rivers Authority is the competent authority for reporting compliance with and enforcing the shellfish waters directive. It is required to monitor all the areas of the Solent designated under the directive.

Areas of Special Scientific Interests

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on (a) restoration orders for areas of special scientific interest and (b) the consultations he has had about extending his powers under section 31 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. [14591]

Mr. Clappison: We have agreed in principle to consult on the extension of the powers of the court to make an order requiring restoration when the special interest of such a site is damaged.

Joint Nature Conservation Committee

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of finance for the Joint Nature Conservation Committee for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [14606]

Mr. Clappison: The budget allocated to the Joint Nature Conservation Committee by English Nature, Scottish Natural Heritage and the Countryside Council for Wales over the past five years has been:

1991–92: £3.955 million

1992–93: £5.050 million

1993–94: £4.900 million

1994–95: £5.008 million

1995–96: £4.735 million

This funding has enabled the country agencies to carry out those special functions relating to nature conservation in Great Britain as a whole and beyond Great Britain which are exercised through the joint committee.

River Humber

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what account he takes of topography and salinity when deciding the outer estuarine boundary of the River Humber; [14955]

(2) if he will now receive the outer estuarine limit of the Humber under the urban waste water directive taking account only of objective criteria. [14956]

Mr. Clappison: The National Rivers Authority has been asked to review the basis for establishing estuary boundaries for the purposes of the urban waste water treatment directive, including the relevance of salinity and topography, and to advise my Department accordingly.

Global Temperature Increases

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to monitor global temperature rises. [14928]

Mr. Clappison: The Department receives regular reports from the Meterological Office about global temperatures.

EU Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on which occasions in the last three years officials have vetoed draft EU legislation on the grounds that a fiche d'impact had not been correctly prepared. [13654]

Sir Paul Beresford: Since the implementation of the Maastricht treaty all EC environmental legislation has been adopted under qualified majority voting and a veto cannot apply. The correct preparation of fiches d'impact is a very important part of our consideration of proposals for EC legislation. It is one of the factors taken into account when Ministers consider the UK's negotiating position on a particular proposal.

Supplementary Credit Approval, Hull

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce his response to the revised bid of the City of Hull for SCA 1996–97. [14965]

Sir Paul Beresford: An announcement will be made in the near future.

Local Government Reorganisation

Sir Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what he intends to be the implementation date of the reorganisation of local government in areas for which orders have not yet been made. [15380]

Mr. Gummer: As I said in my statement on 30 November 1995, Official Report, columns 1333–52, we envisage staging the implementation of reorganisation in England to take account of the resources available. We also needed to allow time to receive and consider representations on the Local Government Commission's final report which was submitted on 19 December, and, where we accept recommendations for change, to consult on draft orders. With these considerations in mind we have reluctantly concluded that implementation of reorganisation in the remaining areas for which we have not already laid orders cannot take place in 1997. I intend to make a further announcement setting out our decisions on the recommendations in the commission's final report, and the timing of the remaining orders, as soon as possible.

Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made in conducting the market test of the management of the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre. [15381]

Mr. Gummer: I have now decided to award a five-year service level agreement to the in-house team, based on the existing executive agency for the conference centre. It will take effect from 1 April 1996. Having considered the advice of a steering group and of consultants, KPMG, I am satisfied that the bid submitted by this team offers better value for money than those received from elsewhere. It also satisfies the quality and security requirements set for the test.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Duchy Benevolent Fund

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the grants distributed from the Duchy benevolent fund in (a) 1993, (b) 1994 and (c) 1995. [14945]

Mr. Freeman: Lists of grants distributed from the Duchy of Lancaster benevolent fund for the last three years would run to several hundred items. A list of donations made to charitable causes in the County Palatine in 1993, before the fund became a registered charity, was placed in the Library on 2 February 1994.

I am not a trustee of the fund. As a properly constituted charity, the trustees produce an annual report and accounts to the Charity Commissioners which is open to public scrutiny. The accounts show all donations except the many grants below £1,000 which are made on behalf of the trustees by the lords lieutenants of Lancashire, Greater Manchester and Merseyside who are all trustees of the fund.

If the hon. Member would like details of donations made to organisations or individuals in his local area, I shall arrange for the secretary of the fund to provide the information.

Parliamentary Commissioner

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has to change the 1995–96 cash limit for the Office of the Parliamentary Commissioner and health service commissioners. [15285]

Mr. Freeman: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for the Office of the Parliamentary Commissioner and health service commissioners—class XIX vote 4—will be increased by £702,000 from £9,000,000 to £9,702,000. The increase is in response to growth in the work load of the office and to prepare for the work which will be generated by the Health Service Commissioners (Amendment) Bill, which was debated in another place last night.

EU Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to support the President of the European Commission's policy of less but better legislation and to improve the operation of the fiche d'impact procedures. [13656]

Mr. Freeman: Through my contacts with the Commission and with Ministers in other member states I have been pressing for improved regulatory systems at the European level, a rolling programme of regulatory reviews and action on a number of specific burdensome directives. At the informal meeting of the Internal Market Council to be held later this month, I shall share our experience of compliance cost assessment as a contribution to the current review of the Commission's impact assessment systems.

TRANSPORT

Swapbody Freight Containers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total amount of investment (a) estimated to be required to make lines suitable for the passage of European swapbody freight containers and (b) which has already taken place for such conversion, indicating the location, in respect of each main rail route and for Great Britain; and if he will make a statement. [14234]

Mr. Watts: BR has upgraded existing railway infrastructure at a cost of some £26 million to facilitate the carriage of standard European swapbodies and containers between the channel tunnel and terminal sites at Glasgow Mossend, Liverpool Seaforth, Manchester Trafford Park, Wakefield Normanton, Birmingham Landor Street and London Willesden. It will be for Railtrack to consider the commercial case for undertaking further loading gauge clearance work in the light of demand for freight services.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance he has issued to personnel management staff within the Driving Standards Agency concerning retraining following a formal complaint under chapter 17 of his Department's staff handbook. [14440]

Mr. Norris: The Driving Standards Agency is producing a revised course on new desk instructions.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each agency within his Department his plans for changes to annual staff reporting and promotion procedures. [14432]

Mr. Norris: I have none. However, where the chief executives of my Department's agencies have such plans, these are shown:

DRIVER AND VEHICLE LICENSING AGENCY

Promotion

Planning to introduce changes to the internal job application and promotion procedures. A new application form covering both procedures will support more objective assessments of the skills required for the advertised post and the applicant's suitability for it.

DRIVING STANDARDS AGENCY

Planning to review the current staff reporting and promotion procedures.

HIGHWAYS AGENCY

Annual staff reporting

Will pilot a new staff appraisal system in 1996–97 with a view to introducing it in 1997–98. The new system aims to improve the accuracy and consistency of reporting standards, provide a more effective means for staff and their managers to identify development needs and to encourage a frequent and constructive dialogue on performance.

THE COASTGUARD AGENCY

Annual staff reporting

Aiming to introduce changes from November 1996.

VEHICLE CERTIFICATION AGENCY

Annual staff reporting

Planning to introduce new appraisal and reporting procedures in 1997–98.

VEHICLE INSPECTORATE

Promotion

Developing arrangements for selecting the most suitable applicants for posts by means of assessment centres.

Disciplinary Procedures

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he has issued to staff in the personnel management section of the Driving Standards Agency on the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service guidance on disciplinary procedures. [14444]

Mr. Norris: The Driving Standards Agency follows the Department of Transport's disciplinary procedures. They are aware of the ACAS guidance and the Department of Transport is reviewing its disciplinary procedures.

Railway Contracts

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what contracts have been awarded by Railtrack to Hall and Tawse; and what work under these contracts has been subcontracted to British Rail maintenance departments. [14486]

Mr. Watts: I understand that Railtrack plc has awarded contracts to Hall and Tawse for rapid response and planned maintenance work. Hall and Tawse have subcontracted two small specialised work packages (about 1 per cent. of total contract value) covering professional inspection and track possession management advice to BR infrastructure maintenance companies.

Chingford-Liverpool Street Train Crash

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the causes of the Chingford-Liverpool Street train crash on 19 September 1995 and the remedial action that has been taken. [14301]

Mr. Watts: The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate has conducted its investigation into this accident and is now considering what further action to take. It would be inappropriate to comment on the cause pending that decision.

Staff Clothing

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) which offices of his Department have dress codes for administrative staff; [14413]

(2) if male staff in his Department are allowed to wear earrings; [142395]

(3) if he will make a statement on the factors which led to the decision not to include staff at grade 7 and above in the dress guidelines issued to staff of the north eastern traffic area office on 29 January; [14400]

(4) what are the requirements on female staff in the dress guidelines issued to staff of the north eastern traffic area office on 29 January; [14396]

(5) what representations he has received in the last 12 months from members of the public with regard to the dress and appearance of staff of the north eastern traffic area office; [14443]

(6) what plans his Department has to introduce a dress code for the administrative staff employed in the north eastern traffic area office; [14414]

(7) if female staff of the north eastern traffic area office are allowed to wear leggings; and if he will make a statement; [14398]

(8) which traffic area officers were visited by the clerk of the north eastern traffic area office in his assessment of the dress guidelines issued on 29 January; [14399]

(9) what instructions he has given to the clerk of the north eastern traffic area office on the matter of a dress code for staff below grade 7 in that office; [14442]

(10) what financial assistance he plans to make available to staff of the north eastern traffic area office to meet the costs of appropriate clothing set out in the dress guidelines issued on 29 January. [14397]

Mr. Norris: The Department's position on dress code is that staff who are required to wear a uniform while on official duty are provided with such uniforms. For other staff, there is no formal dress code nor instructions as to male earrings or leggings for females. This is left as a matter for discussion between local management and the individuals concerned.

The dress guidelines for clerical staff in the North Eastern traffic area office have been suspended pending discussions with the trade union side. There are separate guidelines for staff in the management grades, which include the grade 7 clerk, agreed with the Public Services, Tax and Commerce Union locally.

The dress guidelines had been prepared to give staff an indication of what is considered suitable in the light of the TAO's wish to improve the image and service that it presents to the public. There are no plans to provide additional financial support.

Rail Services, Greater Manchester

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of state for Transport how much will be paid by the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising to the British Railways Board for the operation and marketing of passenger rail services in Greater Manchester in 1996–97; and how much in 1996–97 prices was paid by Greater Manchester passenger transport executive in 1995–96. [14614]

Mr. Watts: The Office of Passenger Rail Franchising is currently negotiating a contract with the British Railways Board for the provision of passenger rail services including those currently supported by Greater Manchester PTE for 1996–97. When this is completed it will be possible to indicate only the amount of support paid for each train operating company, not the amounts paid for specific areas. The amount paid by Greater Manchester PTE is a matter for it or for the British Railways Board.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which organisation will become responsible from 1 April for the services for the (a) marketing, (b) promotion and (c) provision of information about passenger rail services currently provided by Greater Manchester passenger transport executive; and what sums will be allocated for these purposes in 1996–97. [14615]

Mr. Watts: From 1 April 1996, the train operating company, North West Regional Railways, will be responsible for these activities, and for funding them.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which organisations will be responsible for the compilation of timetable information for Greater Manchester passenger rail services after 1 April. [14613]

Mr. Watts: From 1 April 1996, North West Regional Railways and Railtrack will become responsible for the compilation of timetable information on local rail services formerly supported by Greater Manchester passenger transport executive.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes in the responsibilities of the British Railways Board and North West Regional Railways for the provision of passenger rail services in Greater Manchester are planned to be introduced from 1 April. [14612]

Mr. Watts: From 1 April 1996 the franchising director will assume responsibility for the financial support of local rail services in the Greater Manchester area. The franchising director will also become responsible for determining the future level of services formerly secured by the Greater Manchester PTE.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising has to enforce the contract held by North West Regional Railways, for providing Greater Manchester passenger rail services from 1 April. [14616]

Mr. Watts: The Office of Passenger Rail Franchising will have a legally enforceable contract with the British Railways Board for 1996–97 which will include the timetable for Greater Manchester services to be operated by North West Regional Railways.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on the introduction of the piggyback principle for freight to the west coast main line. [14742]

Mr. Watts: Railtrack is examining costs and technical feasibility.

Great Central Railway

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the re-opening of the Great Central Railway; and how many were opposed to it. [14740]

Mr. Watts: Up to Friday 9 February, we have received 465 letters from Members of Parliament, local authorities, other outside organisations and the general public about the project being promoted by Central Railway plc, including letters about the recent waiver applications. All but five of these letters expressed opposition to, or reservations about, the scheme in whole or in part, or opposition to waivers.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what surveys his Department has undertaken into the number of homes and businesses that would be affected by the resurrection of the Great Central Railway. [14743]

Mr. Watts: None. The promoters of the project, Central Railway plc, are required under the Transport and Works Act procedures to survey all land that would be compulsorily acquired, for the purpose of listing all affected owners and occupiers in a book of reference. The book of reference must be provided with the application.

Rail Freight Facilities

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many rail facilities which received freight facilities grant since the inception of the grant are now no longer in operation. [15005]

Mr. Watts: More than 200 grants have been made since the scheme started in 1975. The Department undertakes monitoring of the tonnage moved through a grant-aided facility for a period equal to the commitment made by the grant applicant to move goods through that facility. This period is normally in the region of five to 10 years. Information on the current use of the relevant facilities is not held centrally.

Freight Costs

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has made of the costs of transporting low value, high bulk goods over long distances (a) by road and (b) by rail. [14981]

Mr. Watts: My Department makes such estimates when assessing applications for the grants which are available to encourage freight to be moved by rail rather than road transport.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many pages of evidence were provided by his Department to the Scott inquiry. [14835]

Mr. Hanley: A total of 16,234.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department provided all documents requested by Lord Justice Scott in the furtherance of his inquiry. [14838]

Mr. Hanley: All documents requested by Sir Richard Scott and in our possession were provided to his inquiry.

Cyprus

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many official ministerial visits have been paid to the Republic of Cyprus in each of the last five years; and what further such visits are planned. [14764]

Mr. David Davis: Since 1991, there have been five such visits: two in 1992 and three in 1993. These visits all took place in a multilateral context. There are no present plans for further visits.

Mr. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to support current proposals for the demilitarisation of the island of Cyprus. [14763]

Mr. Davis: Moves by both sides to reduce deployment of troops and levels of military equipment on the island can only help to improve the climate for a settlement. This is an issue that we discuss regularly with both communities in Cyprus.

Imia

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 321, if he will set out the authority for his statement that the question of sovereignty over the island of Imia is not determined. [15083]

Mr. David Davis: The Minister of State , Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Upminster (Sir N. Bonsor) observed in his oral answer on 7 February 1996, Official Report, columns 321–23, that the Greek and Turkish Governments take different positions on sovereignty over the island of Imia. We warmly welcome expressions by both sides of determination to deal with the issue by peaceful means. This must be right. It is important that it is done in accordance with international law.

Malaysia

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Malaysian Government regarding Lim Guan Eng; and if he will make a statement. [14545]

Mr. Hanley: We are following Mr. Lim Guan Eng's case, which is before the Malaysian courts. We have not made any representations.

South Africa

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his officials have made to the South African authorities in the case of Paul Grecian. [15104]

Mr. Hanley: We are in regular contact with the South African prison authorities in the course of giving Mr. Grecian full consular support.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the legal procedures which have been followed in the case of Paul Grecian, at present in prison in South Africa. [15103]

Mr. Hanley: Mr. Grecian has his own lawyer in South Africa who is able to advise on the legal procedures in his case.

EU Treaties

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to publish as a Command Paper the current provisions of the treaty on European Union and the treaty establishing the European Community. [15313]

Mr. David Davis: Such a Command Paper has now been published and has been deposited in the Libraries of the House.

DEFENCE

Aircrew Standards Evaluation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel are employed in aircrew standards evaluation duties in the Royal Air Force; and what is the minimum frequency of standards evaluation reviews of flying units. [13210]

Mr. Soames: The RAF is committed to ensuring that its aircrews maintain the very highest standards in all aspects of military flying. In addition to the continuous process of maintaining standards within units, all aircrew are regularly subjected to formal standards evaluation reviews every 12 to 24 months, depending on units' roles and operational commitments. Currently, 115 service personnel directly support the standards evaluation process.

Low Flying

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints in respect of low flying have been received by his Department from addresses in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland in each month since September 1995. [14232]

Mr. Soames: The number of inquiries and complaints about military low flying received by my Department since September 1995 from addresses in England, Wales and Scotland are in the table.

Month	England	Wales	Scotland
1995
October	375	52	116
November	364	80	69
December	150	61	87
1996
January	141	44	87

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effect of the fine weather in the summer of 1995 on the rate of public complaints to his Department concerning low-flying aircraft. [14233]

Mr. Soames: It is our experience that the rate at which complaints about military low flying are received by my Department increases when the weather is fine, as people are more likely to be outdoors or to have windows open and noise of any sort is more intrusive. We believe that the prolonged period of fine weather in the summer of 1995 was a significant factor in the increase in complaints during that year, but we are not able to quantify the effect.

Empty Buildings

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many empty buildings his Department currently owns; what is the cost of insuring and securing these buildings; how many were designed as residential properties; and what was the total amount spent by his Department on empty property taxes in each of the last five years. [14575]

Mr. Soames: No central record is maintained of the number of buildings which may be empty at any given time and the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Army Apprentices College, Harrogate

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken to find alternative uses for the Army apprentices college, Harrogate, (a) within his Department, (b) in conjunction with other Government Departments and (c) by selling the property on the open market. [14143]

Mr. Soames: Since the announcement in December 1992 of the decision to close the Army apprentices college, Harrogate, my Department has considered the property for a number of other defence uses, none of which was found to be suitable. While the scope for alternative defence use is still being explored, we have, in parallel, conducted a without commitment "Expressions of Interest" advertising campaign through consultants to identify possible commercial interest in the site. The results of this advertising campaign are being assessed. A regular dialogue is maintained with the Government office for Yorkshire and Humberside.

Commissioned Officers

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many commissioned officers (a) in the Royal Air Force under Queen's Regulation 2905(3), (b) in (i) the Royal Navy and (ii) the Army under the equivalent Queen's Regulations have been required to retire, relinquish or resign their commissions in each of the last 10 years. [14555]

Mr. Soames: The number of commissioned officers who have been required to retire, relinquish or resign their commissions under Queen's Regulation (RAF) 2905(3) or equivalent regulations in the Royal Navy and the Army over the past 10 years are:

Year	Royal Navy	Army	RAF
1986	3	1	[1]—
1987	5	3	[1]—
1988	10	3	[1]—
1989	8	1	[1]—
1990	7	7	5
1991	5	2	2
1992	7	3	6
1993	3	1	6
1994	6	6	0
1995	10	6	8

[1] Figures are not available for these years.

Nuclear Test Simulation

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department has taken to ensure that the United Kingdom has the super-computing capability for nuclear test simulation. [14393]

Mr. Arbuthnot: A number of techniques and facilities, including super-computers, which will help to maintain the capabilities and expertise necessary for the stewardship of our nuclear weapons in the absence of underground testing are being developed. As regards the acquisition of super-computing equipment, I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) on 26 January 1996, Official Report, column 466.

Empty Dwellings, North Yorkshire

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many empty Ministry of Defence domestic dwellings there are in North Yorkshire; and how many are for sale. [14196]

Mr. Soames: There are 491 empty MOD domestic dwellings in North Yorkshire, of which eight are currently being sold under the joint services discount scheme. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced on 30 November 1995, Official Report, columns 810–11, we intend to transfer ownership of the married quarters estate in England and Wales to the private sector.

RAF Valley

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement for the contract to operate maintenance services at RAF Valley; and what requirements for on-going training commitments have been written into the specification. [14762]

Mr. Soames: Tenders for the maintenance work at RAF Valley are currently being evaluated. I expect to be in a position to announce the award of the contract in April. The contract will specify the qualifications and experience levels required by personnel undertaking maintenance work rather than the training needed to achieve those qualifications which will be a matter for the contractor.

Buy American Act

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 December, Official Report, column 1176, what was the response of the US Government when he raised the question of "Buy American" clauses. [14805]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence raised Her Majesty's Government's concerns over "Buy American" restrictions during his recent visit to Washington. The US Department of Defense has begun to remove such restrictions where they are not required for national security reasons or mandated by law, and is urging the US Congress to follow suit. Regrettably, Congress voted to retain several old restrictions and to introduce a number of new ones in this year's defence legislation. Her Majesty's Government will continue to press for the reversal of these damaging provisions.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions since 1 January 1995 (a) he, (b) Ministers in his Department and (c) offficials in his Department have had contact with Lord Howe concerning his correspondence with the Scott inquiry. [14820]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Ministers and officials from the Ministry of Defence have had no such contacts with Lord Howe.

Service Men, Bosnia

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to introduce a system of compensation or ex-gratia payments for service men injured in Bosnia, comparable to those available in Germany and Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement. [14921]

Mr. Soames: Where an injury resulting in the death or invaliding of a service man or woman is attributable to service in Bosnia, benefits are paid both from the armed forces pensions scheme and from the Department of Social Security war pensions scheme. My Department also operates a scheme for criminal injuries compensation for members of the armed forces and their dependants who are victims of crimes of violence while serving overseas. Such compensation, however, is not payable where the injury to, or death of, a service man or woman was a result of war operations or, as in Bosnia, military activity by warring factions.

A review of death and invaliding benefits for service personnel, and the criteria for their award, is currently being undertaken as part of the detailed study of the pensions recommendations made by Sir Michael Bett's independent review of the armed forces' manpower, career and remuneration structures.

Air Squadrons, Northern Ireland

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future of university air squadrons and air experience flights in Northern Ireland. [15283]

Mr. Soames: The primary role of the university air squadrons is to attract new recruits of good quality and education into the Royal Air Force. The defence costs study "Front Line First" recognised the university air squadrons as a source of high calibre pilots for the RAF, but identified scope for rationalisation in the organisation as a whole. As part of rationalisation, it was proposed that the Queen's university air squadron—QUAS—being the least successful squadron in terms of providing pilot recruits for the RAF, should close. A consultative document covering this proposal was issued on 5 September 1995, recommending the closure of QUAS and, as a consequence, the closure of No. 13 Air Experience Flight based at Belfast.

My Department received a number of representations from Members of Parliament and other interested parties. The consultation included the trades unions and local authorities and full and careful consideration has been given to the representations received. Following this work, I am satisfied that no issues have been raised which call into question the viability of the proposals.

I have therefore decided with regret that QUAS and No. 13 Air Experience Flight should close at the end of this academic year. Air experience flying for air cadets will be provided by offering them places at summer camps on the mainland. We also propose to reactivate No. 664 Volunteer Gliding School at Belfast with immediate effect.

Munitions Exports (form F680)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those officials in his Department who were authorised to sign F680 forms in the period June to December 1986. [14857]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 12 February 1996]: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committee Reports

Mr. George: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many Government responses to Select Committee reports have been made more than six months after the publication of the Committee's report in each parliamentary session since 1990. [15086]

Mr. Newton: I shall write to the hon. Member with the information that he requests.

WALES

Health Trust Costs

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the management costs for each health trust in Wales in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95 expressed as an actual figure and as a percentage of the total budget. [14453]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is as follows:

Hospital Beds

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many beds there were in Welsh hospitals in each year since 1979. [14803]

Mr. Richards: The information is given in the table.

Almost 60 per cent. of the reduction in NHS hospital beds over the period is associated with better care for people with mental illnesses or learning disabilities away from the hospital environment. Reductions in the acute sector have been made possible through advances in medical technology and practice, including day case surgery. Since 1979, the total number of people treated as in-patients or day cases in Welsh hospitals has almost doubled.

Average daily available beds in Welsh NHS hospitals

Schools Inspections

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average cost of a school inspection per day for (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Wales. [14530]

Mr. Richards: This is a matter for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in Wales. I have asked Mr. Roy James to write to the hon. Member and will arrange for a copy of his reply to be placed in the Library of the House.

Departmental Publications

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of his Department's administrative manuals and internal guidance are now made public; and which remain private. [14026]

Mr. Hague: The Welsh Office issues guidance as appropriate to assist members of the public and others using Welsh Office services.

Empty Dwellings

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many empty dwellings owned by Government Departments there were in Wales for the latest available year; and if he will make a statement. [15105]

Mr. Hague: I refer to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister responsible for housing on 23 November 1995, Official Report, column 238. Separate information is not available for other Government Departments in Wales.

Prescriptions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the annual average cost of prescription items per patient prescribed by (a) general practitioner fundholders and (b) non-fundholding general practitioners for each year since the introduction of fundholding for which statistics are available for (i) Wales and (ii) each family health services authority. [14964]

Mr. Hague: The 1994–95 figures are as follows. We do not hold data for earlier years.

March 1994–April 1995	Fundholding cost per person £	Non-funding cost per person £

TREASURY

OECD Statistics

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the average unemployment rate over the period 1979 to 1994 for each OECD country; [13913]

(2) what was the average annual rate of export growth in real terms for each of the OECD countries over the period 1979 to 1994; [13921]

(3) what was the value of total investment per capita converted at current purchasing power parities for each OECD country in 1979 and 1994; [13912]

(4) what was the average annual rate of growth in real terms of gross domestic product for each OECD country over the period 1979 to 1994; [13920]

(5) what was the average annual rate of interest for each of the EU and G7 countries over the period 1979 to 1994; [13918]

(6) what was the percentage change in civilian employment excluding those on work-related Government training programmes over the period 1979 to 1994 for each OECD country. [13914]

(7) what was the average ratio over the period 1979 to 1994 in current prices of investment to gross domestic product for each OECD country; [13922]

(8) what was the value of gross domestic product per capita converted at current purchasing power parities for each OECD country in 1979 and 1994; [13916]

(9) what was the ratio of the balance of trade to gross domestic product for each OECD country in 1979 and 1994; [13911]

(10) what was the average annual rate of inflation for each of the EU and G7 countries over the period 1979 to 1994; [13919]

(11) what was the increase in the volume of manufacturing output over the period 1979 to 1994 for each OECD country; [13915]

(12) what was the average ratio over the period 1979 to 1994 in current prices of imports to gross domestic product for each OECD country; [13923]

(13) what was the average ratio over the period 1979 to 1994 in current prices of Government investment to gross domestic product for each OECD country. [13917]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The data requested can be found in the following OECD publications:

Economic Outlook

Labour Force Statistics

Quarterly National Accounts

National Accounts, Main Aggregates Volume 1.

OECD civilian employment figures excluding those on work-related Government schemes are not available.

These publications are all available in the House of Commons Library.

European Union Budget

Mr. Olner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on United Kingdom Government contributions to European Union budget line B3-4004; and if he will make a statement. [13765]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The budgetary commentary to line B3-4004 of the general budget of the European Communities cites as its legal base the agreement on social policy annexed to the social policy protocol to the treaty on European union, and in particular the European works council directive adopted under that agreement. Article 2 of the social policy protocol states that for acts adopted by the Council under this agreement:

"any financial consequences other than administrative costs entailed for institutions shall not be applicable to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland".

Capital Gains Tax

Miss Hoey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many children currently make use of their annual capital gains tax allowance. [14259]

Mr. Jack: I regret that precise estimates are not possible for the number of individuals with net gains below the capital gains tax annual exempt amount. Details of gains are not required on tax returns where chargeable gains do not exceed the annual exempt amount and aggregate proceeds from disposals of all assets do not exceed twice the annual exempt amount.

Empty Buildings

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many empty buildings his Department currently owns; what is the cost of insuring and securing these buildings; how many were designed as residential properties; and what was the total amount spent by his Department on empty property taxes in each of the last five years. [14566]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Treasury does not own any property. All buildings occupied by the Treasury form part of the Government common user estate. Information relating to the CUE was given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment on 30 January 1996, Official Report, columns 648–49.

European Communities (Unemployment)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average rate of unemployment in the member states of the European Community in each of the years 1972, 1982 and 1992. [14527]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Comparisons between the UK and other EU countries of unemployment on the internationally standard international labour organisation basis are available only from 1984. The table shows the extent of the available information.

Unemployment rates in EU countries

	1984	1992
Belgium	11.9	6.7

Offshore Single Pension Bonds

Miss Hoey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the tax forgone as a result of the use of offshore single pension bonds. [14262]

Mr. Jack: We are not able to identify an offshore single pensions bond and, as a consequence, regretfully are not able to answer the hon. Member's questions.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many pages of evidence were provided by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to the Scott inquiry. [14837]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have provided 15,381 pages of evidence to the Scott inquiry. This figure does not include correspondence between the Department and the inquiry or evidence supplied to the inquiry by individual witnesses.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many written parliamentary questions were passed for answer to executive agencies and non-governmental departments in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [14988]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Since October 1992, when arrangements were introduced for enabling agency chief executives to answer parliamentary questions, chief executives responsible to Treasury Ministers have replied to seven questions:

1992: 3
1993: —
1994: —
1995: 2

Griffin House VAT and Excise Office

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he intends to pay off the lease on the VAT and Excise office at Griffin house, 161 Hammersmith road; [13600]

(2) what considerations led to the decision to close the VAT and Excise office in Hammersmith road; and what consideration has been given to the future of the lease on the property; [13601]

(3) what is the nearest alternative office to the VAT office at 161 Hammersmith road at which people can get advice on VAT and excise; [13602]

(4) what is the cost of closing the VAT and Excise office at 161 Hammersmith road; and what is the cost of buying the lease; [13603]

(5) if his plans for staff at the VAT and Excise office in Hammersmith road include compulsory redundancy; [13604]

(6) what is the annual rental on his Department's VAT and Excise office at Griffin house, 161 Hammersmith road; [13605]

(7) what consultation exercise his Department has initiated with customers of the VAT and Excise office at 161 Hammersmith road about its proposed closure. [13606]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise recently completed a fundamental expenditure review which has resulted in planned changes in working practices, with reductions in staff numbers and the need for accommodation. The regional collection responsible for the Hammersmith office, Thames Valley, decided to close the office as part of the consequential rationalisation of its operations, based on a detailed business case which took account of value for money for the taxpayer.

There are no plans to "buy out" of the existing lease. When the property is vacated it will be in the first instance offered to other Government Departments in the locality. If they do not take up the additional accommodation it will be let on the open market. The annual rent is £511,988 with rates of £134,534 and landlord's service charge of £110,580.

The cost of closing Griffin house will be some £400,000, which covers alterations to two nearby offices to house the additional staff who will be located there.

Set against this are the reductions in running costs, a significant portion of which will start to accrue from the moment the building is vacated.

There are no plans to make any of the existing staff at Griffin house compulsorily redundant.

It is not departmental policy to conduct formal consultation exercises about the location of offices. However, the needs of traders and the public are always taken into account before a decision about the closure of an office is taken. In the case of Hammersmith, as it covers a small geographical area coupled with satisfactory transport links, it was felt that the public and the trading community would not be unduly inconvenienced by visiting another local office. In addition, at our adjacent offices vehicle access is generally easier and there are better parking facilities.

Taxpayers

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 6 February, Official Report, column 118, if the figures covering the Isle of Wight include taxpayers on the island whose tax affairs are handled by other districts. [15077]

Mr. Jack: The figures are derived from the survey of personal incomes where taxpayers are allocated to counties according to their place of residence or to their business address if self-employed, regardless of where their tax affairs are handled.

Employment Growth

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage rate of employment growth over the period 1979–95 in respect of (a) each EU state, (b) USA, (c) Japan, (d) Australia, (e) Canada and (f) New Zealand. [14972]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The latest available information showing the most up to date comparisons is provided in the table.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers are in small self-administered pension schemes; and what is the annual cost to the Revenue of tax relief on contributions under such schemes. [14666]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 February 1996]: Information is not available concerning the actual number of taxpayers who are members of small self-administered pension schemes.

The estimated cost of tax relief for contributions to occupational pension schemes is published in table 7.10 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1995", a copy of which is in the Library. It is not possible to separate these estimates between small self-administered schemes and other occupational pension schemes.

Small Firms (Loan Guarantees)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money has been committed each year since 1990–91, and by which banks, under the small firms loan guarantee scheme. [14644]

Mr. Page: I have been asked to reply.

The value of loans guaranteed under the small firms loan guarantee scheme since 1990–91, by lender, is as follows:

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Fisheries Policy

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will describe the baseline between Skegness and Great Yarmouth for the purposes of the common fisheries policy. [14649]

Mr. Baldry: The territorial sea baseline is drawn in accordance with the Territorial Waters Order in Council 1964, as amended by the Territorial Waters Order (Amendment) Order 1979. The base points are held and maintained by the territorial waters officer of the UK Hydrographic Office, Taunton.

EU Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he ensures that the negotiating brief for his officials discussing EU legislation takes fully into account the need to minimise the burdens on United Kingdom business. [13716]

Mr. Boswell: Guidance on how officials are to apply deregulatory principles when negotiating EC regulations is contained in the booklet, "Getting a Good Deal in Europe". This guidance has been supplemented by the recent publication of guidance on the preparation of compliance cost assessments, which stresses that the likely burdens on business highlighted by UK compliance cost assessments of EC proposals should be integral to the UK's negotiating strategy. Copies of both pieces of guidance are in the Library of the House.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is (a) the highest and (b) the lowest hourly rate charged to abattoirs by the Meat Hygiene Service for the services of official veterinary surgeons. [15087]

Mrs. Browning: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 30 January to his previous question on the subject of official veterinary surgeons' hourly rates, Official Report, column 694.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Record Office

Dr. Marek: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what plans he has for the future of the site and building of the Public Record Office, Chancery lane. [10891]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have been asked to reply.

The efficiency scrutiny of the Public Record Office concluded that operations should be transferred to new premises at Kew. This transfer should be completed by the end of 1996. Other Government Departments have been widely canvassed, but there is no serious interest in re-use of the existing premises at Chancery lane. They will become surplus to requirements and will be disposed of on the open market by Property Holdings.

Complex Fraud Cases

Mr. Amess: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy to introduce measures to allow complex fraud cases to be heard by expert juries. [13890]

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

Not at present. This is only one of a number of possible approaches which would require careful consideration before any alternative to the current jury system was adopted.

Anonymity Orders

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 31 January 1996, Official Report, column 749, if the anonymity order by Mr. Justice Johnson continues indefinitely; and if he will make it Government policy that no dead person's identity can be kept secret. [14040]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: A judgment by the president of the family division on 8 December 1995 confirmed that the order made by Mr. Justice Johnson regarding the anonymity of patient C and other individuals connected with the proceedings should continue beyond patient C's death. The text of the president's two judgments and that of Mr. Justice Johnson in this case are available in the Library of the House.

Questions relating to the anonymity of those involved in proceedings are matters for the court. The court will make its decision based on all the circumstances of the case.

Departmental Publications

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which of his Department's administrative manuals and internal guidance are now made public; and which remain private. [14028]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Department produces a wide range of administrative manuals and internal guidance: 13 are in the public domain and a further 84 are available for public inspection or could be provided on request. A list of these will be made available in the Libraries of both Houses. Guidance on security matters is not available to the public.

Information on the full range of documents used for internal guidance could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

In accordance with the code of practice on access to Govnerment information a charge may be made to cover any additional costs of copies requested for retention.

PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Publications

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister which of his Department's administrative manuals and internal guidance are now made public; and which remain private. [14036]

The Prime Minister: For these purposes my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, on 12 February 1996.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what was the final date on which (a) a Minister and (b) a civil servant delivered information to Lord Justice Scott for his inquiry. [14833]

The Prime Minister: The Government have been in correspondence with Sir Richard Scott's team throughout the period of the inquiry. The Cabinet Office was last asked to provide documents and information to the inquiry on 22 January.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements have been made for civil servants whose actions are discussed by Lord justice Scott to receive copies of his report before its official publications on 15 February. [14840]

The Prime Minister: The Government are in discussion with the inquiry about this.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Prime Minister how many pages of evidence were provided by his office to the Scott inquiry. [14836]

The Prime Minister: My office and the Cabinet Office have provided 6,197 pages of evidence to the Scott inquiry. This figure does not include correspondence between my office or the Cabinet Office and the inquiry or evidence supplied to the inquiry by individual witnesses.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Prime Minister if he (a) has discussed and (b) has authorised his Ministers to discuss media presentation of the Scott inquiry report with (i) newspaper proprietors, (ii) newspaper editors and (iii) governors of the BBC. [13993]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 6 February 1996]: The arrangements agreed by the Government with Sir Richard Scott do not permit anyone outside Government to have access to the report before publication, nor to have the contents of the report disclosed to them. I have made it clear that those arrangements must be adhered to. The only exception at present agreed is that the spokesmen of the leading Opposition parties should have access to the report some hours before publication in accordance with the precedents for weighty reports of this nature. The preparation of the Government's response to the report has been and will be conducted in accordance with those arrangements. Any changes would be made only after consultation with Sir Richard Scott.

Higher Education Institutions

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list each occasion on which he has visited (a) a British university, and (b) another institution of higher education in each of the last five years; and what was the purpose of the visit in each case. [14961]

The Prime Minister: I have visited a range of education establishments and discussed a variety of issues over the past five years.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 13 February. [13608]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 13 February. [13609]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Munitions Dumping

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Prime Minister which Government Department has responsibility for responding to accidents caused by the dumping of munitions in the Beaufort's dyke area. [14920]

The Prime Minister: The response to any particular incident would, in the first instance, be a matter for the relevant emergency services. Any associated departmental responsibility would be determined by the circumstances of the particular incident.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Closed Circuit Television

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the cost effectiveness of municipal CCTV systems in fighting crime. [14224]

Mr. Maclean: The reports we have received from the police and closed circuit television—CCTV —operators confirm that there has been significant reductions in crime and the fear of crime in the areas where CCTV has been introduced. The reductions demonstrate the value of CCTV as a crime prevention measure. The evaluation of the cost effectiveness of individual CCTV schemes is a matter for the system operators.

Mrs. Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his criteria for (i) accepting and (ii) rejecting applications from local authorities for matching funding for CCTV systems. [14142]

Mr. Maclean: Bids to the second Home Office closed circuit television—CCTV—challenge competition will be judged against the criteria set out in the bidding guidance which was issued on 22 November 1995. Copies of the bidding guidance have been placed in the Library.

Blackmail

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions cases of alleged blackmail serious enough to involve arrests by Serious Crime Squad detectives have not led to charges in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [14250]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the divisions of the Metropolitan police by borough with the number of officers per division and population per borough, in the same format as in his answer of 26 March 1993, Official Report, column 763. [14565]

Mr. Maclean: The information in respect of the London boroughs is as follows:

Mary Druhan

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a decision on Mary Druhan's appeal application. [14590]

Mr. Kirkhope: We are working urgently towards reaching a decision in this case.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in the last three years from Justice on the case of Mary Druhan; and what response he has made. [14559]

Mr. Kirkhope: Representations from Justice were received in August 1993, and it has written occasionally with further points since then. In response, we commissioned inquiries by the Metropolitan police, whose report we are now considering.

Prisons

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what account is taken of the cost of Home Office controllers when cost comparisons are made between private and public managed prisons. [14448]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 13 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about what account is taken of the cost of Home Office controllers when cost comparisons are made between private and public managed prisons.

At each privately managed prison there is a controller, deputy controller and secretary. Their costs are included in the Prison Service annual report figures for cost per place and cost per prisoner at each private prison. They were not included in the analysis of comparative costs between private and public managed prisons carried out on 1993–94 figures. They are being included in the re-analysis being carried out in 1994–95 figures.

Smoke Detectors

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on smoke detectors in homes. [14317]

Mr. Sackville: Our policy is to ensure that people are aware of the potentially life saving benefits of smoke alarms and to encourage them to install smoke alarms in their homes and to maintain and test them regularly. Our efforts, and those of fire brigades, have been very successful. Ownership has increased from 9 per cent. in 1987 to its present figure of 74 per cent. of all households.

Police Officers (Bosnia)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are being made to protect the position of police officers who volunteer for military duty in Bosnia through their membership of the Territorial Army, with particular reference to pensions, pay increments, annual leave, injury pensions and lump sum payments and death gratuities. [142394]

Mr. Maclean: It is for chief constables to decide whether to allow officers leave of absence to volunteer for military duty in Bosnia.

Police officers who are members of Her Majesty's reserve forces and who are compulsorily called up for military service would be able to count such military service towards pension, pay increments and annual leave. They would also be eligible to have any shortfall in their military pay relative to their police pay made up and, provided they are members of the police pensions scheme, they would be covered by the "service men" provision—part I—of the police pension regulations.

Police officers who are members of the reserve forces and who volunteer for military duty need first to obtain the permission of their chief constable and, depending on the terms under which any leave of absence is approved, may be able to count the military service towards pension, pay increments and annual leave. Officers who are given approval to volunteer for military service, like those who might be compulsorily called up, are covered by the "service men" provisions of the police pensions regulations.

London Fire Brigade

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the expected average additional time that will elapse prior to the arrival of an appliance of the London fire brigade at a fire if he accepts the proposals for reduced fire cover in London. [14332]

Mr. Sackville: No requests have been received by the Home Office from the London fire and civil defence authority to reduce levels of fire cover and therefore there is no basis on which to make such an estimate.

Overloaded Lorries

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the levels of fines applicable to lorry operators convicted of overloading their vehicles; and when the levels were last reviewed. [14447]

Mr. Maclean: The Government are satisfied that the penalties for offences relating to overloaded goods vehicles are adequate. Driving an overloaded goods vehicle carries a maximum sentence of a £5,000 fine. This level of fine was set in 1991 and has not been reviewed since because there is no evidence that the courts have found it too low.

Fire Service

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time fire appliances currently take to reach household fires in Hendon NW4. [14756]

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not available centrally in the form requested.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many entry clearance applications by husbands, wives or fiancé(e)s were refused (a) partly and (b) wholly on primary purpose grounds in 1994. [14799]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information for the Indian sub-continent—ISC—is given in the table. Corresponding information for non-ISC posts is not collected centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Initial refusals of entry clearance on primary purpose grounds for spouses and fiance(e)s in the Indian sub-continent 1994

Numbers[1]

	Solely on primary purpose grounds	Partly on primary purpose grounds
Husbands	750	940
Wives	270	180
Male fiances	90	60
Female fiancees	60	20

Terrorist Groups

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy towards United Kingdom-based groups which issue statements of support for middle east terrorist organisations. [14650]

Mr. Howard: The Government deplore all statements of support for terrorist organisations. The police and the Security Service attach a high priority to countering any active support in the United Kingdom for terrorist groups.

Where there is evidence of involvement in terrorist, action will be taken against individuals, either under the criminal law, supported as necessary by the prevention of terrorism legislation, or under immigration Act powers.

Secure Training Centres

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the first secure training centres to be opened for young offenders; and if he will make a statement. [14651]

Mr. Maclean: Tender proposals for the provision of the first two secure training centres at Gringley, Nottinghamshire and Cookham wood, Kent, were received on 12 June 1995. Negotiations are continuing with the tenderers and as part of this process tenderers are being asked to revise certain aspects of their bids prior to the final assessment and selection of preferred bidders. Contracts will be signed as soon as possible once the terms of the contractual agreement have been finalised. The opening dates have not yet been settled: they will be specified in the signed contract.

Gaming Act 1968

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he is proposing to complete his review of the workings of the Gaming Act 1968; and if he will make a statement. [14932]

Mr. Kirkhope: I refer my hon. and learned Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Howarth) on 26 January, Official Report, column 470.

Prisoners (Visits)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances a visit to a prisoner by a person whose name appears on a correct visiting order (a) may be disallowed and (b) may be considered a threat to security at the prison; and if he will make a statement. [14497]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 13 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the refusal of visits to prisoners.

In general, providing the prisoner is still in that prison and able and willing to receive visitors, bona fide visitors appearing during visiting hours on the day specified will only be denied access for the reasons set out in Standing Order 5A or section 40 and 69 of the Prison Service Manual on Security, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

A visitor would be considered a threat to security if it was thought they were planning to procure the escape of any prisoner or to supply weapons or equipment to assist in an escape. They would be considered a threat to good order and disciple if, for example, it was thought they were trying to smuggle drugs or other illicit items into the prison.

Prosecutions of Police Officers

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many private prosecutions against police officers have been brought in each year since 1970; how many of these cases each year the police officers (a) won and (b) lost; how many they settled out of court; and how much they paid out each year (i) in damages and (ii) in legal costs. [14962]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally.

Private Security Industry

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to publish the response to the first report of the Home Affairs Committee of Session 1994–95, HC17, on the private security industry. [15134]

Mr. Maclean: We have responded to many of the recommendations made by the Select Committee; a copy of my right hon. and learned Friend's reply has been placed in the Library. We will answer the Committee's recommendations on regulation for part of the industry as soon as possible.

Immigration

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend to the Immigration Service decisions regarding the removal of illegal entrants. [15311]

Mr. Kirkhope: At present, designated senior officers in the immigration service may authorise the removal of certain categories of people who have entered the United Kingdom illegally while other cases are referred to Ministers for authority to remove. In future, designated senior officers will be responsible for authorising removal in all cases other than those in which special features, such as Parliamentary interest or a high level of public concern about a case, indicate that they should be referred to Ministers for decision.

The existing arrangements under which Ministers personally authorise and sign orders requiring a person's deportation from the United Kingdom are unaffected by these changes.

Pregnant Women Prisoners

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the professional bodies consulted by (a) Ministers, (b) officials in his Department and (c) officers of the Prison Service in respect of its rules and practices concerning use of chains and similar equipment for (i) pregnant women, (ii) those in or approaching labour and (iii) those giving birth that applied prior to his oral statement of 18 January; and if he will place a copy of those rules in the Library. [11543]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 23 January 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Nigel Spearing, dated 13 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about handcuffing of women.

The instructions which applied before the Home Secretary's announcement on 18 January are contained in sections 53 and 60 of the Manual on Security, copies of which are already held in the Library of the House. They were last amended in April 1995.

No formal external consultation took place prior to the drawing up of the April 1995 instructions. In the context of the changes made and announced on 18 January I had extensive consultation with the Royal College of Midwives.

On the basis of their advice, and after consultation with Ministers, I made the changes which were announced by the Home Secretary on 18 January.

Prisons (Staffing)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give staff figures for each prison establishment showing the number of (a) unified grade staff, (b) governor grade staff, (c) auxiliary grades and (d) civilian staff. [12767]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 30 January 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 13 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the grade breakdown of staff in each prison establishment.

The information requested, as at 26 January 1996 is shown in the attached table. Prison Service staff at privately managed prisons have been included. Unified grade totals include officers working within the various specialisms, for example healthcare. Auxiliary grades include night patrols, prison auxiliaries and temporary officers. Civilian grades include all other staff working in establishments.

Fire Service College

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish his reasons to the report on the future of the Fire Service College. [14669]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 12 February 1996]: The Fire Service College will continue as a next steps agency operating as a trading fund. A review of possible alternative options for the college's future status and financial structure was completed in June 1995. Since then, further work has been commissioned. An announcement will be made when this work has been completed and considered.

Secure Training Centres

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 6 February, Official Report, column 114, how much money he has allocated to build the first two secure training centres. [14825]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 12 February 1996]: Secure training centres will be provided under the terms of the Government's private finance initiative. The capital costs of construction will be met by the private sector contractor. Contract payments made by the Home Office will allow private sector providers to meet the operating and maintenance costs and capital financing costs as well as provide a return on their investment. For each centre, contract payments will begin when all available places are ready for use. The precise level of payments will depend on the results of the competitive tendering exercise.

Addict Index

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current annual cost to his Department of the addict index; what other drug databases his Department operates; what plans he has to ensure the continuing viability of the addict index; and if he will make a statement. [14243]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 12 February 1996]: The estimated cost of the addicts index for 1995–96 is approximately £282,000. The Home Office collates information on police and customs drug seizures and court proceedings for drug-related offences from the drugs self-report component of the British crime survey—being developed as a new indicator of the prevalence of drug misuse—and on companies licensed to trade in drugs controlled under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

Crime Victims

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines his Department issues concerning police relations with victims of crime from vulnerable groups; and if he will make a statement. [14245]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 12 February 1996]: Guidance has been issued to the police on the treatment of a wide range of victims of crime, including victims of sexual offences, child abuse and domestic violence.

The victim's charter, published in 1990, sets some 17 standards for the police to aim for in their treatment of victims of crime. We aim to publish a new victim's charter in April, which will define more clearly the minimum standards of service victims can expect from the police and the other criminal justice agencies.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the initiatives taken by police forces in England and Wales to provide protection for vulnerable victims of crime; and if he will make a statement. [14249]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 12 February 1996]: The police give a high priority to the protection and safeguarding of victims, witnesses, and other vulnerable persons. The police research group published a report on witness intimidation in 1994, and the crime committee of the Association of Chief Police Officers has encouraged its members to have regard to the report's recommendations. National performance indicators for the police service require forces to develop strategies for reducing repeat victimisation.

Cleared-up Crime

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the definition of a cleared-up crime for official statistical purposes; and what changes have been made to the definition over the last five years. [14247]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 12 February 1996]: An offence can be recorded as cleared up if any of the conditions listed are met. There have been no changes in the last five years.

An offence is cleared up when:

1. a person has been charged or summonsed for the offence, irrespective of any subsequent acquittal;
2. the offence has been taken into consideration by the court or if the unequivocal consent of the offender is obtained by way of statement of admission and desire to have further offences taken into consideration;
3. the offender has been proceeded against in another police force area for the offence;
4. the offender dies before proceedings could be initiated or completed;

5. the offender has been cautioned by the police;

6. the offender is ill and is unlikely to recover or is too senile or too mentally disturbed for proceedings to be taken;

7. the complainant or an essential witness is dead and the proceedings cannot be pursued;

8. the guilt of the offender is clear but the victim refuses, or is permanently unable, or if a juvenile is not permitted, to give evidence;

9. the offender admits the offence but it is decided that no useful purpose would be served by proceeding with the charge;

10. it is ascertained that an offence has been committed by a child under the age of criminal responsibility;

11. an offence is admitted by a juvenile of the age of criminal responsibility and police take no action other than reporting the particulars to a local authority for action under the Children and Young Persons Act 1969;

12. There is sufficient evidence to charge the offender but

(a) The police prosecuting department, the Crown Prosecution Service or a senior police officer decides that no useful purpose would be served by proceeding with the charge; or

(b) for summary offences of unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle or criminal damage value over £20 the time limit of six months for commencing prosecution has been exceeded.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of recorded crime (a) resulted in a conviction and (b) was cleared-up in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [14248]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 12 February 1996]: Information on the percentage of offenders committed which result in a conviction is published on page 25 of "Digest 3—Information on the Criminal Justice System in England and Wales". Information for other years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information on the percentage of recorded offences cleared up is published in table 2.8 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1994". Copies of both these publications are available in the Library.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the (a) the number of convictions and (b) the number of cleared-up crimes, for each category of offence, for each of the last five years;and if he will make a statement. [14276]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 12 February 1996]: Information on the number of notifiable offences cleared up by offence groups and on the number of offenders found guilty for all types of offence by main offence group is published in tables 2.8 and 5.8 respectively of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1994", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Immigration Officers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the regulations relating to the scales for, and payment of, performance-related pay for immigration officers posted at United Kingdom ports; and if he will make a statement. [14493]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 12 February 1996]: Immigration Officers receive performance pay in accordance with the national 1992 pay agreements and subsequent pay settlements negotiated between the Treasury and the National Union of Civil and Public Servants. The placing of these papers in the Library is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Certain discretionary arrangements were negotiated within my Department and published in a departmental notice, a copy of which I have arranged to place in the Library.

Prison Population

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of the prison population in England and Wales is currently held in (a) secure prisons and (b) open prisons and related establishments; [14001]

(2) how many prisoners are currently held in open prisons and related establishments. [14003]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answers 12 February 1996]: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Archy Kirkwood, dated 13 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about how many prisoners are currently held in open prisons and related establishments; and what proportion of the prison population in England and Wales is currently held in (a) secure prisons and (b) open prisons and related establishments.

On 7 February 1996 the prison population in England and Wales was 52,437. On that date 48,630 prisoners, representing 92.7% of the total population, were held in closed establishments and 3,807, 7.3% of the population, in open establishments.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Family Planning

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 13 December, Official Report, columns 665–66, what were the criteria used for awarding grants to non-governmental organisations applying for funding for reproductive health projects in (a) 1994 and (b) 1995. [14801]

Mr. Hanley: Grants were awarded for activities which addressed reproductive health needs in the community. The criteria included (i) the innovative content of proposals and prospects for their replication, (ii) the capability and experience of the organisation seeking funds, (iii) the overall quality of the project design, (iv) relevance of the project to ODA's reproductive health aims, (v) the cost of the project in relation to anticipated achievement and (vi) availability of funds.

Expenditure Review

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recommendations contained in the fundamental expenditure review of the Overseas Development Administration. [15312]

Mr. Hanley: The fundamental expenditure review of the ODA was thorough and wide ranging. It involved consultation with many of our principal partners. We deposited the report in the Libraries of the House in December and it is available also from the ODA.

The FER's conclusions were recommendations only. Many built on work already in progress. The Government have taken into account Members' views expressed in the debates on development on 30 January and 7 February. The Government's response to the key recommendations is as follows.

First and foremost, the FER confirmed the continuing need for the UK to provide substantial flows of concessional aid; and recommended that the ODA should retain responsibility for bilateral and multilateral aid. The Government strongly endorse both recommendations, which underpin our commitment to remain a major donor.

The review recommends clarification of the purpose of the aid programme by a better definition of its basic purpose and aims. The Government have agreed a revised mission statement which defines the ODA's overriding purpose, as well as the aims to be pursued.

The new mission statement is as follows:

> ODA's purpose is to improve the quality of life of people in poorer countries by contributing to sustainable development and reducing poverty and suffering.
>
> To this end ODA will aim:
> to encourage sound development policies, efficient markets and good government;
> to help people achieve better education and health and to widen opportunities—particularly for women;
> to enhance productive capacity and to conserve the environment; and
> to promote international policies for sustainable development and enhance the effectiveness of multilateral development institutions.

The FER recommended that ODA's country programme resources should be more concentrated in order to enhance impact. The Government agree with this principle. A larger proportion of our bilateral resources will be allocated to those countries which need it most, can use it effectively and where it will have a real impact. Account will also be taken of Britain's wider national interests. There will be no sudden change. Already the 20 largest recipients accounted for some 69 per cent. of planned country programme expenditure in the last financial year, and on current plans we expect this proportion to increase to some 73 per cent. by 1998–99. There is no specific target percentage nor will the list of the largest recipients necessarily be exactly the same from year to year—though concentration on the poorer countries in Africa and Asia will continue.

The Government will continue to assist a wide variety of other countries through bilateral country aid programmes. At the same time we will increase the number of countries where a direct aid relationship is sustained through heads of mission schemes rather than a traditional bilateral country aid programme. In addition, we shall maintain worthwhile aid relationship through multilateral channels and through other non-country bilateral programmes, including research, scholarships, volunteers' and our financial support for British non-governmental organisations.

At the same time, the ODA will sharpen its focus even further on activities which contribute directly to its aims. The FER made a number of sensible recommendations to enhance the strategic planning process within the ODA. Better corporate and business planning has begun, strengthening the important links in all cases between the objectives and the resources of all kinds used to achieve them.

The United Kingdom makes an increasing contribution through multilateral aid. The FER recommended strengthening our role in multilateral organisations; improving linkages to our bilateral aid; and securing better value. The Government accept these recommendations. The ODA will continue to have lead policy and financial responsibility for those multilateral programmes which are a charge to the aid budget. We will reinforce our efforts to improve the quality and focus of programmes managed by multilateral organisations. This will include reform in the UN agencies as well as continuing work in Brussels. The ODA will play a still greater role in promoting international policies for sustainable development and enhancing the effectiveness of multilateral development institutions.

The FER made a number of recommendations concerned essentially with internal management processes. All have a common purpose: to improve further the effectiveness of the ODA, to increase impact, and to obtain better value for money. The majority have been accepted and are now being implemented.

Very few recommendations were not accepted. Notwithstanding the recommendations in the FER, the geographical Minister of State in the Foreign Office will continue to have formal responsibility for the joint assistance units managing programmes in the former Soviet Union and east and central Europe; and the ODA will continue to make a grant in aid to the British Council.

The FER was followed and complemented by a senior management review. Changes recommended include a restructuring of responsibility at senior management level and the designation of a senior manager to promote each of the four aims.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Computer Networks

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list all (a) Internet and (b) other computer network sites or bulletin boards operated by his Department or containing information supplied by his Department, indicating for each site or bulletin board (i) the inaugural date, (ii) the timetable and policy in respect of updates, (iii) the Internet, or other network, address and (iv) to whom the site or board is currently made available and the criteria which must be fulfilled by applicants for access. [14228]

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service makes press notices available to the public via the Internet using the Central Office of Information's service on the world wide web. The information requested is as follows:

(i) 19 April 1995.

(ii) Press notices from the Crown Prosecution Service remain on the Internet until the information becomes out of date.

(iii) http://www.coi.gov.uk/coi/depts/GCP/GCP.html.

(iv) All subscribers to the Internet have access to the press notices.

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments since 1987, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14087]

The Solicitor-General: There have been no such sales by departments for which the Attorney-General is responsible.

Harassment

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Attorney-General how many people have been prosecuted for stalking under the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 as it relates to crimes of intentional harassment. [14464]

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

Information on cautioning and court proceedings data for offences of "Causing intentional harassment, alarm or distress" under section 154 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 will not be available until autumn 1996.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Attorney-General (1) on how many occasions, in each year since 1966, Ministers have signed public interest immunity certificates in criminal trials; [15099]

(2) on how many occasions, in each year since 1979, public interest has been claimed in the courts in criminal cases. [15100]

The Attorney-General: The information requested is not collected centrally either by Government or by individual prosecuting authorities. My answer is therefore confined to the three prosecuting authorities for which I have ministerial responsibility. On the basis of the best information currently available, the number of criminal cases in which public interest immunity certificates are known to have been used is as follows:

	CPS[1]	SFO[1]	DPP(NI)
1987	1	—	—
1988	—	—	—
1989	2	1	—
1990	1	1	—
1991	—	1	—
1992	2	—	1
1993	4	—	—
1994	3	1	—
1995	5	—	1

[1] The Crown Prosecution Service became operational in 1986 and the Serious Fraud Office in 1988.

The number of cases in which public interest immunity is claimed without ministerial certificate—for example, in relation to informants which is the regular practice—is not recorded centrally.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ulster-Scots Language

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make representations to the Arts Council to (a) accord the Ulster-Scots language the same recognition in future publications as it did to the Irish language on its final strategy report and (b) develop a similar approach to Ulster-Scots as it has to Irish in its strategy for the arts in Northern Ireland. [12825]

Mr. Ancram: No. The Arts Council for Northern Ireland is aware that the Government expect it to accord recognition to Ulster-Scots arts, just as the Scottish Arts Council does for work in the Scots language.

Mitchell Commission

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost of the Mitchell Commission; and what percentage of this was paid by (a) Her Majesty's Government and (b) the Irish Government. [14000]

Sir John Wheeler: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for North Down (Mr. McCartney) on 5 February 1996, Official Report, column 75.

Irish Language

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has made to the Irish Government or the European Commission to have the rules governing Irish language qualifications for teaching appointments rescinded. [14547]

Mr. Ancram: This has been the subject of occasional discussion between officials from each jurisdiction. I am pleased to note that Mrs. Bhreathnach recently announced new provisions which ease the requirement in certain circumstances.

School Transport (Belfast)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will create a special beneficial home-to-school free transport category for Belfast city centre grammar schools whose catchment area necessarily includes Greater Belfast and North Down; and if he will make a statement. [14548]

Mr. Ancram: No. Following consultation on proposals for revising the school transport arrangements, I have decided that there should be no change in the present arrangements in the school year beginning next September. My Department will, however, be writing to education and library boards about the arrangements for taking forward further detailed consideration of the options for reducing expenditure on home-to-school transport, including consultation with schools and other interests.

Student Grants

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applicants for student awards for fees and maintenance payments have been recently turned down because parents do not meet the three-year residency rule; and if he will consider an alternative rule for United Kingdom citizens who have spent the majority of the previous two decades within the United Kingdom. [14549]

Mr. Ancram: In the 1995–96 academic year 36 applicants for mandatory and discretionary awards administered by the education and library boards were ineligible because of the residency rule. No applicants were ineligible on these grounds for the postgraduate awards made by the Department.

There are no plans to change the residence requirements, which are common throughout the United Kingdom.

Unemployment

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of unemployed persons are (a) Protestant, (b) Catholic and (c) other; what are the ratios between the categories; and what number and percentage of each were (i) male and (ii) female. [14550]

Sir John Wheeler: The 1991 census of population recorded information on the religion and employment status of individuals and results are available for the main denominations separately. Information is not presented on an amalgamated Protestant category as a specific question on this was not included in the census and the large number of small religions recorded make precise classification difficult. A comprehensive list of denominations included in the "other denominations" category is recorded on page xvi of the Northern Ireland census 1991 religion report. Requests for tables on amalgamations of individual religious denominations can be produced by the census office for Northern Ireland based on specifications supplied by users. Information on the main denominations and other groups approximating most closely that requested is provided in the table.

[1] The unemployment rates are calculated by expressing the number recorded as economically active out of employment as a percentage of the total economically active.

Burglary

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many police cautions for burglary have been given in the last five years. [14552]

Sir John Wheeler: I very much regret that the information is not at present available in the form requested. I am seeking to establish the means within the Royal Ulster Constabulary to ensure that it is available in future.

Training and Employment Agency

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the future of the Training and Employment Agency. [15310]

Mr. Ancram: A prior options review and an evaluation of the Training and Employment Agency have been completed. On the basis of these Ministers concluded that the agency should continue as a next steps agency with the same operation responsibilities for a further five years. In November 1995, Ministers agreed a new framework document for the agency which, among other things, commits the agency to seeking further involvement of the private sector in the delivery of programmes and services. The new framework document has now been printed and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Sport (Young People)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide a replacement grant to the Northern Ireland Boys' Football Association in place of that withdrawn by the Sports Council; and if he will meet a delegation from the Sports Council to discuss its recent report on the organisational needs of ungranted non-school boys' football. [13803]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 8 February 1996]: The provision of grant is a matter for the Sports Council.

The council has advised that it has not sought a meeting, nor has it produced a report.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the criteria used by Price Waterhouse to argue for the abolition of the team grant in its review of the junior sports club scheme. [13804]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 8 February 1996]: Decisions in the light of the Price Waterhouse report were a matter for the Sports Council, and were taken on the basis that the promotion of sport for young people could be undertaken more effectively and efficiently by other means. Support for youth football is being maintained, but has been refocused to increase effectiveness and value for money.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Ethical Investment Criteria

Mr. Flynn: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, when the Church Commissioners decided that they would invest in companies producing armaments where armaments make up less than 30 per cent. of a company's portfolio; on what occasions in the last five years the cut-off point has been altered; and what it was previously. [14500]

Mr. Alison: The commissioners do not operate this policy through the application of percentages. Those companies in which we invest and which derive a significant proportion of business from armaments or any of the other banned categories—tobacco, newspapers, gambling, brewing and distilling—are automatically put on the agenda for review by the ethical working group.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what talks the Church Commissioners have held with the General Electric Company; what was the subject of the talks; and what conclusions were reached. [14499]

Mr. Alison: The commissioners met David Newlands, finance director of GEC, on 19 July 1995 to discuss the company's role in the defence industry and to gain a clearer understanding of its corporate strategy.

We were informed that GEC is a multi-product company employing 86,000 people and assured that all military equipment sales made by GEC were to the Her Majesty's Government or sponsored by Her Majesty's Government and that they were subject to rigorous controls. The equipment is used in the defence of our country, our NATO partners and allies. Its corporate governance standards were deemed to be high.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, which (a) armaments companies and (b) other companies the Church Commissioners have disinvested from, or decided not to invest in, because of their ethical policies in the last five years. [14498]

Mr. Alison: The commissioners refrain from investing in any company whose main business is in armaments, newspapers, gambling, brewing and distilling.

A number of companies with defence interests, such as Babcock International, British Aerospace, Cobham, Hunting, Racal Electronics, Rolls-Royce, Serco, Smiths Industries, Vickers, Vosper Thornycroft, are excluded from the portfolio for this reason. The commissioners have not disinvested over the last five years from any companies with defence interests held within the portfolio, and therefore are meeting the "main business" criterion, on ethical grounds.

In answer to (b), the commissioners disinvested from British Sky Broadcasting in November 1995 following the company's decision to promote and broadcast the Playboy TV channel.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the total amount of Government funding currently provided to the TECs. [14277]

Mr. Paice: The total amount of funding provided to training and enterprise councils by the Department in 1995–96 is £1.216 billion. The Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment also provide TECs with additional Government funding.

The responsibility for TECs in Wales lies with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the total annual cost to the Exchequer of the running of the training and enterprise councils. [14466]

Mr. Paice: The Department does not collect this information. Training and enterprise councils are private companies. The Department makes a contribution to the council's administration costs. In 1995–96 the contribution is £126 million.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she expects to reach an agreement with training and enterprise councils about their operating agreement for 1996–97. [15081]

Mr. Paice: The published agreement will be with training and enterprise councils by the third week of February. Negotiations with TECs on budgets and targets for 1996–97 are progressing. Officials from the Department expect to sign agreements with TECs by 25 March 1996, the start of the new contract year.

School League Tables (Yorkshire)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will set out the league tables of achievement for the schools in the Yorkshire counties. [14141]

Mr. Paice: The annual secondary school performance tables published by the Department list schools alphabetically rather than in order of achievement. Copies of the performance tables for the Yorkshire area are in the public domain and are available in the Library.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if new asylum seekers will qualify for the same concessionary fee status as asylum seekers in receipt of benefit under the new regulations; [14478]

(2) what estimate she has made of the financial impact on further education colleges required to cease claiming recurrent funding from the Further Education Funding Council for those asylum seekers with concessionary fees who are no longer eligible for income support after 5 February; [14479]

(3) how many asylum seekers are currently receiving concessionary fees and FEFC funding for part-time courses; and if these arrangements will continue when the new regulations come into force. [14477]

Mr. Paice: The FEFC has only recently begun to collect separate data on asylum seekers eligible for student fee remission, so it is not at present possible to give the number of those currently benefiting from fee remission.

It is estimated that the number of students likely to be affected by the change in regulations will be very small. However, I understand that the FEFC has decided that if any further education colleges are seriously affected by the loss of recurrent funding from this source it will consider their cases sympathetically.

Arrangements for fee remission for asylum seekers studying at FE colleges are a matter for the FEFC, and I am asking the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Further Education Funding Council

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how much each region has received from the FEFC each year since its formation; [14518]

(2) how many colleges are funded by the FEFC in each region. [14519]

Mr. Paice: Details of the allocation of funding to colleges, and the number of FEFC-funded colleges in each region are matters for the Further Education Funding Council. I am therefore asking the council's chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much it costs annually to run the Further Education Funding Council. [14517]

Mr. Paice: The amounts paid to the council to cover running costs in each financial year from 1992–93 to 1994–5 are as follows:

Financial Year

1992–93: £4.3 million

1993–94: £18.8 million

1994–95: £23.7 million.

In the current financial year there is provision of £24.2 million to cover the council's running costs.

The council's running costs are expected to be lower in subsequent years. Estimated totals for 1996–97 to 1998–99 are as follows:

Financial Year

1996–97: £23.6 million

1997–98: £23.0 million

1998–99: £23.0 million.

Pupils' Performance Tables

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to use value added criteria in her proposed performance tables for 11-year-olds. [14482]

Mr. Robin Squire: I have asked the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority to report on the potential of different models of value added at key stages 2 and 4. It expects to do so by December 1996. The possibility of including value added measures in primary school tables, at some point, will be addressed in the light of that report.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she will publish the performance tables for 11-year-olds in national assessment tests; in what format the information will be published; and if she will make a statement. [14481]

Mr. Squire: I intend to publish this summer's assessment results for 11-year-olds in school performance tables early in 1997. I shall consult in due course on the format of the tables.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many cases the Equal Opportunities Commission have brought before a tribunal where there has been no formal complaint in each of the last five years. [14411]

Mrs. Gillan: The Equal Opportunities Commission has no power to bring complaints to an industrial tribunal in its own name on behalf of an individual alleging sex discrimination.

The Equal Opportunities Commission has such power in respect of complaints about discriminatory advertising, instructions to discriminate and pressure to discriminate. The number of cases where proceedings in these categories have been instituted are shown in the following table:

Year	Number of cases
1992	2
1993	0
1994	3
1995	6

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what guidelines have been issued to the Equal Opportunities Commission in respect of cases where job applicants have failed to comply with the jobseeker's scheme; [14412]

(2) what guidelines have been issued to the Equal Opportunities Commission in respect of pursuing cases in the absence of a complaint (a) in general and (b) in respect of small businesses. [14410]

Mrs. Gillan: The Equal Opportunities Commission is an independent body which decides what cases to pursue with reference to its statutory duties to work toward the elimination of discrimination and to promote equality of opportunity between men and women generally. The Government have not issued guidelines in respect of pursuing cases.

Access to Work

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what factors led her to reduce her Department's expenditure for disbursement via the access to work scheme for disabled employees; and what estimate she has made of the number of persons in employment on account of this scheme whose employment will be terminated by the planned reductions. [14761]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Nigel Spearing, dated 13 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the expenditure on Access to Work; and for an estimate of the number of people, in employment on account of the programme, whose employment will consequently be terminated.

The expenditure on Access to Work has not been reduced. The Secretary of State announced on 14 December that additional funds had been allocated to meet the demand made on the programme this year. You may know that by the end of December some 12,000 people had been helped—close to 2,000 more than for the whole of 1994/95.

We are continuing to support people in employment to whom we have an existing commitment and I would not expect there to be any change to their employment position.

I hope this is helpful.

Modern Apprenticeship Scheme

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people are now on the modern apprenticeship scheme. [15080]

Mr. Paice: The number of modern apprentices in England and Wales is currently well over 15,000. Because the numbers are growing rapidly, it is not possible to give a precise up-to-the-minute figure.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what have been the costs to date of the advertising campaign to promote the modern apprenticeship scheme; and what is the estimate of the total cost. [15079]

Mr. Paice: There have been two phases of advertising promotion modern apprenticeships in the year 1995–96. The first phase ran from September to December 1995 at a cost of £2.425 million.

The second phase runs throughout February this year. The estimated cost is £1.274 million.

The estimate of the total costs is £3.699 million.

Training for Work

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the cost incurred in carrying out the evaluation of training for work funding pilots. [15078]

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to him on 15 January 1996. Official Report, Column 475.

Nursery Education

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list for each of the areas of local education authorities for (a) Wandsworth, (b) Westminster, (c) Kensington and Chelsea and (d) Norfolk, (i) the number of three and four year olds, (ii) the number receiving nursery education in nursery schools or classes maintained by the authority, (iii) the number in nursery schools or classes not maintained by the education authority and (iv) (ii) and (iii) as a percentage of (i). [15101]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is shown in the table:

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of Thursday 8 February, Official Report, column 321, concerning responses to the advertised contract for administering the proposed voucher system, if she will place a list of the unsuccessful applicants in the Library. [15102]

Mr. Robin Squire: A list has been placed in the Library of the House.

Thefts

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the cost and number of items of equipment and furniture that have been stolen or are otherwise unaccounted for from each region of the former Department of Employment in each of the past five years, listing by name such items valued at £5,000 or more. [13360]

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 2 February 1996]: The Employment Department group kept site records of each incident of loss, which were subject to audit; these records included details of the numbers of items lost in each incident, and the nature of the loss—that is, theft or other hostile action, or other causes. However, the large majority of these records are retained regionally or locally. It would be disproportionately costly and time consuming to search these records to provide the information on a regional basis.

Summary reports were made to the head offices of the former Employment Department and its agencies for central recording.

These reports included a valuation of the loss, which was based on either the cost of the item at purchase or the estimated value at the time of the loss or the replacement cost; the measure chosen in each case was the one giving the most accurate picture of the loss to the Department. It was not always appropriate for the summaries to show the number and details of items of equipment involved in an incident.

I am able to provide the following information about items of equipment stolen or unaccounted for in the last five financial years. One incident involving loss of furniture is recorded. No items of equipment valued individually at £5,000 or more are recorded as lost. The following table gives the information available:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Internet

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 711, if he will make a statement on his Department's current policy in respect of regulation of the Internet and encryption. [12610]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Internet represents a significant range of commercial opportunities and it is important for the competitiveness of the UK economy that business take full advantage of it. It is crucial that the regulatory framework should not discourage this.

Although child pornography and obscenity are covered by the same laws on the Internet as in any other media—recent prosecutions have been encouraging—the Government recognise that there are legitimate concerns about the distribution of unsuitable material over the Internet. The Government consider that a voluntary approach is now most likely to be effective in addressing these issues further. Constructive discussions have been held with service providers to establish how action by them can help control access to undesirable material and this will be pursued over the coming months.

On encryption, I described the consideration being given to the provision of encrypted services on public networks in the reply I gave my hon. Friend on 23 October 1995, Official Report, columns 421–22. Discussions within Government and within Europe are continuing.

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 13 December, Official Report, column 639, what further progress has been made in assessing the feasibility of regulating the content of material disseminated via the Internet; and if he will make a statement. [13402]

Mr. Taylor: DTI and Home Office officials have had a constructive meeting with Internet service providers to discuss concerns about the availability of pornographic material on the Internet, and ways of controlling access by children and young people to such material. The Government consider that a voluntary approach is most likely to be effective in addressing the problem and will be pursuing this with service providers over the coming months. There are service providers who will assist parents and schools in providing restricted access, but this is a matter for individuals to pursue.

Departmental Publications

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of his Department's administrative manuals and internal guidance are now made public; and which remain private. [14024]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The administrative manuals and internal guidance that my Department has already made available to the public are as listed. Material that has not been made public can be identified only at disproportionate cost. In line with the code of practice on access to Government information, it is my intention to make available progressively any remaining administrative manuals and internal guidance relating to our dealings with the public.

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments since 1987, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14077]

Mr. Lang: My Department has provided computer-related services to other Departments where they have represented best value for money for the Departments concerned. These arrangements are as follows: financial services for the Department of National Heritage, from 1993 to 1995, and to the Department of Energy, 1987 to 1992, of which computer support was one element. In addition, a number of other Departments and non-departmental public bodies continue to be provided with access to our specialist library systems. The latter services continue to be provided on a repayment basis at a current annual cost of £36,000.

Other users of my Department's computer systems, together with recoverable costs where figures are available, have included:

Sydney Olympics

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 866, what remuneration and expenses are payable to members of the Sydney olympics United Kingdom business task force. [14446]

Mr. Nelson: No remuneration is payable to the members of the task force. Any expenses which the chairman would normally have received will be paid to the British Paralympic Association.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the minimum levels of pay prescribed by each of the wages councils immediately before their abolition; and what were each of these levels of pay as a percentage of (a) average wages in the industry and (b) the national average wage at that time. [14320]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is contained in the table:

	Minimum monthly rate	Minimum rates as percentage of:

Nuclear Accidents

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what account is taken of the level of commercial insurance in setting the nuclear industry's level of liability in respect of a nuclear accident; and what account is taken of inflation; [14560]

(2) at what intervals reviews are conducted on the level of nuclear industry liability in respect of a nuclear accident; and when the next review is planned to take place. [14561]

Mr. Eggar: My Department keeps the level of insurance required to be held by nuclear operators under review. There are no formal review intervals. The most recent increase was in April 1994. The key considerations were to meet the internationally agreed target limit for parties to the Paris convention and the level of commercial insurance then available. There has been no significant change in insurance capacity since that time.

Second-hand Furniture

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take steps to ensure that second-hand furniture may be sold only if it bears a "Fire Resistant" label. [14316]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I do not believe it is necessary specifically to require second-hand furniture to bear labels indicating fire resistance. Since 1 March 1993, the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988, as amended, have prohibited in the UK sale, in the course of a business, of second-hand furniture that does not meet the full requirements of this legislation. Trading standards departments have all the necessary powers to take action against traders who sell non-compliant items.

The regulations also require permanent labels, indicating compliance, to be attached to all new furniture. Purchasers of second-hand furniture should look for these permanently affixed labels.

Electro-magnetic Fields

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he, his Ministers or his civil servants have had about indemnifying the National Grid Company against potential claims relating to electro-magnetic fields and their impact upon communities after privatisation; and if he will make a statement. [14511]

Mr. Page: No discussions have been held or are planned on the question of indemnifying the National Grid Company against potential claims relating to electro-magnetic fields.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reports he has received on the representations made to the United Kingdom ambassador in Dublin by the Irish Minister for Energy, Transport and Communications during their meeting on 6 February to discuss Sellafield. [14844]

Mr. Eggar: The meeting was held at the ambassador's request. Mr. Stagg, the Irish Minister for Energy, Transport and Communications, expressed anxiety about the UK nuclear industry, including operations at Sellafield, following a minor incident there on 2 February. However, as Mr. Stagg recognised in his subsequent statement in the Dail on 8 February, the incident had no radiological or health implications for Ireland nor was there any release of radioactivity to the environment. Mr. Stagg and the ambassador agreed on the importance of continued early notification to the Irish Government of incidents at UK nuclear installations which could affect the Irish environment.

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his timetable for the closure of the Magnox nuclear power stations; and if he will make a statement. [14758]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Government are satisfied that it makes economic sense to continue to generate electricity from the Magnox stations. Decisions relating to closure of Magnox stations are a matter for the operator, subject to the views of the independent regulator, the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate—NII. The safety of all UK Magnox nuclear power stations has been considered in detail by the NII under the long-term safety review—LTSR—programme. Subject to continuing satisfactory results from the routine tests and inspections required under licensing arrangements, and the outcome of periodic safety reviews, the NII has given its agreement for those Magnox stations currently operating to continue to operate.

Medical Research Council

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what council funds have been earmarked for (a) "realising our potential" awards and (b) other schemes in each of the last 10 years (i) in cash terms and (ii) as a proportion of the Medical Research Council budget. [14721]

Mr. Ian Taylor: (a) The following additional allocations have been made to the Medical Research Council—MRC—for the first year costs of new realising our potential awards, ROPA, grants:

	Cash terms (£ million)	Proportion of MRC budget (per cent.)
1996–97	1.0	0.4
1995–96	2.6	0.9
1994–95	1.0	0.4

In 1996–97, the MRC's allocation includes £5.8 million for expenditure on new and on-going ROPA grants, 2.1 per cent. of its total allocation.

(b) Information is not available in the form requested. Over the past 10 years, the MRC was allocated additional funds for the first-year costs of the following specific programmes:

Year	Programme	Cash terms (£ million)	Proportion of MRC budget (Per cent.)
1996–97	Equipment	1.5	0.5
1995–96	Equipment	1.0	0.4
1994–95	Genome and Immunology	2.4	0.9
1993–94	Genome Mapping Programme	2.5	1.0
1992–93	Genetic basis of disease	4.2	1.9
	Neuroscience	1.4	0.6
	Clinical research	1.3	0.6
1991–92	None	—	—
1990–91	None	—	—
1989–90	Equipment at units and institutes	2.9	1.6
	LINK	0.7	0.4
	Human genome mapping	2.3	1.3
	AIDS strategic programme	2.6	1.5
	Macromolecular interaction	2.0	1.1
	Cell biology	3.6	2.0
	National Institute of Medical Research animal accommodation	2.0	1.1
1988–89	Interdisciplinary Research Centre in toxicology	0.3	0.2
	AIDS programme	6.0	4.1
1987–88	None	—	—

In most years, there have in addition been allocations for less specific programmes, such as the support of studentships and responsive mode grants, and allowances for the ongoing costs of new initiatives started in previous years.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much money the Medical Research Council has been allocated in each of the last 10 years. [14720]

Mr. Taylor: The allocations made to the Medical Research Council from the science budget over the last 10 years are as follows:

1996–97: £281.9 million
1995–96: £278.0 million
1994–95: £269.2 million
1993–94: £256.9 million
1992–93: £227.6 million
1991–92: £200.4 million
1990–91: £185.7 million
1989–90: £176.3 million
1988–89: £146.7 million
1987–88: £139.8 million.

Electricité de France

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much has been paid to Electricité de France under the fossil fuel levy from its introduction to date. [14757]

Mr. Page: Electricité de France does not receive payments from the fossil fuel levy.

Research Funding

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on core research funding for the public sector research establishments. [14643]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Public sector research establishments provide a wide variety of scientific and technical services for their customers within Government, the research councils, academia and industry. These are supported by a varying mixture of "core funding" for a range of facilities or services, and funds for specific activities, often awarded on a competitive basis.

The 1993 White Paper "Realising our Potential" made clear our intention that Government research contract should be awarded wherever possible by a competitive process, as a means to ensure an efficient and effective service is obtained. The progress of Departments and research councils in implementing this policy is reported annually in the statistical supplement to the "Forward Look".

Fireworks

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to publish the firework injury statistics relating to November 1995. [14913]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The fireworks injury statistics are collected from all hospital accident and emergency departments in Great Britain. As soon as all this information has been received, collated and checked, which should be some time in March, the figures will be published.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many written parliamentary questions were passed for answer to executive agencies and non-governmental departments in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [14987]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested in respect of the DTI's executive agencies is set out in the list. The answer given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 15 January 1996, Official Report, column 357, explains the basis on which this information has been prepared.

1991–92: 0

1992–93: 4

1993–94: 0

1994–95: 2

1995–96: 1 (Year to date).

No parliamentary questions have been passed to the non-departmental public bodies for which the DTI is responsible.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what power stations have been closed by (a) National Power and (b) PowerGen since privatisation; and what proceeds have accrued to public funds as a result of each sale. [14937]

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Small Business, Industry and Energy to his similar question of 5 February 1996, Official Report, column 18.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion the statutory minimum wage contributes to the average national wage in (a) each EU state, (b) USA, (c) Japan, (d) Australia, (e) Canada and (f) New Zealand. [14973]

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost. Limited and somewhat dated evidence is available from the OECD jobs study, from which the table is taken.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answer given on 15 January, Official Report, columns 476–77, if he will list the figures for purchasing power parity on a common basis, indicating the figures per hour; and if he will give the equivalent figures for minimum wage levels and purchasing power parity exchange rates for (a) Australia, (b) Canada, (c) New Zealand and (d) those EU countries excluded from the answer. [14969]

Mr. Taylor: The table shows the minimum wage in a number of countries, calculated as an hourly rate, and translated into sterling using purchasing power parity exchange rates.

Country	Minimum wage level (hourly rate) Own currency	At PPP[1] exchange rates Sterling
Belgium	BF 249.9	£4.32
France	FF 36.98	£3.61

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of the work force is covered by the minimum wage in respect of (a) Australia, (b) Canada, (c) New Zealand, (d) all EU countries, (e) USA and (f) Japan. [14970]

Mr. Taylor: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Business Links (East Lancashire)

Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects there to be a business link one stop shop in East Lancashire; and if he will make a statement. [15157]

Mr. Page: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 22 January 1996, Official Report, column 4.

Information Society

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the Government's plans for an information society initiative. [15282]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The information society initiative—ISI—was launched by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade today. The initiative is a partnership between industry and Government to help improve the competitiveness of British business in the emerging information-based economy. It represents a coherent and extensive response to the challenge of information and communication technologies which will have a major impact on the way we do business and the way we lead our lives.

The main aim of the ISI is to encourage British companies, particularly small and medium-sized companies, to take full advantage of information and communication technologies. It will help to explain how technology can solve problems for industry and help to win new business. Electronic networks, for example, can give smaller companies access to resources and markets previously only in the domain of large corporations.

UK industries are well placed to take advantage of the information society. We have significant strengths in communications and multimedia which put us ahead of most other European countries, but considerably more needs to be done to apply our skills, to build on our strengths and to sustain competitiveness in a tough global market-place. The ISI, in which the DTI is to invest up to £35 million over the next four years, will play a key role in achieving these objectives.

The ISI provides a comprehensive package of programmes and activities to help UK business into the information society—guidance, road shows, clubs, awards, local support centres, projects grants and technology programmes. It is based on close partnership between Government and industry, with many companies launching complementary programmes.

The campaigns will be integrated with existing DTI services, such as business links. Our specific objective will be to raise awareness and understanding of: multimedia, communications, creativity, technology transfer and technology development. Methods highlighted will include use of the Internet, E-mail, electronic data interchange—EDI—video-conferencing, simultaneous remote access to a computer, CD-ROMS for information storage and marketing, electronic commerce, home shopping and telebanking.

Further details are available at the ISI website, http://www.isis.gov.uk.

Coal Mining Subsidence

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive the Coal Authority's first report on the administration of the coal mining subsidence damage repair and compensation scheme. [15286]

Mr. Page: I have now received this report from the Coal Authority and have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses today.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what account was taken of the costs relating to (a) their mainframe computer, (b) each separate on-line terminal, (c) the annual service fee for the mainframe computer and (d) the annual service charge for each on-line terminal in determining whether to allocate the contract to run the national lottery to Camelot; and what were the figures involved. [14255]

Mr. Sproat: This is an operational matter for Camelot Group plc. The Director General of the National Lottery has licensed Camelot to run the national lottery and he regulates their operations. I have therefore asked the director general to write to the hon. Member, placing copies of his response in the Libraries of the House.

Library Services

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to extend compulsory competitive tendering into library services. [14514]

Mr. Sproat: I am currently considering a number of options for improving efficiency in public libraries, including the option of compulsory competitive tendering. My right hon. Friend will be making a more detailed statement in due course.

Broadcast Sports Rights

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will include the fourth report of the National Heritage Select Committee of Session 1993–94, HC 289, "Sports Sponsorship and Television Coverage", as part of the evidence to her consultation document "Broadcast Sports Rights: Informing the Debate." [14318]

Mr. Sproat: The Government are aware of the views expressed in the National Heritage Select Committee report and will take account of these and other views before making our position clear.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage to which organisations had she sent copies of her document "Broadcast Sports Rights: Informing the Debate". [14313]

Mr. Sproat: In addition to copies deposited to both House Libraries, copies of the discussion paper have been sent directly to the following organisations:

BBC
ITVA
Channel 4
S4C
Channel 5 Broadcasting
BskyB
Cable Communications Association
Sports Councils for England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland
Central Council for Physical Recreation
British Sports Forum
Institute of Sports Sponsorship
Test and County Cricket Board
Football Association
The Premier League
Scottish Football Association
English Rugby Football Union
Welsh Rugby Football Union
Professional Golf Association
Rugby League
Lawn Tennis Association
British Olympic Association
British Athletics Federation
British Paralympic Association
Independent Television Commission
Radio Authority
Office of Fair Trading
Patent Office
Consumers' Association
National Consumers' Council
Voice of the Listener and Viewer.

The paper has also been widely publicised in the media and copies have been sent to any organisation requesting them. A record of these organisations has not been kept.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what is the closing date for the submission of evidence on her consultation document "Broadcast Sports Rights: Informing the Debate"; [14311]

(2) when she plans to announce her conclusions on her consultation document "Broadcast Sports Rights: Informing the Debate". [14312]

Mr. Sproat: The paper is not a formal consultation document, but a discussion paper published to assist the public and parliamentary debate. There is, therefore, no formal end date to a consultation process. However, the Government will make their position clear on Report in the other place.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what measures she will take to assess the opinions of viewers and listeners on her document "Broadcast Sports Rights: Informing the Debate". [14314]

Mr. Sproat: Representatives from the National Consumers Council, the Consumers Association and the Voice of the Listener and Viewer will meet my officials, to discuss both the document and the general issue of broadcast sports rights. My Department has also received a large number of representations from members of the public on this issue.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. McMaster) of 18 January, Official Report, column 726, what are the qualifying criteria that sheltered accommodation must meet to be eligible for a concessionary television licence.. [14592]

Mr. Sproat: In order for residents to qualify for concessionary television licences, sheltered accommodation must be provided or run by a local authority or housing association and must consist of a group of at least four dwellings:

(a) which are provided for occupation by disabled persons, mentally disordered persons or retired persons of pensionable age;

(b) which have been erected or converted for the purposes of such occupation;

(c) for which there is a person whose function is to care for the needs of the persons referred to in paragraph (a) above and who either lives in one of the dwellings within the group or works in that group for at least 30 hours per week; and

(d) which fall within a common and exclusive boundary.

Windsor Castle

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to her answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 625, in which council tax band is the accommodation occupied by the military knights of Windsor. [14538]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 9 February 1996]: The governor's residence is in band G, and the remaining residences are all in band E.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to her answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 693, what accommodation is occupied by each of the 13 military knights at Windsor. [14415]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 9 February 1996]: The accommodation occupied by the military knights is as follows:

One has five bedrooms, two bathrooms, a kitchen, dining room, sitting room and study.

Eleven have three bedrooms, one bathroom, a kitchen, dining room, sitting room and study.

One has two bedrooms, one bathroom, a kitchen with dining area, a sitting room and study.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to her answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 625, if the £1,287 paid in water charges by the 13 military knights of Windsor is a collective charge. [14416]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 9 February 1996]: The water charge of £1,287 is a collective figure; each military knight pays approximately £99.

Royal Residences

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to her answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 626, which members of the royal family occupy each of the royal residences listed. [14891]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 12 February 1996]: Members of the royal family have apartments or residences at each palace as follows:

Buckingham Palace
Her Majesty the Queen

Kensington Palace
The Princess of Wales

The Princess Margaret

The Duke and Duchess of Gloucester

The Prince and Princess Michael of Kent

St James's Palace
The Prince of Wales

The Duke and Duchess of Kent

Princess Alexandra

Clarence House
Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother

Windsor Castle
Her Majesty the Queen.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) of 22 January, Official Report, column 105, if he will list the latest new earnings survey figure for the number of people working up to 29 hours a week earning less than each of the family credit ceilings for households of different composition working between 16 and 29 hours per week; and if he will present similar data for those people working about 30 hours per week using the eligibility level for family credit which were applicable for the year during which the earnings survey was carried out. [12735]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

The "New Earnings Survey" contains no information on family composition and does not provide reliable estimates of the number of employees. The table shows the proportion of all employees in the "New Earnings Survey" who are working 16 to 29 hours and 30 hours or more and have earnings below the family credit thresholds indicated. Entitlement to family credit depends on household income as well as family size and it should therefore be noted that the information provided gives no indication of the proportion of employees who qualify for this benefit. Employees in the categories shown will include members of two-earner couples whose household income will be above the appropriate family credit threshold. The sample will also include employees with no dependant children who would have no entitlement to family credit irrespective of the level of earnings.

Proportion of all employees with earnings below family credit thresholds

	Working 19–29 hours		Working 30 hours or more
Family type	Family credit ceiling (£s per week gross)	Percentage with earnings below threshold	Family credit ceiling (£s per week gross)	Percentage with earnings below threshold
Family with one child under 5	190.00	79.4	212.00	27.7
Family with two children under 11	215.00	82.4	237.00	36.1
Family with two children 11–15	248.00	84.5	270.00	43.9
Family with three children under 11	240.00	85.0	262.00	46.2
Family with three children 11–15	289.50	87.6	311.00	57.5
Family with two children under 11 and two 11–15	298.00	87.9	320.00	59.6

Notes:

1. Family credit ceilings are 1995–96 and are based on the highest amount of net earnings a family can have and still qualify for family credit at the minimum payment of 50p.

2. Net family credit ceilings have been converted to gross earnings to allow comparison with New Earnings Survey data. In this conversion it has been assumed that tax allowances are equal to those of a married person.

3. Percentages relate to all employees in the categories concerned, irrespective of household composition, whose pay for the survey period was unaffected by absence.

Tribunals (Merthyr Tydfil)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate he has made of the number of cases dealt with by local tribunals sitting in Merthyr Tydfil in 1995; [13370]

(2) what estimate his Department has made of the travelling costs of staff and appellants to local tribunal hearings at Merthyr Tydfil in 1995; [13372]

(3) what estimate he has made of the number of cases heard at local tribunals in Merthyr Tydfil in 1995 which required the presence of a member of staff from the local social security office; and in how many cases appellants were represented by the Merthyr citizens advice bureau. [13371]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information required is set out in the table.

War Widows

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many war widows, widowed for a second time, divorced or legally separated (a) have had and (b) are waiting to have the pension restored to them; and what action he is taking to ensure that the restoration programme is being expeditiously implemented. [13578]

Mr. Heald: These are matters for Mr. Kevin Caldwell, the chief executive of the War Pensions Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from K. C. Caldwell to Sir Dudley Smith, dated 13 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about restored War Widows Pensions.

As at 2 February 1996, 12,430 claims have been received of which 7,394 have been notified and had payment arranged. To date 85 have been rejected and 4,951 remain to be decided.

We have created a special section, and have recently allocated and trained an additional 12 staff (making a total of 57) to ensure that by the end of March we will have notified all those from whom we now have claims of the results of their claims and, where appropriate, made arrangements for payment.

I hope this is helpful.

Laryngectomy Patients

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for disability living and mobility allowance there have been from patients who have had laryngectomies; and what percentage of these applications have been successful. [14049]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The precise information requested is not available. Successful claims for disability living allowance are recorded by type of disability. Between March 1993 and November 1995, some 63,000 awards were recorded under the category of malignant diseases, some of which may have involved laryngectomies.

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 835, on benefit savings due to parents with care ceasing to claim income support prior to 1993–94 what was the precise number of weeks used for the multiplier based on the average anticipated duration for benefit claims. [14268]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: Twenty-one.

Income Support

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of income support are currently having money deducted from their benefit to pay back loans from the social fund; and what is the average weekly repayment per borrower. [14516]

Mr. Roger Evans: The latest available information is set out in the table.

Date	Number of income support claimants who have Social Fund repayments deducted	Average weekly payment £
February 1995	'675,000	6.43

Disability (Access Groups)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Minister for Disabled People or his predecessor last met (a) the Access Committee for England and (b) any of the 400 local access groups; what replies have been given to concerns raised at those meetings; and if he will make a statement on the committee's achievements. [14138]

Mr. Burt: My predecessor, now the Secretary of State for Wales, met the Access Committee for England on 14 June 1995.

I and my colleagues in the Departments of the Environment and Health are considering the report of the working group which has been looking at the committee's future role and functions.

We will announce our decisions in due course.

Personal Pensions

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate he has made of the number of employees covered by group personal pension schemes; [14780]

(2) what is the average number of employees of companies which currently offer group personal pension schemes; and what proportion of those entitled to participate do so; [14781]

(3) what are the average earnings of members of group personal pension schemes; [14782]

(4) what assessment he has made of the number of employers who contribute to group personal pension schemes; and what is the average annual contribution per employee. [14784]

Mr. Heald: A group personal pension, GPP, scheme is a grouping of individual personal pensions usually involving a single employer. Official data do not distinguish between personal pensions within a group arrangement and other personal pensions.

Private sector research[1] suggests that around half a million people are covered by upwards of 50,000 GPP arrangements. Some, but not all, of these people will have personal pensions contracted out of the state earnings-related pension scheme, SERPS.

Preliminary results from the survey of employers' pensions provision[2] show that among private sector organisations making some form of pension provision, GPPs were the main arrangement—accounting for the largest percentage of the work force—in just under 20 per cent. of organisations with fewer than 100 employees, falling to just 2 per cent. of organisations with over 500 employees. The survey also shows that 90 per cent. of employers who have arranged a GPP make contributions to their employees' pension.

Information on the participation rates of employees who are offered a GPP arrangement, average earnings of GPP members and the average employer contribution is not available.

Notes:

[1] Income Data Services (IDS) Pensions Bulletin—May 1994.

[2] The survey of employers' pension provision is a Social and Community Planning Research (SCPR)/Policy Studies Institute (PSI) survey of over 1,000 private sector organisations in Great Britain. It is expected that a final report will be published in summer 1996.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the regulatory obstacles to the promotion of group personal pension schemes; and if he will make a statement. [14783]

Mr. Heald: Regulation of the sale and marketing of group personal pension schemes, like all investment products, is governed by the Financial Services Act 1986—FSA.

In response to concerns that employers would become liable under the FSA by offering group schemes, the Department of Social Security, in association with the Securities and Investments Board, produced leaflet PP4; "A guide to the Financial Services Act for employers", which makes it clear that provided they follow certain rules of thumb, employers should be able to offer a group scheme to their employees without infringing the FSA.

Pension Incomes

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 5 February, Official Report, column 51, on pension incomes, if he will give the same information for 1979. [14896]

Mr. Heald: The available information is in the tables.

Maxwell Pension Scheme

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 743, what safeguards are in place to protect the interests of the Exchequer in relation to any merger of a closed Maxwell pension scheme with another pension scheme. [14895]

Mr. Heald: The Secretary of State has indicated to each of the Maxwell pension schemes trustees on a scheme-by-scheme basis, the circumstances under which he is prepared to exercise discretion to defer the collection of state scheme premiums that are payable by them. He will review the position in the light of any proposal from trustees for a merger of a closed Maxwell scheme.

There are detailed agreements with Maxwell pension scheme trustees setting out the conditions under which grants from the Government's £2.5 million emergency funding support package, made available in June 1992, are repayable.

HEALTH

Paediatric Intensive Care Beds

14. Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring he is undertaking of the availability of paediatric intensive care beds. [13317]

Mr. Bowis: For the period until 31 March 1996 we have arranged for Sheffield children's hospital to undertake a daily survey of the availability and occupancy of paediatric intensive care beds in hospitals in England.

Accident and Emergency Provision, Liverpool

15. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received in respect of accident and emergency provision at hospitals in Liverpool. [13318]

Mr. Horam: I have received one letter in the last six months.

Public Appointments

16. Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for altering the procedures for appointments to health authorities and NHS trusts; and if he will make a statement. [13319]

Mr. Malone: We have no plans to alter the appointment procedures which fully meet the recommendations for public appointments set out by the committee on standards in public life under its chairman, Lord Nolan.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many applications have been made for the position of chairmen of the new health authorities; and what percentage of those applicants are women. [14779]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available in the form requested.

Community Care

17. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring he has undertaken of community care provision. [13320]

Mr. Bowis: We monitor community care on a regular basis. This includes work by the social services inspectorate, the regular collection and publication of statistics and longer-term research to evaluate progress.

There is clear evidence both from our own monitoring and from independent reports that community care is a success.

Alternative and Complementary Medicine

18. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the total NHS budget is spent on research and other matters related to alternative and complementary medicine. [13321]

Mr. Horam: The information available centrally does not identify national health service research into alternative and complementary medicine, nor the expenditure by the NHS on the provision of alternative and complementary medicine services.

The Department is currently funding research on complementary therapies in primary care at the medical care research unit at the University of Sheffield, at a cost of around £100,000. This builds on their study published last November about access to complementary therapies through general practice.

Hepatitis C

19. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to report on the departmental study on hepatitis C and its treatment. [13322]

Mr. Horam: There is no single departmental study. The standing group on health technology is taking forward, with the Medical Research Council, work on the effectiveness of alpha-interferon in the early treatment of hepatitis C. The Department is working on establishing a confidential national registry of HCV infection, drawing on information on cases of transfusion infection obtained from its "look back" exercise. It will shortly be seeking research proposals on establishing the prevalence, transmission routes and natural history of HCV infection.

Private Sector Care

20. Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of NHS funding is now used to buy care in the private sector. [13323]

Mr. Malone: In 1994–95 health care purchased by the national health service from non-NHS providers amounted to about 1.6 per cent. of total NHS expenditure.

Emergency Beds

21. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the Royal College of Nursing to discuss the staffing for emergency beds. [13324]

Mr. Malone: I met representatives of the medical and nursing professions, including the Royal College of Nursing, on 21 December 1995 to consider a range of issues relating to emergency care.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the British Medical Association to discuss the availability of emergency beds. [13313]

Mr. Horam: My right hon. Friend has regular meetings with representatives of the BMA when a range of issues are discussed.

Private Finance Initiative

22. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on NHS capital projects to be funded through the private finance initiative. [13325]

Mr. Horam: Patients will benefit from private finance initiative projects which will bring improvements to national health service hospitals up and down the country. The NHS has so far seen schemes worth over £200 million approved. The momentum for PFI is increasing, pushing up the quality of patient care all the time.

27. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many projects for new community hospitals have succeeded in attracting private capital under the private finance initiative; and how many projects for such hospitals are currently being held up awaiting a determination as to whether any such private finance may be available. [13330]

Mr. Horam: I have previously given information on private finance initiative projects which have been approved by the National Health Service Executive for England, and I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 15 January 1996, Official Report, column 343. If, under the PFI, the private sector can improve health care facilities for the benefit of NHS patients and make the NHS's procurement of facilities more cost-effective, then this possibility must be investigated. However, we do not hold centrally the information requested.

Multiple Sclerosis

23. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's policy concerning the future funding of beta-interferon for multiple sclerosis; and if he will make a statement. [13326]

Mr. Malone: Guidance issued recently EL(95)97 suggested that beta-interferon should be prescribed by hospital neurologists where clinically appropriate, and within local agreements between health authorities and hospitals. As with other hospital-prescribed drugs, the costs should be met from within health authority general allocations.

A copy of EL(95)97 is available in the Library.

NHS Building Projects

24. Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many major NHS building projects have been completed since 1979. [13327]

Mr. Horam: A total of 842 major national health service building projects are reported as having been completed since 1 January 1980.

GP Fundholders

25. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what impact the increase in the number of general practitioner fundholders from 1 April 1996 will have on health authority purchasing powers. [13328]

Mr. Malone: Health authorities will continue to have a significant role as purchasers of hospital and community health services from April 1996. The developing role of health authorities as general practitioner fundholding expands, has been set out in guidance EL(94)79, "Developing NHS Purchasing and GP Fundholding—Towards a Primary Care-Led NHS". A copy of this guidance is available in the Library.

26. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has recently received in connection with fundholding general practitioners. [13329]

Mr. Malone: I have regular meetings with the medical profession to discuss a range of issues, including general practitioner fundholding.

28. Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of patients will be covered by general practitioner fundholding from April. [13331]

Mr. Malone: We expect that over 50 per cent. of the population will be served by a fundholding practitioner from April 1996.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors' practices in the Greater London area are fundholding; how many are not; what costs to public funds are involved in each case; and if he will make a statement. [13607]

Mr. Malone: A total of 325 general practitioner practices in Greater London are currently fundholders, serving more than a quarter of the population. A total of 1,438 general practitioner practices in Greater London are not currently fundholders. We expect the number of fundholders will rise to 578 practices serving 40 per cent. of the population of Greater London from next April.

General practitioner fundholders receive allocations to purchase healthcare on their patients' behalf. Similarly, health authorities receive funds to purchase health care on behalf of non-fundholders' patients and for non-fundholding services for fundholders' patients. General practitioner fundholders receive a management allowance to support them in directly managing resources and providing care on their patient behalf.

"The Health of the Nation"

29. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made towards achieving the targets set out in "The Health of the Nation". [13332]

Mr. Horam: Progress towards the targets set out in "The Health of the Nation" is described in "Fit for the Future", the second report on the strategy. This was published in July 1995 and copies are available in the Library.

Northumberland Health Authority

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the effect on public sector manpower in Northumberland health authority of the implementation of the Health Authorities Act 1995. [13559]

Mr. Malone: I have made no such estimate.

Drugs (Side Effects)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of people who have died as a result of side effects of drugs in each of the last five years. [14060]

Mr. Malone: The available information on deaths recorded by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in England and Wales as a result of adverse effects of drugs, medicaments and biological substances is shown in the table.

Deaths in England and Wales due to drugs, medicaments and biological substances causing adverse effects in therapeutic use (ICD E930–E949) as underlying or secondary cause

Year	Number of deaths
1990	108
1991	84
1992	93

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new plans he has to reduce deaths and serious illnesses caused by medicines. [13303]

Mr. Malone: We already have in place well-established systems for licensing and monitoring the safety of all medicines available in the United Kingdom, which ensure that the benefits of medicines outweigh any risks and prevent users coming to unnecessary harm. These systems continue to be developed, in particular to take advantage of advancements in drug development and pharmacoepidemiology.

Private Patient Activity

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he has given to the need to ensure that marginal cost contracts apply only to unplanned spare capacity in the internal market for the benefit of NHS patients and not to private activity. [14510]

Mr. Malone: National health service costing for contracting guidance already disallows marginal cost contracting other than where unplanned spare capacity arises. We see no reason, however, why in those circumstances a distinction should be drawn between NHS and private purchasers.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration has been given to external and internal auditors having a specific brief to audit private patient activity within the NHS and to set compliance with Treasury rules. [14502]

Mr. Malone: External auditors are independent and exercise their professional judgement about how they carry out their responsibilities. Internal auditors review areas on a cyclical basis with the frequency determined by taking account of risk and materiality. Private patient activity will be examined as part of this process.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures his Department is taking to ensure that private patient activity in the NHS is not adversely affecting NHS patients and their healthcare. [14506]

Mr. Malone: This is primarily the responsibility of national health service trusts, which must comply with the provisions of section 5(9) and schedule 2, paragraph 14 of the NHS and Community Care Act 1990. These prevent private patient activity being undertaken to the detriment of NHS patients.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make statements on the (a) change in volume, (b) costing, (c) pricing and (d) auditing of private patient activity in the NHS. [14508]

Mr. Malone: Accommodation and services are made available to private patients in national health service hospitals only when criteria set out in legislation are met. NHS gross income from private patient activity in England rose from £176.3 million in 1993–94 to £193.5 million in 1994–95, the latest year for which figures are available. Guidance has been issued to the NHS on costing and pricing. The recent report by National Economic Research Associates concluded that NHS pay beds are managed in accordance with their statutory and financial obligations, and generate a sizeable profit for the NHS to use to improve services for all patients. The accounts of NHS bodies, including income and expenditure from private patient activity, are subject to statutory audit by auditors appointed by the Audit Commission. The National Audit Office also has access rights to audit the activities of NHS bodies.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration has been given to the need for NHS trusts to adhere to the six principles governing their pay bed and private patient activities. [14507]

Mr. Malone: The six principles were set out in the "Management of Private Practice in Health Service Hospitals in England and Wales", copies of which are available in the Library. This guidance remains in force.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of whether NHS trusts should produce audited accruals-based accounts according to generally accepted accounting practices for their private patient activity. [14505]

Mr. Malone: Guidance issued last year—FDL(95)01—reminds the national health service of the requirement to maintain memorandum trading accounts for income generation schemes. MTAs are accruals based, and available for scrutiny by internal and external auditors. The guidance does not explicitly refer to private patient activity, but it is accepted good practice to apply the guidance to these also.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the use of public assets for the development of private patient activity. [14509]

Mr. Malone: Subject to the responsibilities set out in section 5(9) and schedule 2, paragraph 14 of the NHS and Community Care Act 1990, NHS trusts are free to undertake private patient activity and to capitalise it from any sources, with normal investment appraisal processes applying.

Surplus Land Sales

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the capital projects in the NHS funded by the sale of surplus land or buildings since 1992; and how much was realised by each sale. [14462]

Mr. Horam: The proceeds from the sale of surplus land and buildings are not assigned to fund specific developments. Receipts contribute to the overall national health service capital programme.

Management Staff

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) chief executives and (b) senior managers of (i) NHS trusts and (ii) health authorities have been dismissed in each of the last three years; and how many have retired for reasons other than the normal retirement age. [14474]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he issues to NHS trusts regarding the remuneration packages of senior managers and the annual improvements in their pay and conditions. [14476]

Mr. Malone: National health service trust boards are accountable for the proper appointment, appraisal and remuneration of their senior executives and, as in all their functions, boards must have regard to the public service values of accountability, probity and openness enshrined in the codes of conduct and accountability issued to NHS boards in April 1994. The code of accountability requires all NHS boards to establish a remuneration and terms of service committee to exercise proper control of executive board members' remuneration.

For those staff employed on the national terms and conditions for general and senior managers, guidance has been issued periodically on the changes in salary rates in a series of health service guidelines, health circulars and personnel memoranda, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what powers he has to remove NHS trust and health authority senior managers proceeded against (i) in the courts and (ii) by the health service commissioner for maladministration; and how often he has used these powers since 1990; [14475]

(2) what measures he takes to ensure that NHS trust and health authority chief executives and senior managers who have been dismissed or have resigned after successful allegations of maladministration are not re-employed elsewhere in the NHS in a similar capacity. [14473]

Mr. Malone: Powers to dismiss senior national health service staff lie solely with individual NHS employers.

It is for NHS employers to ensure the suitability of staff appointed. They are expected to have in place formal systems of recruitment and selection, which would include the taking up of references from former employers and the giving of proper consideration to the previous career history of candidates for employment.

Nurses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the NHS executive annual planning guidance on nurses in training for each year since 1990. [14450]

Mr. Horam: In August 1995 the Department issued formal planning guidance for the first time: the non-medical education and training planning guidance for 1996–97 education commissioning, EL(95)96, copies of which are available in the Library.

NHS Trust Hospitals

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration his Department has given to directing all NHS trust hospitals to conform to Treasury rules concerning commercial activities and returns on capital employed. [14503]

Mr. Malone: Trusts are bound by a requirement to fix charges for planned commercial activity, including private patient work, so that cross subsidy with NHS activity is avoided and an appropriate rate of return on capital employed is achieved.

Measles, Mumps and Rubella Vaccination

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued to parents of children who have been advised not to have the MMR vaccination because of contra-indications in other members of the same family; and what implications this guidance has for general practitioners in rural areas achieving their immunisation targets. [14445]

Mr. Horam: There are very few true contra-indications to immunisation; these are listed in the Heath Education Authority's leaflet, "A Guide to Childhood Immunisations", which is available to all parents.

General practitioner immunisation target levels allow for the fact that immunisation is contra-indicated for some children.

Probity Pledge

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the probity pledge proposed to NHS trust and health authorities by the NHS executive. [14522]

Mr. Malone: No new pledge on probity has been proposed by the national health service executive. On 26 April 1994 my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Health, announced in the House the publication of codes of conduct and accountability. These codes, which keep public values at the heart of the operation and management of the NHS, were to be adopted by the boards of all NHS authorities and trusts. They require that all matters in the NHS be conducted with due regard to the very highest standards of probity, accountability and openness.

Royal Berkshire Ambulance Trust

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he proposes to take regarding executive managers from the Royal Berkshire Ambulance Trust using an emergency ambulance to attend a coroners' court. [14639]

Mr. Horam: This is a matter for the Royal Berkshire Ambulance Service National Health Service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mrs. Rosalie Monbiot OBE, chairman of the trust, for this information.

Practising Doctors (European Union)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) practising doctors and (b) practising doctors per capita there are in each European Union country. [14907]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally. However, the second—1995—report of the Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee, copies of which are in the Library, gives data on physicians per 1,000 population in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and United Kingdom.

Junior Doctors

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the average annual amount of study leave given to junior doctors in each of the last three years. [14851]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of junior doctors leaving the NHS each year. [14853]

Mr. Malone: Information is not available in the form requested. The Department supports studies by the medical careers research group the Oxford unit of healthcare epidemiology to examine wastage from the profession and other career patterns. Wastage rates appear to have declined recently. Of those who qualified in the mid-1970s, nearly 20 per cent. were not working in medicine in the United Kingdom 10 years later. Provisional data indicate that the comparable figure for those who qualified in the 1980s was around 15 per cent. Many of these doctors will be temporarily abroad, on a career break or in alternative medical employment and may well return to the NHS in the future.

Patients (Complaints)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints have been made by patients in each of the last six years. [14767]

Mr. Horam: For the number of complaints received in each of the last five years I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave her on 30 January 1996, Official Report, column 723. For hospital and community health services, the number of complaints in 1989–90 was 36,181. For family health services, the figure for 1989 was 1,927.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he is likely to announce recommendations arising from the consultation document "Moving Forward" to strengthen the legislation on the running and inspection of residential and nursing homes to protect vulnerable people. [13396]

Mr. Bowis: We shall consider whether to bring forward legislative or other changes in the light of the report of the independent assessor for the review which we expect to receive later this year.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the consultation on "Moving Forward" to be completed; and if he will place a copy of the responses to date in the Library. [14778]

Mr. Bowis: Written responses to "Moving Forward" have been asked for by the end of this month. It will be for the independent assessor to decide whether further consultation is required before he reports to Ministers.

We shall decide at that time what and in what form to publish. This might include the submissions of respondents if they are content for this to be done.

Skin Diseases

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to speed up treatment of dermatologically related diseases. [13451]

Mr. Horam: The organisation of health services and the manner in which they are delivered are matters for health authorities in their role as purchasers of services for their populations.

However, my Department is aware of a few commercial projects in their very early stages which use televisual means in an effort to help deal with the workload in dealing with skin conditions. I understand that the process involves the general practitioner sending an e-mail picture of the patient's skin condition to a consultant dermatologist along with clinical details. The consultant can review the pictures in his own time and either give advice to the GP on management with suitable protocols or suggest a live consultation.

Prescription Costs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the annual average cost of prescriptions per patient prescribed by (a) general practitioner fundholders and (b) non-fundholding general practitioners for each year since the introduction of fundholding for which the figures are available for (i) England, (ii) each regional health authority and (iii) each family health service authority. [14967]

Mr. Malone: The available information is shown in the table.

Prescribing costs (£ NIC/PU)—England

	GP fundholders	Non GP fundholders
1991–92	9.23	9.71
1992–93	10.35	10.91
1993–94	11.47	12.05
1994–95	12.56	13.07
1995–96 (to Q2)	13.04	13.62

1. NIC/PU = net ingredient cost per prescribing unit.
2. NIC is essentially the cost of prescriptions before allowing for pharmacists' discounts and container costs.
3. PUs are a weighting used to adjust for the higher cost of drugs for older people. Each person counts as one PU for under 65-year-olds, three PUs for 65-year-olds and older.
4. The two groups (fundholding GPs/non-fundholding GPs) are not exclusive—during the period, some non fundholders will have become fundholding and vice versa.

Patient De-registration

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been removed from registration with their local general practitioner in each of the past five years. [13450]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Castle Point (Dr. Spink) and to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 2 November 1995, Official Report, column 457.

Oral Contraceptives

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reports have been received via the yellow card system regarding women who have been switched from combined oral contraceptives containing desogestrel or gestodene since 18 October 1995; and what assessment the licensing authority has made of such reports. [12978]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 8 February 1996]: Ten reports of suspected adverse reactions have been received on yellow cards occurring in women who switched from oral contraceptives containing desogestrel or gestodene since 18 October 1995. These have been assessed by the Medicines Control Agency according to its normal procedures.

SCOTLAND

EU Funding

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the total expenditure allocated to date from European Union objective 1 funding for the highlands and islands; and if he will make a statement; [11587]

(2) if he will list the projects that have been approved for European Union objective 1 funding for the highlands and islands since January 1995 for (a) the European regional development fund and (b) the European social fund; what expenditure was approved for each project; and what was the total expenditure; [11585]

(3) which successful applications for European Union objective 1 funding for the highlands and islands are located in Argyll and Bute; and what was the expenditure approved for each project. [11586]

Mr. Kynoch: The total expenditure committed up to the end of January 1996 is £164 million. This is made up by £129 million, ERDF; £30.5 million, ESF; and £4.5 million, EAGGF—European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund—and FIFG—financial instrument of fisheries guidance. As the information requested is somewhat lengthy, I have arranged for the details to be placed in the House Library.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the projects which have been approved for objective 1 funding in the highlands and islands, stating the amount in each case. [11607]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 1 February 1996]: The total expenditure committed up to the end of January 1996 is £164 million. This is made up by £129 million, ERDF; £30.5 million, ESF; and £4.5 million, EAGGF and FIFG. As the information requested is somewhat lengthy I have arranged for the details to be placed in the House Library.

Agriculture Department

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many full-time members of staff are currently employed at each of the Scottish Office Agriculture Department's divisional offices. [12305]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of full-time staff employed in the agricultural divisions of the Scottish Office Agriculture, Environment and Fisheries Department who are working at locations outwith Edinburgh is shown in the table, which reflects the position as at 1 January 1996.

School Boards

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department has spent on the administration, promotion, support and establishment of school boards in Scotland in each academic year since their establishment. [12504]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: School boards were established for the first time during the financial year 1989–90. Departmental expenditure, by financial year, is as follows.

Financial year	Expenditure £
1989–90	1,737,000
1990–91	51,000
1991–92	308,000
1992–93	91,000
1993–94	157,000
1994–95	68,000
1995–96	[1]40,000

Child Day-care Facilities

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will conduct a survey of all child day-care facilities with a view to determining whether registration and inspection criteria are being carried out by local authorities in any way which encourages provision of places; [14225]

(2) if he will conduct a survey of child day-care facilities to ensure that local authorities are interpreting the registration and inspection duties laid on them in a reasonable way. [14226]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend does not have any plans for such surveys.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he expects to revise the guidance issued to local authorities in 1991 on regulation and review of childminding and day-care services for children under the Children Act 1989; [14278]

(2) if he will update the bibliography referred to in section 3 of annex 4 in the guidance on child care issued to local authorities in 1991. [14279]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend intends to revise and update the guidance to take account of an amendment made to the Children Act 1989 by the Children (Scotland) Act 1995 and further amendments planned to the 1989 Act which relate to supervised activities and holiday play schemes.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to what extend parental consent to derogation from guideline standards for child care facilities will be taken into account in issuing local authority certificates of registration of day-care premises. [14227]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under the Children Act 1989, local authorities are under duty to register suitable providers of day-care for young children. Registration provides a framework to protect children and to ensure that services meet acceptable standards. It also reassures parents who arrange day-care for their children by others. In deciding whether to register applicants, local authorities are responsible for setting appropriate and consistent standards, taking account of central guidance. It would not be practicable to consult individual parents who may use different facilities from time to time about whether lower standards should be set in their facilities.

Appeal Court

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases have been referred back to the Appeal Court by the Scottish Secretary since 1966; and in how many such cases conviction was quashed. [14528]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since 1966, my right hon. Friend has referred nine cases to the High Court of Justiciary under section 263(1) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975. Of these cases, five convictions were quashed and in one case a verdict of culpable homicide was substituted for that of murder.

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments since 1987, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14079]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office has provided computer bureau and related services to a number of other Departments and public bodies. Charges for these services for the years since 1989–90 are as follows:

Department	Amount £
National Gallery of Scotland	39,6000
National Library of Scotland	55,500
National Museums of Scotland	27,600
HM Customs and Excise	11,800

Holyrood Palace

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost to his Department for the upkeep and maintenance of the palace of Holyrood house in each of the last three financial years. [14811]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend is responsible for the cost of the upkeep and maintenance of the fabric of the palace, for security and for the costs of utilities such as fuel and telephones. All other costs are met by the royal household.

The information for the last three financial years is:

	Programme expenditure	Historic Scotland employee costs	Total £
1992–93	696,600	338,530	1,035,130
1993–94	693,215	337,852	1,031,067
1994–95	809,153	345,124	1,154,277

These costs include all expenditure directly attributable to the palace but not professional and central administration.

Mobile Communications Network

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the mobile communication, network supported by the Scottish Office in the highlands and islands will be capable of handling both digital and analogue calls. [14919]

Mr. Kynoch: The £46 million mobile telecommunications investment programme in the highlands and islands will extend coverage to some 95 per cent. of the region's population, including covering almost all major arterial transport routes. The networks will use global system for mobile communications—GSM—technology, which is the European-led standard for digital cellular networks now operating in more than 40 countries worldwide. GSM gives users improved speech quality and greater security over the older analogue technology and access to a range of added value services similar to those available on the digital fixed network. The new GSM networks will complement the highlands and islands fixed network, which is already substantially digital as a result of upgrading by BT in the early 1990s.

The existing analogue networks offered by Cellnet and Vodaphone in the highlands and islands will be maintained, but will not be extended further.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the annual average cost per patient of prescriptions prescribed by (a) general practitioner fundholders and (b) non-fundholding general practitioners for each year since the introduction of fundholding for which statistics are available for (i) Scotland and (ii) each health board. [14966]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information by health board and Scotland for the financial years 1992–93 to 1994–95 is set out in the table. The costs shown are the average cost per patient on GP lists and are based on the value of ingredients before the addition of dispensing fees or deduction of any discount or patient charges.

Crofters

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what impact his initiative on crofting will have on the crofters of the Knoydart estate; and if he will make a statement. [15076]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The recently launched consultation paper is specifically concerned with the disposal of the crofting estates owned by my right hon. Friend. However, the issues it raises may be of interest to crofters and landlords elsewhere.

Court Service

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those courts that have been closed in each county in Scotland since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [14274]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 February 1996]: There have been no closures of district courts or sheriff courts during the period in question.

Absenteeism

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the absenteeism rates in days per annum for staff in his Department for each of the years (a) 1979–80, (b) 1989–90, (c) 1991–92, (d) 1993–94, (e) 1994–95 and (f) 1995–96. [11357]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 25 January 1996]: The average number of working days lost per staff year due to sickness in the Scottish Office is in the table.

Calender year	The Scottish Office	Scottish Prison Service
1992	8.9	12.6
1993	10.3	15.3
1994	8.2	12.9

Figures prior to 1992 are not available.

Drug Reduction Programmes

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners were waiting for a place on the Edinburgh and Glenochil drug reduction programmes on (a) 1 February 1995 and (b) 1 February 1996. [14589]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 February 1996]: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. James Wallace, dated 13 February 1996:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your question about the number of prisoners waiting for a place on the Edinburgh and Glenochil drug reduction programmes on (a) 1 February 1995 and (b) 1 February 1996.

As far as HMP Edinburgh is concerned there were no waiting lists in 1995 and 1996 and prisoners' needs are met by programmes provided by the prison authorities and/or community based agencies.

Glenochil have adopted a multi-disciplinary approach and have been evolving and developing phased addiction programmes over the past 2 years which cover both drugs and alcohol. Prisoners receive both group and one-to-one counselling. There is no waiting list as such but currently 71 prisoners are awaiting completion of their programme.

TREASURY

VAT (Disabled People)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will reconsider the VAT treatment of (a) emergency car telephones for the disabled and (b) off-road wheelchairs; and if he will make a statement. [15011]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. General purpose equipment such as emergency car telephones remains standard-rated because many other people besides the disabled use it as well. Relief is available for equipment which is designed solely for disabled people, and also on the costs of adapting goods to make them usable by the disabled. Zero-rating also applies to invalid wheelchairs other than mechanically propelled vehicles intended or adapted for use on roads. If an off-road vehicle has been designed solely for use by disabled people, it too may qualify for relief.

Bills (Voluntary Bodies)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will institute a review of late payment of bills due to voluntary bodies by Government Departments. [15095]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Government Departments are required to pay all bills promptly, not only those due to voluntary bodies.

Beer Imports

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the proportion of off-licence beer sales now being lost to personal importation of beer from the continent. [14931]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Data relating solely to the impact on off-licence beer sales of personal importations of beer from the continent are not available. However, for the 12 months ending 30 June 1995, the overall loss to United Kingdom sales of beer, including off-licence sales due to legitimate personal importations from other member states, is estimated by HM Customs and Excise to be equivalent to approximately 0.5 per cent. of UK consumer expenditure on beer.

Low Pay

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the number and proportion of manual, non-manual and all full-time employees earning less than (a) £161.60, (b) £215.47 and (c) £288.68 per week excluding overtime payments for (i) men, (ii) women and (iii) both sexes for (1) England and (2) Great Britain in April 1995; [14346]

(2) if he will list the number and proportion of manual, non-manual and all part-time employees earning less than (a) £4.26 per hour, (b) £5.69 per hour and (c) £6.03 per hour excluding overtime payments for (i) men, (ii) women and (iii) both sexes for (1) England and (2) Great Britain in April 1995. [14347]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 13 February 1996]: Available information from the "New Earnings Survey 1995" is provided in the following table.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the United Kingdom work force would be covered by a minimum wage set at (a) £3.50 per hour and (b) £4.15 per hour. [14971]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 13 February 1996:] Information from the April 1995 "New Earnings Survey" shows that 9.1 per cent. of employees in Great Britain would be covered by a minimum wage set at £3.50 per hour and 18.9 per cent. would be covered by a minimum wage set at £4.15 per hour.

Sustainable Development

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the promotion of sustainable development will be reflected in the implementation of the proposals contained in the White Paper "Better Accounting for the Taxpayer's Money". [15108]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There will be no direct impact on the promotion of sustainable development in the implementation of the proposals contained in the White Paper "Better Accounting for the Taxpayer's Money".

Customs and Excise

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the review of the investigative functions and resources of Customs and Excise has been completed; and what conclusions have been reached. [15183]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The final report of the fundamental expenditure review of Customs and Excise investigation and intelligence activity was completed in October 1995 and approved by Ministers in November 1995.

The main conclusions of the review were that organisational changes are required to help Customs and Excise tackle more effectively the growing sophistication of commercial drug smuggling and tax fraud. From the 1 April 1996 there will be a single Customs national investigation service, combining regional investigation units and the central division; and a unified national intelligence network, based on an expanded national intelligence division.

Although, in common with most other Government Departments, Customs overall resources are set to fall, the creation of the new organisation will mean the deployment of over 200 additional staff in the key areas of intelligence and investigation.

TRANSPORT

Legislation (Compliance Cost Assessments)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for primary and secondary legislation passed since 5 April 1995 which measures were subject to a compliance cost assessment; and what was the compliance cost in each instance. [13658]

Mr. Watts: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given today by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Environmental Appraisals

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many environmental appraisals were produced by his Department using the guidance contained in the Department of the Environment's "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" in 1995; and if he will place copies in the Library. [15121]

Mr. Norris: My Department does not keep a central record of environmental appraisals conducted before new or revised policies are adopted. We do, however, take environmental considerations into account in the policy development process using the guidance contained in "Policy Appraisal and the Environment".

Barking to Gospel Oak Line

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the service on the Barking to Gospel Oak line; and if he will make a statement. [15184]

Mr. Norris: In 1995, the Department received five representations concerning the service on the Barking to Gospel Oak line. The representations expressed concern about performance staffing levels and the possibility of line closures. No representations have been received this year.

The operation of passenger services on the Barking to Gospel Oak line is a matter for North London Railways.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans exist to replace rolling stock on the Barking to Gospel Oak line; and if he will make a statement. [15186]

Mr. Norris: This is a matter for the British Railways Board. It is currently reviewing the rolling stock requirements for this line.

Rail Franchising

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the franchising process for the (a) south-west and (b) Great Western lines will be reopened in circumstances when a franchisee renegotiates the level of subsidy upwards. [15182]

Mr. Watts: The circumstances posed in the hon. Member's question have not arisen.

Derailment (Camden)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what investigations have so far been carried out into the derailment at Camden on 14 December 1995, and if he will make a statement. [15185]

Mr. Watts: The railway has carried out an internal investigation. In addition, the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate has conducted an independent investigation into this incident and is now considering whether further action is appropriate.

Derailments

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all reported derailments in 1994–95 and 1995–96 to the latest available date. [15187]

Mr. Watts: Statistics showing all derailments which operators are required to report under the Railways (Notice of Accidents) Order 1986 are shown in the railway inspectorate's annual report on the safety record of the railways in Great Britain which is published by the Health and Safety Executive. A copy is held in the House of Commons Library. The number of reported train derailments in 1994–95 was:

	Number
Passenger train derailments	28
Freight train derailments	121
Total	149

Figures for 1995–96 are not yet available.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the causes of derailments broken down to show (a) track quality, (b) signal failure and (c) operating staff error for (i) 1994–95 and (ii) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [15189]

Mr. Watts: The causes of train derailments are shown in appendix 4 to the railway inspectorate's annual report on the safety record of the railways in Great Britain, published by the Health and Safety Executive. A copy is held in the House of Commons Library. The derailments due to track quality, signal failure and operating staff error in 1994–95 were:

	Number
(a) Track quality	53
(b) Signal failure	1
(c) Operating staff error	53

Other causes of derailments include locomotive and rolling stock defects, traction and braking shocks and malicious damage.

Figures for 1995–96 are not yet available.

Railway Development

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary for State for Transport what guidelines he has proposed for local authority involvement in socially necessary railway development; and if he will make a statement. [15188]

Mr. Norris: The Government recognise the contribution made by local authorities in supporting improvements to their local rail networks and wish to encourage their continued involvement in the role as specifiers and facilitators, rather than providers, of rail services. In addition, the objectives, instructions and guidance to the franchising director state that he should establish effective liaison with local authorities and other bodies involved in the restructured railway industry.

Coaches (Motorways)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 8 February 1996, Official Report, column 302, if the assessment of the effect of banning coaches from the third lane of motorways will take account of evidence from before the imposition of the ban. [15129]

Mr. Norris: Transport Research Laboratory monitoring will include data from before the imposition of the ban.

A1-M1 Link

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is (a) the planned start date and (b) the planned construction period for the A1-M1 link road; which contractors have been retained for the project; and if he will make a statement. [15006]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. William O'Brien, dated 14 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about the M1-A1 Link Road.

The Highways Agency is conducting negotiations with the preferred bidder from the M1-A1 Link Road Scheme. Negotiations are drawing to a conclusion and the signing of the contract is expected to be announced shortly.

Once the contract has been signed the start of work on site is expected to follow approximately 4 months later. However, during that 4 months, mobilisation work will be carried out in preparation for the start of the main construction work. Construction is planned to be completed within 3 years (including the 4 month mobilisation period).

Railway Fraud

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail concerning the inquiry in the ticket fraud involving Enterprise Rail. [15159]

Mr. Watts: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Cambourne (Mr. Coe) on 9 February, Official Report, columns 374–75.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the procedures currently in place to identify (a) fraud and (b) potential fraud in the railway industry. [15160]

Mr. Watts: The ticketing and settlement agreement, a scheme which is contractually binding on all train operators, provides for extensive independent auditing and monitoring of compliance with its terms. Regular, routine checks are carried out by Rail Settlement Plan, a limited company established under the agreement. Passenger operators are required to allow RSP's representatives access to their premises, personnel and records for the purposes of compliance monitoring. It was through these independent auditing arrangements that recent ticketing irregularities involving LTS Rail were detected.

Single European Currency

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the impact of a single European currency on freight and passenger transport to and from the continent. [14949]

Mr. Watts: None.

British Rail (Heavy Maintenance Depots)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the conduct of the sale of BR's rolling stock heavy maintenance depots, including the Eastleigh depot. [15618]

Sir George Young: The British Railways Board sold its six British Rail maintenance depots—BRML—in June 1995. They were the largest sales at that date in the rail privatisation programme and BR prudently decided to commission a study to ensure their soundness. Price Waterhouse was therefore engaged by BR to review the sale of one of the depots, the Eastleigh works.

Price Waterhouse concluded that the sale process for Eastleigh was generally robust and that the net proceeds would not have been higher if it had been undertaken differently.

However, on reviewing the Price Waterhouse report, the Department of Transport concluded that, while its findings gave reassurance on proceeds, they were incomplete. The Department therefore commissioned Ernst and Young to carry out a further, detailed, investigation of all six BRML sales. Following consultation with the Department, the Ernst and Young team has been accompanied in its investigation by an official from the National Audit Office, which carrying out its own independent and separate examination of the sale.

Ernst and Young has concluded that the sale process depended crucially on the fairness and transparency of the competition. The composition of the Eastleigh depot's assets would have been a subsidiary consideration to the strategic value of the business to the eventual purchaser. Having spoken to other bidders for the Eastleigh depot, Ernst and Young is confident that there was a strong and fair competition, and that all the necessary information, including details of the company's cash balances and its future trading prospects, was available to all bidders. Ernst and Young concluded that, whilst there were some procedural weaknesses, they did not affect the sale. Ernst and Young's inquiries also point to the fairness and transparency of all the subsequent BRML sales.

The National Audit Office has been kept fully informed throughout by the Department. The BRML sales, like all other sales in the railway privatisation programme, are subject to scrutiny by the NAO on behalf of the Comptroller and Auditor-General.

SCOTLAND

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sites of special scientific interest Scottish National Heritage reported as damaged in (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1994–95; and what percentage of the total these represent. [14198]

Mr. Kynoch: The information requested is set out in the table:

Year	Total number of SSSIs	Number of SSSIs damaged	Percentage of SSSIs damaged
1992–93	1,355	17	1.3
1993–94	1,373	17	1.2
1994–95	1,382	23	1.7

North Lanarkshire Council

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost to public funds of the inquiry conducted by Mr. D. I. K. MacLeod WS into the appointment of officers to North Lanarkshire council. [14333]

Mr. Kynoch: Costs have yet to be finalised, but it is estimated that these will be in the region of £28,000.

Out-of-school Care Initiative

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 893, if the £500,000 for the out-of-school care initiative in 1996–97 is additional to the budgets announced in December 1995 for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. [14460]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Provision has been made within the budgets for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Enterprise announced in December 1995 for the continuation of the out-of-school child care initiative.

Empty Buildings

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many empty buildings his Department currently owns; what is the cost of insuring and securing these buildings; how many were designed as residential properties; and what was the total amount spent by his Department on empty property taxes in each of the last five years. [14569]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Most of the office space provided for Government Departments is part of the Government's common user estate and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will provide details of empty buildings on the CUE and their respective costs.

The Scottish Office and its agencies currently own 60 empty Crown buildings, of which 39 were designed as residential properties. As a general rule, the Government carry their own insurance risk. The cost of securing these buildings cannot be readily quantified and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

The total amount known to have been spent on empty property taxes in each of the years was as follows:

1991–92: Nil

1992–93: £8,516

1993–94: £2,148

1994–95: £3,727

1995–96: £5,425.

Figures are not available centrally for the amount spent on property taxes by health boards.

Complaints against GPs

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received regarding proposed changes in the method of dealing with complaints against general practitioners in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [14624]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. My officials have, however, had constructive discussions with the professions, management and consumer interests about the detail of the new NHS complaints procedures.

Ashfield House, Kirkintilloch

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding Greater Glasgow health board's plan for a community care facility at Ashfield house in Kirkintilloch; and if he will make a statement. [14610]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Other than the representations dealt with by the office of the Scottish Office inquiry reporter the only representation I have received is the letter of 2 February 1996 from the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden.

Licensing (Amendment) (Scotland) Bill

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he will take following the Scottish Special Standing Committee's consideration of the Licensing (Amendment) (Scotland) Bill; and if he will make a statement. [15646]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I welcome the opportunity to congratulate the Special Standing Committee on its work. The Licensing (Amendment) (Scotland) Bill has benefited greatly from the Committee's scrutiny.

The Special Standing Committee met on three occasions, in Stirling, Ayr and Inverness, and took evidence from representations of nine bodies, including the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland), the Health Education Board for Scotland, the Scottish Law Society and voluntary organisations involved in the prevention of drug misuse and the rehabilitation of drug addicts. It also took evidence from academics, doctors and Sheriff Neil Gow QC, who conducted the fatal accident inquiry into the deaths of three young men and found that their deaths resulted from the consumption of controlled drugs at dance events held at Hangar 13 in Ayr. My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office also gave evidence.

The main purpose of the Bill, which is to give licensing boards greater power to regulate licensed premises on which dance events are held so that they are made safer for those attending, was generally supported by those who gave evidence. There was also support for the provisions in the Bill intended to ensure that licensing boards remain of manageable size following local government reorganisation in Scotland.

In responding to questions from Committee members, those giving evidence did, however, make a number of criticisms of the form of regulatory arrangements proposed by the Bill. We have given careful consideration to these comments and have decided to bring forward amendments at Commons Standing Committee, with the intention of responding to the suggestions made for improving the Bill. The effect of these amendments will ensure that licensing boards are obliged to attach conditions to liquor licences for premises which are to be used for dance events and to provide boards with as much flexibility as possible to make conditions which are appropriate to local circumstances.

The Special Standing Committee arrangements for examining Bills have therefore been valuable in preparing for the entry of the Licensing (Amendment) (Scotland) Bill into Commons Standing Committee. They have enabled the Government to identify possible difficulties in implementing legislative proposals and to prepare amendments for debate at the earliest possible opportunity. They will, I am sure, prove to have been of similar assistance also to all hon. Members involved in scrutinising the Bill at its various stages. I am therefore grateful to the Special Standing Committee for all the work that it has done and to those who took time to give evidence to it.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Deregulation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what legislation enacted in the last parliamentary Session he proposes to repeal by way of deregulation orders. [14753]

Mr. Freeman: None of the proposals which have been put to the Deregulation Committee, or on which the Government have gone out to public consultation, affects legislation laid in the last parliamentary Session.

Legislation (Compliance Cost Assessments)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list for primary and secondary legislation passed since 5 April 1995 which measures were subject to a compliance cost assessment; and what was the compliance cost in each instance. [13661]

Mr. Freeman: Details of compliance cost assessments for primary and secondary legislation passed in the first half of 1995 are included in a Command Paper, Cm 3075, which was presented to Parliament on 25 January 1996. Copies of the compliance cost assessment listed are available in the House Libraries. Further Command Papers listing compliance cost assessments issued in the preceding six-month period will be published at six-monthly intervals.

Environmental Impact Assessments

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what criteria are used to define whether a proposal to Cabinet will have significant effects on the environment and therefore should be accompanied by a statement of the likely environmental implications. [15109]

The Deputy Prime Minister: "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" makes it clear that papers for Cabinet or Cabinet Committees should, where appropriate, cover any significant costs or benefits to the environment. The interpretation of this guidance is for the individual Minister preparing the paper. In this the Ministers can refer to the Department of the Environment publication "Policy Appraisal and the Environment", copies of which are widely available in Departments.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Domestic Violence

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many of the injunctions granted in domestic violence cases were subsequently breached in each of the last five years. [14097]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Paul Boateng, dated 14 February 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question about the numbers of injunctions in domestic violence cases that were subsequently breached in each of the last five years.

I regret that this information is not available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many legal aid certificates were issued to take proceedings for domestic violence in each of the last five years; and what was the amount paid under those certificates in the same period. [14095]

Mr. Evans: The number of legal aid certificates issued to cover domestic violence proceedings in the last five years is as follows:

Certificates Issued

1990–91: 14,189

1991–92: 16,819

1992–93: 19,242

1993–94: 19,590

1994–95: 19,209.

It is not possible to identify the net costs of these cases. However, over the same period, the net cost of closed cases involving domestic violence matters is available.

	Number closed	Net cost £
1990–91	14,281	9,789,868
1991–92	16,480	13,722,255
1992–93	17,571	16,078,711
1993–94	20,083	19,592,542
1994–95	19,211	19,306,590

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many injunctions were granted in domestic violence cases in each of the last five years. [14096]

Mr. Evans: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Paul Boateng, dated 14 February 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question about the numbers of injunctions granted in domestic violence cases in each of the last five years.

The figures are:

1991: 26,236

1992: 30,971

1993: 32,781

1994: 28,512

1995: 25,609.

The 1995 total is a provisional one and is liable to revision to take account of late amendments.

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments since 1987, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14086]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: My Department has not sold any spare computer capacity to any other Departments since 1987 and has no current plans to do so.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesca Initiative

Mr. Cann: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how much finance has been made available to the United Kingdom to date from the Pesca initiative; and how much has been spent; [14608]

(2) what use of the Pesca funds has been made to assist fishery-dependent areas of the United Kingdom; [14607]

(3) what plans he has to use Pesca funding for the benefit of British fishermen. [14609]

Mr. Baldry: A total of 37.42 mecu—some £31 million—has been allocated to the United Kingdom for the period 1995 to 1999. Subject to final confirmation from the European Commission, further funding of 5.88 mecu—approximately £5 million—will also be available from the Community initiative reserve.

As indicated in the announcement which I made today, applications are now being invited for projects which meet the criteria in the UK's implementation programme, which was approved by the European Commission in June 1995. This places particular emphasis on diversification into non-fishing activities. But funds will also be available for the restructuring of the fisheries sector and for retraining in areas dependent on fishing.

No grants have yet been awarded, but I expect the first payments under Pesca to be made in the early part of this year.

Legislation (Compliance Cost Assessments)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for primary and secondary legislation passed since 5 April 1995 which measures were subject to a compliance cost assessment; and what was the compliance cost in each instance. [13648]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 9 February 1996]: I refer to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster today.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many written parliamentary questions were passed for answer to executive agencies and non-governmental departments in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [14990]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The numbers of written questions for which I, or my predecessors, have asked executive agencies to reply to direct are as follows:

Parliamentary Session

1993–94: 6

1994–95: 35

1995–96: 15 (to date).

These figures include parliamentary answers where a partial answer has been given by me or my predecessors in respect of the core Department.

Figures are not readily available for earlier Sessions of Parliament.

Environmental Appraisals

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many environmental appraisals were produced by his Department using the guidance contained in the Department of the Environment's "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" in 1995; and if he will place copies in the Library. [15115]

Mr. Boswell: The Department does not keep a central record of environmental appraisals conducted before new or revised policies are adopted. However, officials have been instructed to take environmental considerations into account in the policy development process using the guidance contained in the Department of the Environment's booklet "Policy Appraisal and the Environment".

Varroa

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to change the statutory infected area for varroa; and if he will make a statement. [15424]

Mr. Boswell: The autumn varroa searched last year revealed a significant number of cases outside the statutory infected area. Having now considered the views of the national beekeeping organisations, and those of the many local associations and individual beekeepers who have written to me and to the Welsh Office, we have agreed from today to extend the boundary of the statutory infected area to include the four English counties of Cheshire, Cleveland, Durham and Merseyside and the whole of Wales.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Tax Discs

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers the police have to restrain persons from driving vehicles which do not bear a current tax disc; and if he will make a statement on the enforcement of this measure. [15062]

Mr. Maclean: The main responsibility for enforcement action against untaxed vehicles rests with the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency. The police and traffic wardens assist by sending reports of suspected unlicensed vehicles to the agency. No powers exist for restraining persons from driving untaxed vehicles, but regulations will be introduced shortly which provide powers to wheelclamp and impound unlicensed vehicles parked on the public road. A pilot wheelclamping scheme, starting in London this month, will enable the agency to assess the effectiveness of these powers in combating vehicle excise duty evasion.

Young Prisoners

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) 15, (b) 16 and (c) 17-year-olds have been recorded as self-injuring in prison in each year since 1990, by prison. [15014]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 14 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number, by prison, of 15, 16 and 17 year olds who have been recorded as self-injuring in prison in each year since 1990.

The information you have requested is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Pregnant Prisoners

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the policy and training of prison officers in control and restraint techniques on pregnant prisoners. [15003]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 14 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the policy and training of prison officers in control and restraint techniques on pregnant prisoners.

The Prison Service has been revising the policy on the use of control and restraint methods in respect of pregnant women and prisoners with disabilities. The review group includes medical and nursing representatives as well as those who are experienced in the use of control and restraint techniques.

The review was set up by the Director of Security and Programmes at the time of the changes which were made in the use of restraints, which were subject to the Home Secretary's statement on 18 January. I expect to receive the results of the review very shortly.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the option of temporary release for women attending hospital to receive maternity care is available. [14998]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 14 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the temporary release of women prisoners attending hospital to receive maternity care.

On 25 April last year new arrangements for the temporary release of unescorted prisoners came into effect following changes to the Prison Rules. Under the new system eligible sentenced women prisoners, who satisfy the mandatory risk assessment, may be released on compassionate licence to attend hospital for maternity care and to give birth. Instructions to Governors governing the new national policy of release on temporary licence are set out in Prison Service Instruction 36/1995, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Bulwood Hall Women's Prison

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason Bulwood Hall women's prison has stopped prisoners receiving incoming calls during the week beginning 15 January. [15015]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 14 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Bullwood Hall prison.

The incoming phone lines at Bullwood Hall were unauthorised and undermined the national incentives and earned privileges scheme which was introduced in the summer of 1995. The telephone lines were consequently withdrawn on 17 January 1996 on the instructions of the area manager.

Fire Service

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from (a) organisations and (b) individuals on the ability of fire brigades to meet minimum legal standards for rescue and firefighting duties in 1996–97. [14593]

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of such representations relating to different fire brigade areas. It is for each fire authority to set a budget which will allow it to comply with its statutory duties under the Fire Services Act 1947 and with the nationally recommended minimum standards of fire cover.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the adequacy of fire service funding for 1996–97 to permit fire brigades to comply with the statutory minimum standards for their (a) rescue, (b) firefighting and (c) emergency roles. [14794]

Mr. Sackville: It is for each fire authority, in the light of the proposed criteria for council tax capping, to set a budget which will allow it to comply with its statutory duties under the Fire Services Act 1947 and with the nationally recommended minimum standards of fire cover. In circumstances where an authority considers that it is necessary to set a budget above the proposed capping limit in order to fulfil its statutory duties, it is open to it to set a budget above the limit and make out a case to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment for redetermination of the cap.

Racial Hatred

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy in respect of groups which (a) incite racial hatred and (b) call for (i) homosexuals, (ii) Hindus and (iii) Jews to be killed. [14648]

Mr. Kirkhope: The Government find such views repugnant. We have sought to ensure that legal provisions are available to deal with members of such groups who incite violence and racial hatred under either the common law or public order legislation.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions (a) have been brought and (b) are currently in progress, on charges of racial hatred since the coming into force of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994; and how many have resulted in conviction. [14654]

Mr. Maclean: Section 155 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 made offences under section 19 of the Public Order Act 1986 arrestable under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 on 3 February 1995. Information on court proceedings data for the 1995 calendar year under this provision will not be available until autumn 1996.

Parish Precepts

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he issues to parishes in rural areas in respect of the cost of parish precepts for (a) neighbourhood watch schemes and (b) special parish constables. [14750]

Mr. Maclean: None.

Metropolitan Police (Complaints)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is taken by the Metropolitan police to compensate members of the public whose complaint and finding against the police or a police constable has been sustained in respect of suffering serious embarrassment or inconvenience by an inquiry supervised by the Police Complaints Authority. [14659]

Mr. Maclean: It is for the individual complainant to decide whether to make a claim against the Metropolitan police.

Prison Staff

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total staff establishment for the Prison Service in England and Wales by each grade; and how many from each grade were from an ethnic minority in (a) 1989 and (b) 1995; [13458]

(2) how many prison staff in England and Wales were from an ethnic minority in (a) 1989 and (b) 1995. [13457]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Janet Anderson, dated 14 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about Prison Service staff of ethnic minority origin.

The Prison Service began to monitor staff ethnic origins in May 1993. The attached returns, therefore, give comparative information for May 1993, the earliest available figures, and May 1995.

Equal opportunities return as at 14 May 1993

Bingo Clubs

Sir Mark Lennox-Boyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will amend the law to allow bingo clubs to advertise their prize money. [13523]

Mr. Kirkhope: The restrictions on the advertising of bingo and other forms of commercial gambling are currently under review as part of the Government's deregulation initiative. The review is well advanced and we hope to consult on our proposals shortly.

Fraud

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated figure for serious fraud in large businesses in the United Kingdom for 1995. [13521]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally.

Disabled People (Safety)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the work of the Home Office working party on the personal safety of disabled people. [14139]

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office working party set up in 1993 to help the Suzy Lamplugh Trust produce personal safety advice for disabled people completed its task in May 1995 when a consultative document, together with a leaflet entitled "Out and About"—which offers advice for disabled people when travelling around—was published.

I understand that the Suzy Lamplugh Trust has followed up this work with further initiatives, including the provision of training workshops for disabled people and carers.

Terrorist Prisoners

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in Britain have requests for transfer to prisons in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) the Republic of Ireland currently under consideration. [14734]

Miss Widdecombe: As of 8 February, 24 requests for transfer to Northern Ireland and 65 requests for repatriation to the Republic of Ireland made by prisoners in England and Wales were under consideration. In addition, two requests for transfer to Northern Ireland made by prisoners in Scotland were under consideration. No requests for repatriation to the Republic of Ireland have been made by prisoners in Scotland.

Immigration (Indian Sub-continent)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the numbers and proportions of arrivals in the United Kingdom in the last two years from the Indian sub-continent of overseas residents who subsequently left the United Kingdom. [15140]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information requested is not available.

Deportees

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many families were deported from the United Kingdom under the provisions of the Immigration Act 1971 in each year since 1985. [14922]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information requested is not available. Information on the total number of persons removed from the United Kingdom under the deportation process since 1985 is given in table 7.3 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom, 1994", Cm 2935, a copy of which is in the Library.

Environmental Appraisals

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many environmental appraisals were produced by his Department using the guidance contained in the Department of the Environment's "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" in 1995; and if he will place copies in the Library. [15119]

Mr. Howard: There is currently no formal monitoring system for environmental appraisals carried out by my Department. However, I understand that the Department of the Environment proposes shortly to commission a project to evaluate the effect of its policy appraisal and the environment document on decision making by Government Departments. The project will seek to identify how far environmental impacts are taken into account in policy decisions.

Burglars

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 6 February, Official Report, column 107, on the number of burglars convicted on a third or greater occasion, what number and percentage were juvenile offenders, what percentage of them were sentenced to immediate custody, and what was the average custodial sentence imposed on them; what number and percentage were young adults, what percentage of them were sentenced to immediate custody, and what was the average custodial sentence imposed on them; what number and percentage were adults, what percentage of them were sentenced to immediate custody, and what was the average custodial sentence imposed on them. [15190]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested, taken from a sample of those convicted of burglary in three weeks of 1993, is given in the table.

Sentencing of burglars convicted for the third or greater time: by age

Age of offender	Number convicted on third or greater occasion	Percentage of those convicted on a third or greater occasion	Percentage sentenced to immediate custody	Average custodial sentence imposed (months)
All ages	1,135	100	43	11
Under 18 years	142	13	33	5
18–20 years	233	21	52	10
21 years or over	760	67	42	12

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions since 1 January 1995 (a) he, (b) Ministers in his Department and (c) officials in his Department have had contact with Lord Howe concerning his correspondence with the Scott inquiry. [14819]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 12 February 1996]: Neither I nor my Ministers nor officials have had any such contacts with him.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Indonesia

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid has been given to Indonesia in each of the last 16 years. [14948]

Mr. Hanley: Bilateral aid to Indonesia over the last 16 years has been as follows (in £000) and in cash prices:

1980: 9,555
1981: 7,814
1982: 11,264
1983: 9,515
1984: 12,818
1985: 31,781
1986: 7,463
1987: 9,395
1987–88: 7,809
1988–89: 10,758
1989–90: 9,615
1990–91: 17,588
1991–92: 21,197
1992–93: 21,387
1993–94: 22,214
1994–95: 21,418.

Note:
From 1992, British Aid Statistics was published by financial year.

British Geological Survey

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the contracts or work done by the British Geological Survey paid for by the Overseas Development Administration, the nature of the work, and the cost in each case; what arrangements need to be made to continue these programmes if the survey is privatised; and if he will make a statement. [14113]

Mr. Hanley [pursuant to his reply, 8 February 1996, c. 300]: Listed is an update of the current contracts which the British Geological Survey has with ODA:

PRIME MINISTER

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his written answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 546, if he will place in the Library copies of the 1,000 regulations identified for repeal; and which of these had been repealed by 1 December 1995. [13657]

The Prime Minister: The 1,000 regulations due for repeal or amendment are identified individually by the responsible Departments and no comprehensive central list is held. However, we achieved our target of repealing or amending over 500 regulations by the end of last year. Examples included the simplification of the food temperature control regulations which will save business about £40 million a year with no diminution in food safety; removal of restrictions on Sunday trading and allowing shops to stay open later in the evenings if they so wish; and reform of the Trustee Investments Act 1961 which will result in savings to charities of up to £450 million a year by giving them greater investment flexibility. New measures are under consideration.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions since 1 January 1995 (a) he and (b) officials in the Cabinet Office have had contact with Lord Howe concerning his correspondence with the Scott inquiry. [14824]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 12 February 1996]: Lord Howe, like other witnesses to the Scott inquiry, has had contacts with officials in the Cabinet Office from time to time. I have had no such contacts with him.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements have been made for civil servants whose actions are discussed by Lord Justice Scott to receive copies of his report before its official publication on 15 February. [14840]

The Prime Minister: Pursuant to my answer of Tuesday 13 February, Official Report, columns 506–7, it has subsequently been agreed with the inquiry that all individuals who, from earlier drafts submitted to them, have reason to believe they may be criticised in the report should have access to those sections of the report relevant to them shortly before publication, but only in controlled circumstances.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Buildings

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the capital amounts allowed to each education authority in England for school buildings in the financial year 1996–97 and the amounts of the authorities' original bids. [14768]

Mrs. Gillan: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 18 December 1995 and to the hon. Member for North Thanet (Mr. Gale) on 19 December 1995, Official Report, columns 978 and 1018 respectively.

Tatum Case

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total cost of taking Mr. Tatum before an industrial tribunal by the Equal Opportunities Commission. [14744]

Mrs. Gillan: The Equal Opportunities Commission estimates that the total costs associated with the Tatum case were approximately £750.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps the Equal Opportunities Commission is taking to assist employment by small businesses. [14745]

Mrs. Gillan: The Equal Opportunities Commission is well aware of the importance of small businesses to the country's economic success and wishes to ensure that they understand the positive benefits which result from equal opportunity policy and practice. The commission has established a working party which has held discussions with organisations representing small and medium-sized businesses. The commission contributed to the Department's publication "Equality Pays", which is targeted at such businesses.

Single European Currency

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment her Department has made of the impact of a single European currency on employment. [14951]

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 8 February, Official Report, column 363.

Jobplan Workshops

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of participants in the jobplan workshops have found jobs. [14960]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Ted Rowlands, dated 14 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about Jobplan Workshops.

It may be helpful if I explain that Jobplan aims to help people who have been unemployed for a year or more to compete successfully for jobs and opportunities. About 80% of the people who become unemployed leave the unemployment register within a year. Those who remain can lose confidence and believe there are few options open to them. It is therefore important that at this stage people take a fresh look at their situation, have the chance to review their strengths and skills and set themselves new clear, achievable job goals, and take advantage of the range of help available.

Jobplan supports people in this by providing personal reviews, access to a computer assisted occupational guidance program, and the opportunity to work with others to identify areas where they need additional help. During the week participants draw up a comprehensive action plan which maps out the steps that they need to take to find work.

During the period April to December 1995, 5% of Jobplan participants found work within thirteen weeks of completing a workshop. In addition, a further 32% started on another employment, training or educational opportunity such as Training for Work, Jobclub or a college course.

I hope this is helpful.

Legislation (Compliance Cost Assessments)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list for primary and secondary legislation passed since 5 April 1995 which measures were subject to a compliance cost assessment; and what was the compliance cost in each instance. [13660]

Mr. Forth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children resident in the constituency of South-East Staffordshire have a school place in the independent sector through the assisted places scheme. [14827]

Mrs. Gillan: The information is not collected in the form requested. Five independent schools in the Staffordshire local education authority area currently participate in the assisted places scheme, none of them situated in the South-East Staffordshire constituency. There are 595 assisted pupils at these schools in the current academic year 1995–96. The majority of these pupils are likely to be resident in Staffordshire but some may be drawn from a wider catchment area.

Environmental Education

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she will publish the Government's strategy for environmental education. [15123]

Mr. Robin Squire: Responsibility for this matter rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. The Government hope to publish a strategy for environmental education in England and Wales in spring.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to her answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 729, if she will give a breakdown of the costs of (a) setting up and (b) running Oflot in (i) 1993–94 and (ii) 1994–95; and what was the source of these funds. [14212]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 8 February 1996]: This is a matter for the Director General of the National Lottery. I have therefore asked the director general to write to the hon. Member, placing copies of his response in the Libraries of the House.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Marchioness Incident

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Attorney-General if he will now initiate further criminal proceedings in respect of the loss of the Marchioness. [14302]

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service has received in November and December 1995 from the coroner transcripts of the evidence given at the inquest. These are being studied. Once they have been considered, together with the pre-inquest evidence and the results of any additional inquiries which may be necessary, a decision will be made as to whether further criminal proceedings should be instituted.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions since 1 January 1995 (a) he, (b) Ministers in his Department and (c) officials in his Department have had contact with Lord Howe concerning his correspondence with the Scott inquiry. [14823]

The Attorney-General [holding answer 12 February 1996]: The requirements of the inquiry have been respected. Communications between me and others concerning correspondence with the Scott inquiry are private.

HEALTH

Powered Wheelchairs

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the basis of his Department's own compliance cost assessment for the provision of powered wheelchairs; and what recent revision has been made to this assessment; [12076]

(2) what assessment he has made of the report of the Batteries Not Included Consortium on the provision of powered wheelchairs, a copy of which has been sent to him. [12487]

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what consultations he has had with user groups concerning the funding of indoor-outdoor powered wheelchairs in the United Kingdom; [14596]

(2) what progress has been made in implementing the central recommendations of the 1986 McColl report; [14597]

(3) what assessment has been made of the benefit to disabled people of indoor-outdoor powered wheelchairs; [14598]

(4) what consultations or correspondence his Department has had with health authorities concerning the funding of indoor-outdoor powered wheelchairs; [14599]

(5) what plans he has to extend the funding of indoor-outdoor powered wheelchairs throughout the United Kingdom; [14600]

(6) when the most recent assessment was made of the level of demand for indoor-outdoor powered wheelchairs. [14601]

Mr. Bowis: We have already implemented the main recommendation of the McColl report on the organisation of the services providing artificial limbs, wheelchairs and appliances for disabled people which was, inter alia, to devolve responsibility for the wheelchair service to the national health service locally. In 1994 we set up a departmental working group to look at the feasibility of introducing a voucher scheme. The group also looked at the likely demand for, and the cost of providing, powered indoor-outdoor wheelchairs. In considering the findings of the working group we have taken into account the report of the Batteries Not Included Consortium and representations made to us by interested parties, including health authorities.

Responsibility for wheelchair provision in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

Pensions

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the criteria used by his Department when assessing the medical submissions by employees who apply for payment of pension benefits because of ill health. [13566]

Mr. Malone: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the NHS Pensions Agency under its chief executive, Mr. A. F. Cowan. I have asked him to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mr. William O'Brien, dated 14 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Health has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question as it falls within my area of responsibility.

The criterion for early payment of a NHS retirement pension on the grounds of ill-health is that the member must have a physical or mental infirmity that renders them permanently incapable of efficiently discharging the duties of their employment. In this context permanent means that the member will not be able to resume their previous employment before the normal retirement age of 60.

Kidney Failure

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a breakdown of the number of people who have died in each of the last five years as a result of kidney failure by (a) age group and (b) ethnic group; and what action he is taking to reduce the number of deaths from kidney failure. [14564]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available in the form requested. The numbers of people who die from various diseases are published annually in "Mortality Statistics series DH2: Cause: England and Wales", copies of which are available in the Library. It is for individual health authorities to allocate resources to renal services based on an assessment of the needs of their population and taking account of local priorities.

Tri-Star Ambulances

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the NHS of the purchase of Tri-Star ambulances; and what assessment he has made of their safety. [14452]

Mr. Horam: The current contract price for a Tri-Star ambulance is £39,875, plus approximately £10,000 per vehicle for providing specialist equipment and stretchers. I am aware of one traffic accident involving a Tri-Star vehicle, which led to 19 vehicles being withdrawn from service pending further investigations of their allowable loaded rating. Other Tri-Star vehicles use a different chassis and continue to perform satisfactorily.

Private Patient Activity

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to establish a policy of public accountability for private patient activity in the NHS. [14504]

Mr. Malone: The accountable officer's memoranda, issued by the chief executive of the national health service executive in March 1995, set out the responsibilities of chief executives for all income and expenditure incorporated in health bodys accounts.

Nurses' Pay

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the NHS trusts which have awarded an increase of less than 3 per cent. to nurses, indicating the percentage awarded; and if he will make a statement. [14484]

Mr. Malone: Over 90 per cent. of nurses have received pay increases of 3 per cent. or more in 1995, as a result of local negotiations. Final information on settlements for other trusts is not yet available.

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of places for (a) over 65-year-olds and (b) over 75-year-olds per 1,000 in residential and nursing homes funded by social services departments in each local authority. [14322]

Mr. Bowis: The number of residents supported in homes for the elderly by local authorities at 31 March 1995 per 1,000 population is shown in the table.

Intensive Care Beds (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State of Health how many intensive care beds there have been in the City of Durham constituency, in each year since 1979. [14513]

Mr. Horam: Information for years prior to 1988 is not available centrally. In each year from 1988–89 to 1994–95, there has been an average of 33 intensive care beds in the Durham health authorities.

Doctors

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors worked in the NHS in each year since 1979. [14854]

Mr. Malone: The number of doctors working in the NHS has increased by 23 per cent. from 67,110 in 1979 to 82,680 in 1994, the most recent year for which figures are available. Figures for each year from 1979 to 1994 are shown in the table.

Figures have been rounded to the nearest "10". The Hospital Medical Staff include Hospital Practitioners and Clinical Assistants who may also be General Medical Practitioners.

Figures for hospital doctors are as at 30 September each year; General Practitioners are at 1 October.

WTE = Whole Time Equivalent.

Junior Doctors

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what actions can be taken against NHS trusts that require junior doctors to work more than 72 hours a week. [14852]

Mr. Malone: It is open to postgraduate deans to withdraw approval for posts, and consequently funding, if it becomes clear that continuing long hours are affecting the quality of training available in a post. A royal college may withdraw its approval for a post if the training offered falls below the required standards.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many children have been (a) placed in the care of local authorities, (b) placed in the care of the other parent and (c) cared for by a step parent or partner following the imprisonment of a parent with care in each year since 1991 as a result of contempt of court for non-compliance with a court order under section 8 of the Children Act 1989; [14849]

(2) how many incidents resulting in injuries to children (a) prior to, (b) during and (c) after contact between parents and children occurred involving individuals whose children were subject to contact orders made under section 8 of the Children Act 1989 in each year since 1991. [14847]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

GP Fundholding

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of general practitioner fundholding budget surpluses have been spent on practice premises in each of the last three years. [14765]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 4 April 1995, Official Report, column 1034.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the advantages of general practitioner fundholding. [14809]

Mr. Malone: The advantage of general practice fundholding is that, being closest to patients, general practitioners are able to use resources directly to best meet the needs of their patients.

Private Medical Care

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what regulatory machinery covers private medical care. [14723]

Mr. Malone: Doctors providing private medical care remain subject to the provisions of the Medical Act 1983, as amended, and to the standards of professional conduct set down by the General Medical Council.

Subject to a number of exceptions, set out in the Act, facilities to be used for private medical care are required to register with the local health authority under the Registered Homes Act 1984 where it is intended that (a) patients will stay overnight, (b) pregnant women or women immediately after childbirth will be received, (c) surgical procedures will be carried out under anaesthesia, (d) termination of pregnancies will be conducted, (e) endoscopies will be carried out, (f) haemodialysis or peritoneal dialysis will be conducted, or (g) treatment by specially controlled techniques—currently treatment by class 3B and class 4 lasers—will take place.

Environmental Appraisals

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many environmental appraisals were produced by his Department using the guidance contained in the Department of the Environment's "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" in 1995; and if he will place copies in the Library. [15117]

Mr. Horam: None. In general my Department's policies, which are concerned with public health, do not impinge on the environment; environmental considerations are taken fully into account where appropriate, for example in the Department's purchasing policy.

Legislation (Compliance Cost Assessments)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for primary and secondary legislation passed since 5 April 1995 which measures were subject to a compliance cost assessment; and what was the compliance cost in each instance. [13644]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 8 February 1996]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster gave him today.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 5 February, Official Report, column 24, if he will list for each trust in each year since its inception the cost of staff travelling and subsistence, by region. [14887]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 12 February 1996]: The information will be placed in the Library.

The figures include expenditure on travelling and subsistence incurred in the delivery of direct patient care, for instance by community nurses. The total expenditure by NHS trusts on travelling and subsistence in 1994–95 was less than 1 per cent. of operating expenses.

WALES

Incomes (South Glamorgan)

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number and percentage of (a) men and (b) women in South Glamorgan who earn less than £228.70 per week. [13268]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information from the new earnings survey indicates that the estimated proportion of full-time employees in South Glamorgan who earned less than £228.70 per week in April 1995 was 22 per cent. for men and 49 per cent. for women.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sites of special scientific interest the Countryside Council for Wales reported as damaged in (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1994–95; and what percentage of the total these represent. [14199]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Such information is shown in the Countryside Council for Wales annual reports, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Speech and Language Therapists

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what investigation his Department has been conducting into recruitment difficulties related to appointments of speech and language therapists for children with special educational needs; if he will place a copy of his conclusions in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [14305]

Mr. Hague: My Department and the NHS are examining whether there are any difficulties recruiting speech and language therapists as part of the annual exercise in determining the number of student places for this and other professions. The information gathered will be available when decisions on numbers are taken next summer.

Empty Buildings

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many empty buildings his Department currently owns; what is the cost of insuring and securing these buildings; how many were designed as residential properties; and what was the total amount spent by his Department on empty property taxes in each of the last five years. [14570]

Mr. Hague: Excluding the NHS, the Department, including its agencies and non-departmental public bodies, does not own any empty buildings.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his statement of 31 January, Official Report, columns 814–15, on allocations of resources to the new health authorities in Wales in1996–97, what proportion of the £11 million allocated for the operating costs of general practitioner fundholders' practices plus preparatory fees for aspirant fundholders, corresponds to the additional costs of operating fundholding practices relative to non-fundholding practices. [14327]

Mr. Hague: The £11 million has been provided to meet the additional costs that will be incurred by fundholding practices in directly managing NHS resources on behalf of their patients.

Health Centre Accommodation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his statement of 31 January, Official Report, columns 814–15, on allocations of resources to the new health authorities in Wales in 1996–97, if he will make a statement on the transfer of responsibility for the payment of general practitioner accommodation in health centres. [14463]

Mr. Hague: Negotiations between health departments and the representative body of the profession are under way about the terms of proposed changes to the funding and management arrangements of GP accommodation. The aim is to implement the changes in 1996–97 and £870,000 has been reserved for that purpose. This is additional to the provisional general medical services allocation to health authorities for that year.

A477

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) on what date his Department decided to remove the newly laid surface on the A477 between Radberth and Sageston; [15151]

(2) what investigations were carried out by, or on behalf of, his Department into the quality of the surface laid in 1995 on the A477 between Radberth and Sageston; and when the decision was taken to carry out an investigation; [15152]

(3) how many personal injury accidents occurred on the A477 between Radberth and Sageston following (a) the resurfacing in 1995 and (b) its removal in 1996; and if he will list the dates of those accidents and the injuries sustained; [15153]

(4) what was the cost of resurfacing the A477 between Radberth and Sageston in 1995; and what is the estimated cost of the removal of that surface and its replacement in 1996. [15154]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Testing of the materials used in the resurfacing and testing of the new surface for skidding resistance and irregularity took place during the contract in April 1995, as is normal practice, and on three subsequent occasions. The resurfacing carried out in 1995 cost £57,000 and due to defects it was decided on 16 January to replace it. The estimated cost of removal and reinstatement, including the additional work now considered necessary, is £88,000. Discussions on the apportionment of costs are being fully pursued. Following the resurfacing in 1995, there were two accidents—one on July 9 resulting in slight injury to one person, and one on October 24 resulting in the driver of a car receiving fatal injuries and a passenger receiving serious injuries. There have been no accidents since the surface was removed.

Local Government Ombudsman

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received from individual residents in Wales expressing dissatisfaction with reports produced by the local government ombudsman for Wales in each of the last five years. [15155]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office does not hold records before 1993. The number of complaints received by the Welsh Office expressing dissatisfaction with the ombudsman service in Wales in subsequent years is as follows:

Number of complaints

1995: six[1]

1994: three

1993: six

Note:

[1]One of which included representation from 18 individual members of the public.

DEFENCE

St. Christopher House

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's report into the fire at St. Christopher house, London. [14439]

Mr. Soames: The board of inquiry into this fire was an internal investigation designed to establish the facts and prevent a recurrence. For reasons of confidentiality we do not release detailed reports of such investigations, but I have placed a copy of the public synopsis of the board of inquiry report in the Library of the House.

Saudi Armed Forces Project Group

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's staff involved in the Al Yamamah project office have subsequently taken up business appointments with companies holding contracts processed through the Al Yamamah project office. [15175]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my predecessor on 20 December 1994, Official Report, column 1191.

Defence Housing Executive

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many applications were submitted in response to the Defence Housing Executive's recruitment campaign 1995; how many have been successful; and how many of the successful candidates were ex-service personnel. [14658]

Mr. Soames: The Defence Housing Executive's 1995 recruitment campaign for regional controllers, area managers and housing services managers attracted some 602 applicants, of whom 37 were offered appointments. Of the 37 successful candidates, nine were ex-service personnel.

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria were applied in the selection of candidates for interview for the posts advertised in the Defence Housing Executive's recruitment campaign 1995. [14657]

Mr. Soames: The sift criteria applied in the selection of candidates for interview for the Defence Housing Executive regional controller, area manager and housing services manager posts were based on length and breadth of experience in private and public sector housing management.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to issue D notices in regard to matters addressed by the Scott inquiry report. [14845]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The defence advisory notices define a voluntary code between the media and the Departments responsible for national security. They provide general guidance to editors, programme makers and publishers and would not cover the reporting of the contents of the Scott report on publication.

BBC World Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the grant in aid in each of the last five financial years, and in 1995–96 to date, from his Department to the BBC World Service in constant prices; and from which subheads of which votes these funds are taken. [14978]

Mr. Soames: Payments by the Ministry of Defence towards the cost of BBC monitoring—class II, vote 3, subhead item A2 (1)—are made from class I, vote 1. The information sought is as follows:

Year	£ thousand[1]	Subhead[2]
1990–91	2,954	L1
1991–92	3,675	L1
1992–93	3,933	L1
1993–94	3,832	M1
1994–95	3,755	K1
1995–96	[3]3,646	J1

[1] Figures are at 1995–96 constant prices.
[2] The changes in subhead arise from vote restructuring.
[3] Latest estimate of expenditure.

Terrorism Arrests

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when was the last occasion an officer of the armed forces made an arrest in Northern Ireland for suspected terrorist activities. [14916]

Mr. Soames: The last occasion when a member of the armed forces made an arrest in Northern Ireland was 1 December 1994.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's budget for research into Gulf war syndrome and from which subheads of which votes these funds will be taken. [15004]

Mr. Soames: The budget for future research into the health problems of Gulf veterans and their families, and the vote subhead on which it will be borne, has yet to be determined.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many written parliamentary questions were passed for answer to executive agencies and non-governmental departments in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [14992]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This information is a matter of public record, but could not be provided by my Department in the form requested without incurring disproportionate cost.

Plutonium Exports

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what permission was sought from the United States Government, under the provisions of the 1958 US-UK mutual defence agreement on atomic energy matters as amended, to release details on 6 February of the quantities of plutonium exported to the United States from the United Kingdom, the dates of the exports, the present locations of the materials and past uses of the materials. [14843]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The United States Government sought and obtained our permission to include in their announcement of 6 February the total quantity of plutonium that the United States received from the United Kingdom between 1960 and 1979 under the 1958 agreement.

Nuclear Tests (Compensation)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much compensation has been paid since 1966 by Her Majesty's Government in respect of claims by or on behalf of persons who suffered death or injury as a consequence of the United Kingdom's atomic weapons test programme in Australasia in the 1950s. [14929]

Mr. Soames: The Government have paid no such claims. From the time of the atmospheric nuclear tests in the 1950s and early 1960s up to the end of 1990, there has been no overall excess of death or malignant disease among British nuclear test veterans.

Environmental Appraisals

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many environmental appraisals were produced by his Department using the guidance contained in the Department of the Environment's "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" in 1995; and if he will place copies in the Library. [15114]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 11 July 1995, Official Report, column 530. My Department has not operated a centralised reporting system for environmental appraisals and no figures are therefore available. I understand that the Department of the Environment is shortly to commission a project to evaluate the effect of the "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" document on decision making by Government Departments.

Ammunition

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) of 19 January, Official Report, column 848; which country and which company supplied 155 mm ammunition not provided by United Kingdom manufacturers; what was the average price per round; and what means were used for disposal of surplus or dated stock of ammunition from the stockpile in each year since 1990. [14879]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 12 February 1996]: Between 1990 and 1995 Eurometaal of the Netherlands and Simmel Difesa of Italy supplied the British Army with 155 mm ammunition. The prices paid remain confidential for commercial reasons. No 155 mm ammunition rounds have been sold or disposed of since 1990.

In addition, the Governments of Germany and the Netherlands provided 155 mm ammunition to the United Kingdom at the time of the Gulf conflict. Those rounds not used in the Gulf were returned.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) of 19 January, Official Report, column 847, if he will seek the assistance of British Aerospace in obtaining Royal Ordnance sales records for his Department's 155 mm stock between 1980 and 1987. [14886]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 12 February 1996]: My Department will seek the assistance of British Aerospace to establish what records remain and I will write separately to the hon. Member. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) of 19 January, Official Report, column 848, in which years since 1986 the Inspector General of Ordnance formally indicated his satisfaction that the United Kingdom reserve war stock of 155 mm ammunition met in full the reserve requirement; and if he will list the deficiencies reported in each year. [14871]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 12 February 1996]: Information about war stocks is classified.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) of 19 January, Official Report, column 848, how many 155 mm rounds became redundant in each year following the imposition of the 10-year service life rule; and if he will list for each method of disposal of the redundant rounds his estimate of the number of rounds involved. [14872]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 12 February 1996]: War reserves are regularly replenished, with new stock replacing old. Old stock is used for training purposes, so no rounds have been disposed of in recent years. Some batches of 155 mm ammunition have had their shelf life extended beyond 10 years following the satisfactory completion of life extension trials.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) of 19 January, Official Report, column 847, what was the estimated price per round of 155 mm ammunition of which his Department's annual purchasing budget is based. [14881]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 12 February 1996]: The Department's annual purchasing budget is not based on an average price per round because there are a number of different types of round of 155 mm ammunition. The basic component of each round, that is the shell, charge, fuze and primer, are often bought separately. During the period from 1991 to 1995, various types of shell were bought for prices from about £100 to £1,200. The shell is generally the most expensive element of the round.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each local authority's level of grant for elderly residential finance, as contained within the personal social services support grant settlement for the current year; and if he will list the figures for each of the last five years, (a) in real terms and (b) as a percentage change from the previous year. [14203]

Sir Paul Beresford: Information on the elderly residential element of personal social services standard spending assessment—SSAs—is given in the table. SSAs do not, in fact, represent amounts of grant paid in respect of specific services. They are, instead, used in the calculation of authorities' entitlement to revenue support grant, which is an unhypothecated grant, allocated between services on the basis of local authorities' decisions.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what factors he takes into account when deciding the level of the homelessness indicator in the revenue support grant settlement; [14202]

(2) what plans he has to remove the homelessness indicator from the revenue support grant settlement. [14201]

Sir Paul Beresford: The amounts allocated using the homelessness indicator SSAs are largely determined by statistical analyses which were carried out in 1993. The analyses took into account the extent to which particular indicators reflected variations between authorities in their need for net revenue expenditure.

The SSA sub-group of the settlement working group examined last year possible alternatives to the homelessness indicator. We were not convinced that any of the alternatives provided a clear improvement to the SSA formulae, but the indicator may need further consideration at some stage.

"Adults in Need Index"

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he (a) has taken and (b) will be taking, following the 1995 Association of Metropolitan Authorities paper entitled "Adults in Need Index". [14205]

Sir Paul Beresford: The AMA paper "Adults in Need Index" was presented to the standard spending assessments—SSA—sub-group in 1995. Two of the options which it included were exemplified in the report of the SSA sub-group. These possible changes were considered, when the changes proposed to SSAs for 1996–97 were being decided. We were not convinced that a strong enough case had been made for the introduction of such an index.

The local authority associations may wish to present further information on the "Adults in Need Index". During discussion in the SSA sub-group in 1996, we will consider whatever material is brought forward.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites of special scientific interest, English Nature reported as damaged in (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1994–95; and what percentage of the total these represent. [14200]

Mr. Gummer: Information on damage to SSSIs is contained in the annual reports of English Nature, copies of which are in the Library.

Sewerage Outfalls

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reports the National Rivers Authority has received in respect of the E coli count under the shellfish waters directive (a) before and (b) since the Norton outfall was commissioned. [14338]

Mr. Clappison: I understand that the Norton outfall was commissioned in 1979 before the shellfish waters directive came into force. I also understand that the National Rivers Authority has collected information about E coli but not received any reports in respect of the E coli count in relation to the shellfish waters directive for this locality.

Private Dwellings

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many private dwellings there are in each London borough. [14752]

Mr. Clappison: The numbers of private sector dwellings, excluding housing association dwellings, in each London borough on 1 April 1995, as reported by local authorities on their 1995 housing investment programme—HIP1—returns, were as follows:

London boroughs	Number
Barking and Dagenham	37,765

Environmental Services Association

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Enviornment what representations he has received from the Environmental Services Association concerning (a) the adequacy of landfill capacity and (b) difficulties in securing new facilities. [14793]

Mr. Clappison: The Environmental Services Association—ESA—issued its "Planning Guidelines for Waste Management Facilities" last month, which addresses both issues. My officials have held meetings with representatives of the ESA on these matters and in connection with my Department's preparation of a planning policy guidance note on waste.

Building Heights

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what restrictions are placed on the height of a single storey building by (a) planning legislation and (b) planning policy guidance. [14618]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 places a restriction of 4 m in the case of a building with a ridged roof and 3 m in any other case on the height of a building which can be erected within the curtilage of a dwelling house without the need for a planning application. The Department's booklet "Planning—A Guide for Householders" encourages good design and consideration for neighbours in the exercise of such residential permitted development rights.

Where planning permission is required for a single storey building, its appearance and relationship to its surroundings are material considerations. No specific guidance is given on the height of single storey buildings, but general guidance on design considerations is given in annexe A of planning policy guidance note 1 "General Policy and Principles".

Landfill Sites

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many registered landfill sites do not have weighbridges. [14791]

Mr. Clappison: My Department does not hold precise information about the number of landfill sites which do not have weighbridges. A sample survey conducted by the Environmental Services Association—the trade association representing 70 per cent. of the waste management industry by turnover—suggests that less than 10 per cent. of its members operate landfill sites which do not have weighbridges. The Environmental Services Association will conduct a further survey of its members later this year.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he estimates landfill demand will exceed capacity. [14792]

Mr. Clappison: My Department does not have precise information about when landfill demand might meet capacity, as this will depend largely on the availability of new void space from, for example, mineral workings. The White Paper "Making Waste Work" which was published in December explains that

> Over the country as a whole, there appears to be adequate rate of generation of new void space for now, though there are divergent views on this, and further work is necessary to confirm and to quantify trends. In the longer term it is likely that some regions may begin to encounter shortages of suitable void space that can be used for landfill purposes, and there is some evidence that such shortages are already becoming apparent in the south-east region, for example.

Planning authorities must aim to meet the requirement that there is an adequate network of waste disposal facilities, including landfill sites, when drawing up their development plans. Further guidance on this will be contained in the planning policy guidance note on waste which the Department intends to produce by the end of the year.

Sustainable Development

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the White Paper on sustainable development will be published; and what account it will take of the sustainability of soils. [14645]

Mr. Clappison: We intend to publish "This Common Inheritance: UK Annual report 1996" in March this year. The content of the report is still under discussion.

Quarrying

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers planning authorities have to restrict quarrying operations in order to protect the water table. [14619]

Sir Paul Beresford: When considering new applications for planning permissions for quarrying, mineral planning authorities can consider all aspects of the proposed development including its impact on the water table, and can impose appropriate conditions or refuse permission as necessary. Authorities are in a position to seek expert advice from the National Rivers Authority.

For existing permissions, mineral planning authorities have a range of order-making powers under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 to revoke or modify planning permissions, discontinue a use of land, or to impose conditions on the continuance of that use, or to prohibit the resumption of mineral working in certain circumstances. In addition, the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 and the Environment Act 1995 introduced new requirements for the review and updating of old mineral permissions. Advice on applying the powers available has been published in minerals planning guidance notes 4,8,9 and 14.

Chewing Gum

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines his Department issues to local authorities in respect of cleaning chewing gum from pedestrian areas; and if he will have discussions with chewing gum manufacturers on this subject. [14755]

Mr. Clappison: We have issued no guidance on cleaning chewing gum from pedestrianised areas. However, the Tidy Britain Group, which is largely funded by my Department, is currently working with a major chewing gum manufacturer to establish both effective cleansing methods and ways of reducing the problem in the first place.

Standard Spending Assessment (Southwark)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what factors led to the reduction in the standard spending assessment of the London borough of Southwark in 1996–97. [14957]

Sir Paul Beresford: Southwark's standard spending assessment—SSA—in 1996–97 is lower than the comparable 1995–96 figure for a number of reasons: principally, the use of later data, such as those used to calculate the area cost adjustment, but also the changes made to the method of calculating the education and all other services elements of SSAs to take account of authorities' need to spend on special educational needs and rent allowances.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many written parliamentary questions were passed for answer to executive agencies and non-governmental departments in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [14996]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information is as follows:

	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
Building Research Establishment	4	0	0	1	0
Planning Inspectorate	4	1	3	5	0

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations, and from whom, his Department has received on the subject of the reduction in the budget for the home energy efficiency scheme; what that reduction has been; what action his Department plans to take in response to the representations; and if he will make a statement. [15130]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We have received some 200 representations from hon. Members, local authorities, voluntary bodies and the insulation industry about the reduction in the budget for the home energy efficiency scheme. In 1996–97, the allocation for this programme will be just over £73 million—some £30 million less than in 1995–96. We have recently reviewed the scheme, and hope shortly to publish proposals for its development in the form of a consultation paper.

Environmental Appraisals

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what progress has been made on the Government's commitment in the UK sustainable development strategy to review the effectiveness of "Policy Appraisal and the Environment"; [15136]

(2) how many environmental appraisals were produced by his Department using the guidance contained in the Department of the Environment's "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" in 1995; and if he will place copies in the Library. [15116]

Mr. Clappison: We shall shortly commission a project to evaluate the effect of the "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" document on decision making within government. A project specification has already been drawn up. The project should last for about six months.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the environmental appraisals produced for the policies used as examples and referred to in environmental appraisals in Government Departments. [15135]

Mr. Clappison: This work was carried out two to three years ago. To retrieve the information and prepare it for publication could, in my view, be accomplished only at disproportionate cost.

Green Ministers

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance has been provided to assist Green Ministers in scrutinising the environmental implications of their Departments' policies. [15138]

Mr. Clappison: Guidance is contained in "Policy Appraisal and the Environment: a guide for Government Departments" and its follow-up "Environmental Appraisal in Government Departments".

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was discussed at the last meeting of the Green Ministers; who attended; and what areas of future work were agreed. [15137]

Mr. Clappison: At their meeting on 29 January, Green Ministers discussed and agreed future work on the role of Green Ministers, green procurement and waste minimisation in Government Departments. They decided not to publish minutes of their meetings but agreed to the publication of a list of contact addresses in each Government Department where inquiries on green issues could be directed and I shall shortly deposit such a list in the Library. They agreed to publish a series of case studies which show what measures Departments have taken to ensure that environmental considerations are taken into account in policies and programmes. All Green Ministers attended or were represented at the meeting.

Environmental Policies

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to provide added vigour to the integration of environmental concerns into other policy areas. [15139]

Mr. Clappison: The Government continue to emphasise the need for integrating economic and environmental policies. For the future, Green Ministers have agreed to publish further work on how environmental considerations are taken into account in policies and programmes.

Empty Dwellings

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many empty dwellings were owned by Government Departments in England in the latest year for which information is available; and if he will make a statement. [14974]

Mr. Clappison: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) on 23 November 1995, Official Report, column 238.

Rental Accommodation

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the mean rise in registered fair rents for (a) housing associations and (b) private lettings by rent office district between 1990–91 and the latest available date. [15107]

Mr. Clappison: The information is given in the table:

Severe Weather Conditions

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will envoke the provisions of the Emergency Powers Act 1920 to assist communities in Cumbria and Copeland if there is a further deterioration in the weather in the immediate future; and if he will make a statement. [14814]

Mr. Curry [holding answer 12 February 1996]: It is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary to invoke the provisions of the Emergency Powers Act 1920. It is not clear what authorities in Cumbria might gain if these powers were to be called upon and my right hon. Friend therefore has no plans to ask my right hon. and learned Friend to invoke them as a consequence of the weather conditions in Cumbria.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Information Technology

6. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what investment is being made in the United Kingdom into telecommunications and information super-highway infrastructures; and what proportion of this has been provided by new entrants to the market. [13508]

Mr. Lang: Annual investment in the telecommunications infrastructure in the United Kingdom is running at around £5.5 billion per year, with about half of this coming from operators other than BT. Much of this is in broadband networks which form the backbone to the information super-highways being built in this country.

35. Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the availability to other Departments of spare information technology resources in his Department. [13540]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Spare IT equipment is disposed of in the most cost-effective manner. At present, the vast majority of such equipment is obsolescent and therefore of little long-term value to other Departments. Typically, such equipment is traded in against the provision of new equipment currently being installed as part of my Department's office automation infrastructure.

Electricity Supply

21. Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next expects to meet officials of the National Grid to discuss electricity supply levels. [13526]

Mr. Eggar: I meet officials of the National Grid from time to time to discuss matters relating to electricity supply.

27. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the electricity generating industry leaders to discuss power generating output; and if he will make a statement. [13532]

Mr. Eggar: I meet representatives of the electricity generating industry from time to time to discuss matters relating to electricity supply.

Arms Exports

22. Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out Government policy with regard to sales (a) lethal weapons, (b) non-lethal weapons and (c) dual-use technology and the definitions used to determine the respective categories. [13527]

Mr. Oppenheim: My Department has responsibility for the control of exports of weapons and dual-use goods and technology. The export of such equipment and technology is prohibited without an export licence and details are set out in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 and the Dual-Use and Related Goods (Export Control) Regulations 1995.

It is the Government's policy to support the sale of British defence equipment overseas where this is compatible with our political, security and strategic interests.

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the proportion of defence exports to non-OECD countries as a total of capital goods exports to non-OECD countries over the last six years. [14867]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 12 February 1996]: Defence equipment is not included in the official definition of capital goods. The ratio of United Kingdom defence equipment exports to capital goods exports, to non-OECD countries, is given in the list.

Ratio:

1989: 0.57

1990: 0.49

1991: 0.43

1992: 0.32

1993: 0.26

1994: 0.23.

Note: Defence equipment is defined, in terms of the Standard International Trade Classification (Revision 3), as aircraft and associated equipment (all tariff headings in group 792 other than those identified as "civil", and excluding spacecraft and launch vehicles); warships (tariff heading 890600100) and arms and ammunitions for military purposes (division 98).

Manufacturing Output

23. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the average annual growth in manufacturing output since 1979. [13528]

Mr. Oppenheim: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) earlier today.

33. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the growth in manufacturing output in the past 12 months. [13538]

Mr. Lang: The year 1995 was a record year for manufacturing output which grew by 1.9 per cent.

Solent Ferries

24. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to reach a decision on the Monopolies and Mergers Commission second inquiry into Solent ferries. [13529]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I understand that completion of the Office of Fair Trading's review has been delayed to take account of late submissions from island residents. It is now expected to be complete by the end of March.

Balance of Trade

25. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade with which European countries the United Kingdom currently has a surplus in both visible and invisible trade. [13530]

Mr. Oppenheim: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mr. Purchase).

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for each year since 1985, the percentage change in (a) the volume of semi-manufactured exports and imports and (b) the volume of intermediate manufactured exports and imports. [14491]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 9 February 1996]: The following is the information:

UK trade in semi- and intermediate manufactured goods

	Semi-manufactures		Intermediate manufactures
Year	Export	Imports	Exports	Imports

Mrs. Kennedy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list as a percentage of gross domestic product for each year since 1985 (a) exports and imports of semi-manufactured goods and (b) exports and imports of intermediate manufactured goods. [14541]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 9 February 1996]: The following is the information:

Small Businesses

28. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he is making of the efficiency of his Department's help for small businesses. [13533]

Mr. Page: The Department is taking a number of steps to ensure that the needs of small businesses are met.

The current programme of "Your Business Matters" conferences being organised by the small firms representative organisations is enabling small businesses themselves to have a direct say in the development of future Government policy for the sector. The outcomes of the conferences will be considered in this year's competitiveness White Paper.

The recently established small business ministerial group aims to ensure that the needs of the small business sector are considered in the formulation of policy across Whitehall Departments.

The network of business links is now 80 per cent. complete and is already having a significant impact on the local business community; over 4,000 businesses a week are using business link. Every firm in England will have access to a business link by April this year when they will be the normal delivery route for DTI services.

The range of initiatives and schemes operated by this Department are all subject to careful monitoring and evaluation and are reviewed regularly to ensure they meet the needs of the business community.

Social Chapter

29. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received on the effects on industry of the United Kingdom entering into the social chapter. [13534]

Mr. Lang: I continue to receive numerous representations about the European social chapter during my contacts with industry. The overwhelming view is that acceptance of the social chapter would seriously damage competitiveness and employment because it would allow the United Kingdom to be outvoted on measures imposing unnecessary burdens and costs on businesses.

Saudi Arabia

30. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the estimated level of exports to Saudi Arabia during the current year. [13535]

Mr. Nelson: It is too early to make a realistic estimate of what our exports to Saudi Arabia will be this year. Provisional figures for 1995 indicate that last year we exported goods and services worth £1.64 billion to the Kingdom, an increase of 8 per cent. on 1994. I very much hope this level can be maintained and even exceeded in the coming year.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what resources Her Majesty's Government provided for use as collateral to assist the bid by British Aerospace and Rolls-Royce to provide engines for Blackhawk helicopters being purchased by Saudi Arabia. [14207]

Mr. Oppenheim: No such purchase has been made.

Nuclear Industry Privatisation

31. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the cost to public funds of the privatisation of the nuclear industry. [13536]

Mr. Eggar: The Department has provision for expenditure of £25 million in 1995–96 on restructuring and privatisation of the nuclear power generation industry. Estimates for expenditure in 1996–97 will be published in the supply estimates in due course.

Innovation Incubators

32. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out his policy on the establishment of innovation incubators as an aid to industry. [13637]

Mr. Page: The Department of Trade and Industry is committed to encouraging and co-ordinating measures to support the development of high technology and innovative businesses with growth potential. These measures go wider than innovation incubators, and include, for example, services provided through business links and syndicates of "business angels".

Late Payment of Debts

34. Ms Church: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the impact on British firms of late payment by Government Departments. [13539]

Mr. Page: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Stockport (Ms Coffey).

Funeral Industry

36. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had from the National Funerals College about improvements in the funeral industry. [13541]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have received one such representation and will be replying to it in due course.

Italian Paper Industry (Subsidies)

Mr. Dunn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action is being taken to prevent unfair subsidies being paid by the Italian Government to paper mills in that country. [14927]

Mr. Oppenheim: We recognise that all member states can provide state aid for legitimate purposes which is fully justified within the state aid rules, but we are concerned about aid which unfairly disadvantages unaided competitors.

My Department is not aware of unfair subsidies being paid to Italian paper mills, but would be happy to investigate if further details can be provided.

Medical Research Council

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effect of staff levels at the Medical Research Council of increased earmarking of Medical Research Council funds. [14722]

Mr. Ian Taylor: On 1 October 1994 the Medical Research Council staff level was 3,094. The corresponding figure for 1 October 1995 was 3,057. The allocation of funds for specific priorities has no discernible effect on staff levels.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Janner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are his plans for the funding of industrial tribunals during 1996. [14953]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The industrial tribunals' running cost budget for 1996–97 will be determinded as part of the Department's MINIS 96 exercise, which is currently still under way. The allocation of the Department's programme expenditure will be announced in the departmental expenditure plans report to be published in March.

Technology Statistics

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what statistical studies his Department has undertaken of the contribution to British export performance of (a) high technology, (b) medium technology and (c) low technology sectors of manufacturing industry. [14485]

Mr. Oppenheim: The Department has not recently undertaken any such studies. However, statistics relating to this issue are available in the 1995 issue of the "Industry and Technology Scoreboard of Indicators" published by the OECD. This can be obtained from the Library of the House.

Export Performance

26. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his latest assessment of United Kingdom export performance. [13531]

Mr. Nelson: The latest available export data make very encouraging reading. In the three months to November the United Kingdom's visible exports reached record levels and were 13 per cent. higher than for the same period last year. The UK is still the only G7 country with a significant invisibles trade surplus. These excellent results are confirmation that UK industry has retained, and even improved, its competitive position in world markets in recent years.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the statutory minimum wage, or collectively organised rate then statutorily made binding, in pounds sterling on a purchasing power parity basis in each year since 1979 in (a) each EU state, (b) the USA, (c) Japan, (d) Australia, (e) Canada and (f) New Zealand; and what percentage of the national average wage these levels represented. [14321]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer to my reply of 15 January, Official Report, columns 467–77. In addition, the minimum wage rate in New Zealand is currently NZ$250 for a 40-hour week, which translates to £107.12 at purchasing power parity exchange rates.

The other information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, I refer the hon. Member to the OECD "Jobs Study" which carries a discussions of development in the minimum wage rates of some countries over time, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Inward Investment (Midlands)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what inward investment from outside the United Kingdom took place in the midlands region in each year since 1985; what percentage this constituted of total United Kingdom investment; what were the principal sources of the investment; what were the industries principally involved; and what estimate he has made of the number of jobs which resulted. [14253]

Mr. Oppenheim: The midlands remains a diverse region of the United Kingdom and continues to attract inward investment from many countries and sectors. Principal sources of investment are the United States, Germany and Japan, with automotive/automotive components, electronics, food processing, textiles, textile machinery, chemicals/chemical handling, plastics and general engineering forming the principal industries. The breakdown of project numbers and associated jobs over the period covering both the west and east midlands is as follows.

Year	Number of Mids projects	Number of UK projects	Mids per cent. of UK total	Associated jobs
1985–86	106	420	25	9,365
1986–87	77	356	21	8,613
1987–88	76	363	20	11,606
1988–89	96	348	21	12,052
1989–90	109	375	29	26,858
1990–91	88	356	24	13,617
1991–92	47	332	14	5,778
1992–93	43	303	14	4,062
1993–94	105	404	25	[1]49,797
1994–95	106	453	23	23,936

[1] Figures include safeguarded jobs associated with BMW acquisition of Rover.

All the figures given are based on numbers of projects notified to the Invest in Britain Bureau at the time of the decision to invest. Companies are under no obligation to notify their investment decision and the figures take no account of subsequent developments.

Structural Funds (Northamptonshire)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much has been allocated to schemes in Northamptonshire under (a) the European regional development fund and (b) other structural funds in each of the last five years. [14310]

Mr. Oppenheim: No part of Northamptonshire has been designated under any of the regionally based European structural funds programmes. There have therefore been no offers of grant from such programmes from 1991 to 1995.

The county has been, and continues to be, eligible to receive grants from programmes which are not geographically restricted, namely from the European social fund—ESF—under objective 3 of the funds, and from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund—EAGGF—under objective 5a, as well as grant from the European regional development fund—ERDF—and ESF under a number of Community initiatives applying to the whole of the United Kingdom.

No ERDF grant has been offered during the period 1991–1995 to applicants from Northamptonshire. Information on ESF and EAGGF payments could be provided only at disproportionate cost, since it is not held at county level for either fund.

Scott Inquiry

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to make available copies of the Scott report on 15 February. [15645]

Mr. Lang: In view of the exceptional size of, and interest in, Sir Richard Scott's report, the arrangements for the distribution of copies to hon. Members have been agreed by the Government, the Speaker and the House authorities. The following arrangements will apply: (a) copies will be available from the Reasons Room at the back of the Chair as well as from the Vote Office; (b) under the Speaker's authority, the sitting will be suspended at 3.30 pm for 10 minutes for facilitate the distribution of copies to hon. Members.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the cost of the first print run of the Scott inquiry report; how many copies have been printed; and what will be the availability of the report to interested parties abroad. [14832]

Mr. Lang: The printing costs result from competitive tendering undertaken by HMSO and are therefore commercially confidential.

Some 3,500 copies of the report will be delivered for publication; the position is being monitored and additional copies can be obtained at short notice.

HMSO mail order services operate for overseas customers. Orders will be accepted direct. HMSO also has a network of stockists and agents overseas, who will order publications on request.

Mr. Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ensure that copies of the supporting information for Lord Justice Scott's inquiry report comprising selected material from documents submitted to the inquiry are published as soon after the publication of the report itself as possible; and if he will ensure that the information is available in paper copy as well as microfiche and CD-ROM versions. [14831]

Mr. Lang: As soon as possible after publication of the report, the inquiry will be publishing the supporting documents in an accessible form.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions since 1 January 1995 (a) he, (b) Ministers in his Department and (c) officials in his Department have had contact with Lord Howe concerning his correspondence with the Scott inquiry. [14822]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 12 February 1996]: As a former colleague, Lord Howe has kept me informed about these matters from time to time.

Trade (New Zealand)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is (i), the value of (a) exports and (b) imports and (ii) the trade balance with New Zealand in each year since 1996. [14135]

Mr. Oppenheim: The information is given in the table.

Technology Transfer

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the support his Department gives to assist with technology transfer to small firms. [13504]

Mr. Page: My Department supports a range of activities which aim to increase the demand for relevant technology and best practice techniques, assist firms' access to them and broaden the range of technology transfer services available.

Environmental Appraisals

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many environmental appraisals were produced by his Department using the guidance contained in the Department of the Environment's "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" in 1995; and if he will place copies in the Library. [15118]

Mr. Page: At the moment this information is not held centrally in the DTI. However, an interdepartmental project will shortly be set up to evaluate the effect of the "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" document on decision making across Whitehall.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the estimated annual saving to business from the Deregulation (Gun Barrel Proving) Order 1996. [13905]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The estimated annual saving to business from the Deregulation (Gun Barrel Proving) Order 1996 is £200.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Development Organisations

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which development organisations have received public funding in each of the four Belfast constituencies in the last year. [8005]

Mr. Ancram: A list of local community and economic development organisation in each of the four Belfast constituencies which have received public funding from the Department of Economic Development and the Department of the Environment sources in the last year is given.

A separate list is also given which covers organisations whose activities under the Health and Personal Social Services (National Insurance) Order 1994, the community volunteering scheme, physical and social environment programme and the Children and Young Persons Act (National Insurance) 1968 are directly funded by the Department of Health and Social Services. Voluntary organisations funded by health and social services boards trusts could be identified by constituency only at disproportionate cost.

Hydro-electricity

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list (a) the amount of public money which is being allocated to the development of hydro-electric power generation in Northern Ireland, (b) the site where the developments will take place and (c) the amount allocated to each locality. [13999]

Mr. Ancram: There are no public funds allocated to the development of hydro-electric power generation in Northern Ireland.

Departmental Publications

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of his Department's administrative manuals and internal guidance are now made public; and which remain private. [14021]

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments have many hundreds of administrative manuals and internal guidance leaflets and could provide the information requested only at disproportionate cost.

However, the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments are all committed to the code of practice on access to government information and have agreed to make available on request as much information as possible except where release could prejudice any matters which should properly be kept confidential under annexe A, part II of the code.

LEDU Employees

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the religious affiliation of employees within LEDU—Local Enterprise Development Unit—at the (a) Belfast, (b) Newry, (c) Ballymena, (d) Omagh, (e) Londonderry and (f) Newtownards regional offices. [14051]

Mr. Ancram: Under article 14A of the Fair Employment (Monitoring) Regulations 1989, LEDU is unable to answer this question.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the religious balance in respect of employees in LEDU. [14052]

Mr. Ancram: The religious composition of LEDU employees is as follows:

	Amount
Protestant employees	152
Roman Catholic employees	75
Employees whose community cannot be determined	2

LEDU Marketing Awareness Programme

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the marketing awareness programme contracts allocated to Capita, indicating the value of each. [14053]

Mr. Ancram: The contract to manage LEDU's pilot marketing awareness programme for 1990–93 was awarded to Capita Management Consultants following a competitive tendering process. Capita was also appointed to manage the programme on a Northern Ireland-wide basis from October 1993 to March 1996 as the result of a further competitive tender.

Capita is the managing agent for MAP, which is delivered by a number of consultants throughout Northern Ireland.

The total value of MAP contracts awarded to date is £1.15 million. This includes both fees to Capita directly and to the various consultants who actually delivered the programme.

It would not be appropriate to disclose the value of individual contracts as these are commercial in confidence.

Computer Networks

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all (a) Internet and (b) other computer network, sites or bulletin boards, operated by his Department or containing information supplied by his Department, indicating for each site or bulletin board (a) the inaugural date, (b) the timetable and policy in respect of updates, (c) the Internet, or other network, address of each site or board and (d) to whom the site or board is currently made available and the criteria which must be fulfilled by applicants for access. [14230]

Sir John Wheeler: The information is as follows:

(a) Internet

The business development service of the Department of Finance and Personnel operates an Internet service on behalf of Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office which also extends to their executive agencies and other associated bodies. The information requested on this is as follows:

(i) The NICS world wide web server was launched on 22 May 1995.

(ii) No formal timetable or policy for updates to existing information have yet been established, but inputting of new information and updates to existing entries on the NICS WWW pages are taking place continuously.

Training access points is a Great Britain initiative which was introduced into Northern Ireland in 1989. The database consists of more than 10,500 records of education and training opportunities which can be accessed by the general public via computer terminal.

There are 41 terminals throughout Northern Ireland, mainly in Training and Employment Agency offices and open learning centres, installed over a period of four years.

The details of available information are updated monthly

Firearms

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of members of gun clubs are from each religious denomination. [14069]

Sir John Wheeler: Religion is not taken into account in the consideration of firearms certificate and firearms club applications. Such information is therefore unavailable.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many gun licences have been granted in Northern Ireland since 1966; and how many guns can be held on one licence. [14065]

Sir John Wheeler: There are no records of the numbers of firearm certificates issued prior to 1975, but the table shows the number of certificates current at 31 December for each year since then:

1975: 78,216
1976: 79,718
1977: 81,402
1978: 82,248
1979: 83,549
1980: 85,379
1981: 83,342
1982: 84,250
1983: 85,170
1984: 86,039
1985: 88,340
1986: 89,169
1987: 88,358
1988: 88,130
1989: 88,410
1990: 87,422
1991: 86,907
1992: 87,456
1993: 87,383
1994: 87,949
1995: 88,170.

There is no specific limit to the number of firearms which can be held on one certificate. However, article 28(ii) of the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 states that a firearm certificate shall not be granted unless the Chief Constable is satisfied that the applicant has a good reason for purchasing, acquiring or having in his possession the firearm or ammunition in respect of which the application is made.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the current figures for ownership of gun licences among (a) Protestants and (b) Roman Catholics. [14066]

Sir John Wheeler: There is no information held on the religious background of any firearm certificate holder or gun club member.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many gun licences are currently held in Northern Ireland by farmers. [14067]

Sir John Wheeler: The information needed to answer this question is not available in the form requested and to obtain it would incur disproportionate cost.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the current memberships of gun clubs. [14068]

Sir John Wheeler: The total membership of the 42 approved firearms clubs in Northern Ireland is approximately 3,350.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what changes have taken place in the criteria relating to gun licences since the ceasefire. [14070]

Sir John Wheeler: The regulations governing the issue of firearms certificates are contained in the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 and they have not changed since the order was made.

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments since 1987, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14084]

Sir John Wheeler: There have been no cases.

Interpretation Act

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will set up a working party to arrange for drafting an updated merger of the Interpretation Act 1954, c. 33 (Northern Ireland) with the Interpretation Act 1978 c. 30. [13798]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 8 February 1996]: No. I am unaware of any concerns having been expressed about the operation of either the 1954 Act or the 1978 Act. I therefore have no plans to set up a working party to draft a new Interpretation Act.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many claimants in the last three years were refused incapacity benefit because of inadequate national insurance contributions or credits; and if he will introduce an alternative eligibility rule based on the best two years of the last five years of contributions. [14551]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 13 February 1996]: The information is not available in the form requested.

The Government have no plans to change the contribution conditions for incapacity benefit.

Concessionary Fares Scheme

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new passes have been issued since July 1995 in respect of the Northern Ireland concessionary fares scheme. [14726]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 13 February 1996]: A total of 12,270 new passes were issued between 1 July 1995 and 4 February 1996.

Murders and Beatings

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many murders and beatings have been attributed to terrorist organisations since the start of the current ceasefires. [14470]

Sir John Wheeler: From 1 September 1994 to 7 February 1996, there were 12 murders in Northern Ireland: three attributed to loyalist groups, nine to republican groups. This does not include a police officer, Constable Seymour, who died on 2 March 1995 as a result of injuries sustained in a gun attack on 4 May 1973. Eleven of these murders were carried out since the ceasefire announced by the combined loyalist military command on 14 October 1994.

In addition, 287 people were injured in so-called punishment assaults during this period, 107 of which were attributed to loyalist groups, 180 to republican groups. Since the CLMC ceasefire, 275 people have been injured in this type of attack.

Community Employment Schemes

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many people have so far participated in the community work programme in each of the targeted areas; [14727]

(2) how many organisations have so far participated in the community work programme in each of the three targeted areas; [14731]

(3) what are the targets for participants in the community work programme for each of the next three years. [14732]

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Mr. Eric Illsley, dated 14 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency to reply to your questions on the Community Work Programme.

Question 14727

The number of persons who have to date participated in each of the three pilot areas is as follows:

Area	Number
Belfast	251
Fermanagh	149
Strabane	74
Total	474

Question 14731

The number of participating organisations is:

Area	Number
Belfast	25
Fermanagh	69
Strabane	30
Total	124

Question 14732

The Community Work Programme is a pilot initiative for the long term unemployed with a target of 1,000 filled places in each of the two years 1996/97 and 1997/98. By 31 March 1997 a full evaluation of the pilot will have been completed and a decision taken on the programme's future.

I hope you find this reply useful. I will of course be pleased to provide further information if you would find it helpful.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Mobility Centres

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's decision not to provide financial support to the United Kingdom Forum of Mobility Centres; [13774]

(2) what plans he has to provide assistance to the United Kingdom Forum of Mobility Centres in the future. [13775]

Mr. Burt: Her Majesty's Government provide financial support to three members of the United Kingdom Forum of Mobility Centres. Extra funding for these voluntary sector organisations could not be provided through this Department due to competing pressures. We are currently discussing both with other interested Government Departments and members of the UK forum what practical and financial assistance, if any, can be provided to ensure they carry on their valuable work.

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments since 1987, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14078]

Mr. Burt: There is none.

Liable Relatives System

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the total cases dealt with by the liable relatives system involved the arrangement of maintenance for (a) spouses without children and (b) sponsored immigrants in each year since 1989. [14456]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available.

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the service availability of the Child Support Agency computer system in each month since April 1993. [14458]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Disabled People

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to increase the independent living fund to help disabled people who use the funds to pay for a personal assistant; and if he will make a statement. [14604]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: None. Payments from the funds are intended to pay for personal care and assistance.

Mrs. Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to investigate alternative methods of payment to disabled people living independently to cater for the employment of personal assistants. [14605]

Mr. Burt: We keep the ways in which we provide support for disabled people and their carers under review.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what duties Departments and their agencies have under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to make their facilities and services available to disabled people. [14633]

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. McMaster) on 15 January, Official Report, column 417.

Welfare State (Targets)

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what targets his Department has set to measure the success of the welfare state. [14759]

Mr. Burt: The Government's social security programme aims to provide a fair and efficient system of help for beneficiaries which also gives the best possible value for money for taxpayers.

A large range of indicators are used to measure the Government's success. For example, recent reforms have ensured that the social security system continues to be affordable by reducing projected expenditure by £3.5 billion this year, while at the same time continuing to maintain the value of benefits for those in most need.

The targets and achievements of the Department and its agencies are published each year in the departmental report. Copies of the report are available from the Library.

Compensation Recovery Scheme

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to publish the compliance cost assessment produced by Price Waterhouse on the cost of implementing the proposals of the Social Security Committee for reform of the compensation recovery scheme; and if he will be consulting on its findings. [15206]

Mr. Roger Evans: The compliance cost assessment has been published today and copies are being placed in the Library. I intend to consult widely on the implications of this assessment.

War Pensions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements exist for reimbursing local authorities for the cost of operating the statutory £10 disregard of war widows' pensions and war disablement pensions when assessing eligibility for council tax and housing benefit; and what was the overall amounts paid to local authorities for such purposes in each of the last five years. [13599]

Mr. Heald: Central Government funding for the administration costs of operating the housing benefit and council tax benefit schemes, as distinct from subsidy paid in respect of benefit payments, is made to local authorities by the Department of the Environment, via the revenue support grant, and by direct grant from the Department of Social Security.

Neither payment is sub-divided by reference to individual aspects of these schemes.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the claims for reinstatement of widows' pension by widows' who remarried but whose subsequent marriage ended have been processed; what percentage of the total this represents; how long it has taken on average to process each claim; and what steps he is taking to expedite such claims. [14045]

Mr. Heald: These are matters for Kevin Caldwell, the chief executive of the War Pensions Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from K. C. Caldwell to Mr. Chris Smith, dated 13 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about restored War Widows Pension.

As at 2 February 1996, 12430 claims have been received of which 7394 have been notified of an award and had payment arranged, and 85 have had their claim rejected. Thus, 60 per cent. of the total claims received have bee processed.

I do not have a ready means of calculating precisely the average clearance times. But I can tell you that the first formal claims for a restored widows pension began to be received in August and we were able to start notifying widows of the result from 22 September, by which time we had received 8282 claims. We are now notifying and arranging payment in claims which were made in September.

We have recently been able to increase the staff working on this exercise and now have the capacity to notify up to 1000 widows a week of the result of their claim.

This will enable us to ensure that by the end of March 90 per cent of claimants will be notified of the result of their claims within 4 weeks of having made a claim.

I hope this is helpful.

Central Provident Fund

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce a central provident fund following the model of Singapore in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [14897]

Mr. Heald: We have no such plans.

The International Monetary Fund recently reported that the average annual return on the state-run Singapore scheme since 1980 has been only 2 per cent. more than inflation. This contrasts with British pension funds which have yielded almost 10 per cent. more than inflation, and now stands at almost £600 billion.

Environmental Appraisals

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many environmental appraisals were produced by his Department using the guidance contained in the Department of the Environment's "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" in 1995; and if he will place copies in the Library. [15120]

Mr. Roger Evans: The Department of Social Security does not currently monitor environmental appraisals. However, we have a place in a departmental environmental strategy and we are currently running an environmental pilot scheme to examine what can be achieved by environmental good practice in a number of key areas. Results from the pilot scheme will be available by the end of August 1996. It is expected that the findings will assist future project development. We are also aware of the Department of the Environment's proposed project that will examine how far environmental impacts are taken into account in policy decisions and we will be pleased to co-operate.

Benefit Take-up Rates

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the take-up rates of (a) severe disability premium, (b) supplementary benefit, (c) social fund, (d) invalid care allowance, (e) disability living allowance (attendance/care), (f) disability living allowance (mobility), (g) income support and (h) the total benefits in (i) Warrington and (ii) the north-west region in the last 12 months. [14629]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 13 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what estimate he has made of the take-up rates of (a) Severe Disability Premium (SDP), (b) Supplementary Benefit, (c) Social Fund (SF), (d) Invalid Care Allowance, (e) Disability Living Allowance (attendance/care), (f) Disability Living Allowance (mobility), (g) Income Support (IS) and (h) the total benefits in (i) Warrington and (ii) the North West region in the last 12 months.

The information is not available in the format requested. Statistics about the number of customers receiving SDP are not available because they are not routinely collected. Supplementary Benefit was replaced by IS in April 1988.

Table A shows the latest available information for DLA. The North West Region is the area covered by Cheshire, Greater Manchester, Merseyside and Lancashire. The Disability Living Allowance figures are for all customers who have a Warrington postcode.

Table B show the latest available information for Social Fund and Income Support. However, information for these benefits is not collected by region and the figures supplied are, therefore, based on Districts involved at the footnote of the table. The Benefits Agency's North Cheshire District covers the Warrington area.

The Invalid Care Allowance information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Table A: Disability Living Allowance (DLA) awards for the year to November 1995

	North-west region[1]	Warrington[2]
Award of DLA mobility	40,000	2,000
Award of DLA care	41,000	2,000

Figures are provisional and subject to change.

[1] Statistics are collated by Disability Benefits Centres and the Disability Benefit Unit at Fylde. The North West region includes the Bootle and Manchester Disability Centres.

[2] DLA customers with a Warrington postcode.

These figures have been supplied by the Department of Social Security's analytical services division. They have been rounded and are based on a 5 per cent. sample.

Table B: Social fund applications and income support successful claims for the year to December 1995

	BA Districts listed below[1]	North Cheshire District Office[2]
Total SF applications	645,079	32,794
Total IS claims	438,012	21,996

Figures are provisional and subject to change.

[1] Statistics are collated at Area Directorate and District Office level and not by region. The figures given are collated from information provided by the following districts:

Liverpool Bootle, Liverpool Kirkby, Liverpool Breckfield, Liverpool Edge Hill, Liverpool Garston, St. Helens, Birkenhead North, Chester, Stockport South, Hyde, Manchester Wythenshawe, Warrington, Manchester Longsight, Salford South, Manchester Sale, Oldham, Manchester Bishopgate, Blackburn, Blackpool North, Bolton, Burnley, Lancaster, Preston, Bury and Wigan.

[2] Includes the BA offices of Warrington and Widnes.

These figures have been supplied by the Benefits Agency's central data unit, are provisional and may be subject to change.

Social Fund (Northumberland)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social fund applications for (a) grants and (b) loans have been turned down in the local benefits agencies of Blyth Valley, Northumberland since (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) 1994. [13488]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Ronnie Campbell, dated 13 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many Social Fund applications for (a) grants and (b) loans have been turned down in the local benefits agencies of Blyth Valley, Northumberland since (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) 1994.

Blyth Valley is part of the Benefits Agency district of Northumberland which comprises of the Benefit offices of Ashington, Berwick, Blyth and Hexham. The information is not available in the form requested as figures are only available for the Northumberland District as a whole. These are shown in the table at Annex A.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Annex A: Social fund refusals April 1992–March 1995

Year	Number of loans refused	Number of grants refused
Northumberland district
1992–93	2,632	3,309
1993–94	2,710	3,177
1994–95	3,064	3,803

Figures are provisional and subject to change.

Occupational and Private Pensions

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what effect converting an occupational or private pension assessed as trivial by his Department into a lump sum has for income support purposes; and if he will assess the advantages of disregarding a trivial occupational or private pension for income support purposes. [13782]

Mr. Heald: A lump sum acquired in this way is taken into account in accordance with the normal rules which provide for the first £3,000 of capital to be disregarded. A person who commutes a pension into a lump sum with the intention of securing income support, or of increasing the amount of benefit payable, can be treated as if that income were still in payment. There are no plans at present to change these arrangements.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Pensions and Stipends

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what powers the Synod has to instruct the Commissioners to (a) reduce the level of pensions already in payment and (b) reduce the level of stipends in payment.

Mr. Alison: The General Synod has no power to instruct the commissioners to reduce the level of pensions in payment. The levels are determined in accordance with the pensions regulations. Under the current arrangements, the legislation gives to the commissioners the power to increase the figures, which they customarily exercise in line with the Church's pensions policy. There is no provision for any reduction to be made in the monetary amounts payable.

Stipend levels are determined on a diocesan basis by the bishop with the concurrence of the Diocesan Board of Finance in accordance with section 5 of the Diocesan Stipends Funds Measure 1953, having regard to the advice of the commissioners as central stipends authority. The commissioners were appointed as central stipends authority by a General Synod Regulation in 1972, revised in 1982. The Synod has the power to amend this regulation if it so wishes by appointing another authority, but cannot directly reduce the level of stipends.

The Synod also has the power to amend the above legislation, subject to the agreement of Parliament.

ENVIRONMENT

Youth Service

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total public spending on the youth service by each local education authority (a) in cash terms and (b) as a proportion of the total local authority budget for each year since 1979; and what estimate he has made of the figures for (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97. [14656]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have placed the available information in the Library of the House.

Water (Pesticides)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the costs to the water industry of removing pesticides from water in 1994–95. [14642]

Mr. Clappison: The Director General of Water Services estimates that £200 million was spent on treatment to remove pesticides from drinking water supplies in England and Wales in 1994–95.

Mrs. Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the costs to the water industry of removing (a) nitrates, (b) phosphates and (c) pesticides from water. [14647]

Mr. Clappison: The Director General of Water Services estimates that the costs to the water industry up to 1994–95 of removing nitrates from drinking water supplies in England and Wales is £150 million, and pesticides £600 million. No equivalent estimate is available on the cost of removal of phosphates.

Water Regulations

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the annual costs to the water industry of complying with the existing water regulations. [14646]

Mr. Clappison: The Director General of Water Services estimates that the cost to the water industry in England and Wales, in order to meet the requirements of the water quality regulations, in the period 1990–91 to 1994–95, was around £2,600 million.

Mrs. Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the costs to the water industry of complying with the water regulations in 1994–95. [14641]

Mr. Clappison: The Director General of Water Services estimates the cost to the water industry in 1994–95 in England and Wales, in order to meet the requirements of the Water Quality Regulations, was around £500 million.

New Dwellings

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list by region the total number of dwellings started by (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations, (c) new town development corporations and (d) other public authorities in each local authority area in England in each year since 1979; [15067]

(2) if he will list by region the total number of dwellings completed by (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations, (c) new town development corporations and (d) other public authorities, in each local authority area in England in each year since 1979. [15068]

Mr. Curry: Local authorities' primary housing tasks are now the efficient management of their own stock of housing and enabling other organisations to provide new housing. Housing associations are now the main providers of new social housing.

The publications "Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Area: 1980 to 1989" and "Local Housing Statistics" show estimates of housebuilding starts and completions. They cover each local authority area and each new town development corporation area in England. They show starts and completions by sector, including activity by local authorities and by housing associations.

"Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Area: 1980 to 1989" shows figures for the period 1980 to 1984. "Local Housing Statistics" shows figures for 1979 and later years: issue number 59 covers 1979; number 103 covers the years 1985 to 1990; number 105 covers 1991: number 106 covers 1992; number 110 covers 1993; and number 114 covers 1994, the latest year for which annual figures are available. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

However, the starts and completions figures do not show all the new and additional social lettings made available by housing associations each year. In particular, lettings provided by renovation are rehabilitation and by shared ownership and incentive scheme programmes do not feature in the housebuilding statistics.

Local Government Finance

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total sum allocated to each English local authority from central Government resources in each year since 1974. [13822]

Mr. Curry: I have placed the available information in the Library of the House.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by region the total amount of (a) useable and (b) set-aside capital receipts held by each local authority in England at 31 March 1995. [15066]

Mr. Curry: A list by region of the amounts of accumulated usable capital receipts for each English local authority at 31 March 1995 was placed in the Library of the House in response to the question of Monday 22 January 1996, Official Report, column 85 from the hon. member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith).

Figures for the amounts of set aside capital receipts are not available. These form part of the provision for credit liabilities, which is reported to the Department, but which also includes amounts set aside from revenue.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the rules regarding payment of non-domestic rates by businesses being run while in receivership; and if he will make a statement. [14997]

Sir Paul Beresford: In general, any non-domestic property which is in beneficial occupation is liable to a non-domestic rate. However, a number of recent court cases have cast doubt over the ability of local authorities to recover rates where a receiver or administrative receiver has been appointed.

We believe that companies which continue trading while in receivership should also continue to pay their on-going liability for rates. We are considering possible measures to make it easier for local authorities to ensure that this is done. We will issue a consultation paper later this year.

Minewater Discharges

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate has been made of the cost of eliminating (a) minewater pollution and (b) minewater discharges on a regional basis; and if he will make a statement. [14935]

Mr. Clappison: Discharges from operational mines are regulated in the same way as other discharges to controlled waters. As regards pollution from abandoned coal mines, the Coal Authority, in consultation with the National Rivers Authority, is in the process of assessing the cost of dealing with water pollution at a number of key sites. So far as discharges from other types of abandoned mines are concerned, it has not been practicable to make a general assessment of the cost of eliminating them. However, in the case of watercourses affected by discharges from the Wheal Jane tin mine in Cornwall, I understand that the National Rivers Authority has so far spent approximately £9 million on the treatment of minewater, and is currently assessing the cost of that treatment in the future.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in respect of minewater pollution with particular reference to discharges produced by abandoned mines; and if he will make a statement. [14934]

Mr. Clappison: In the last six months, my Department has received three representations relating to the provisions on pollution from abandoned mines in the Environment Act 1995.

Urban Waste Water Directive

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated number of overflows requiring work to meet the requirement of the urban waste water directive; and at what cost, (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in the north-west region; what funding his Department will make available; and if he will make a statement. [14936]

Mr. Clappison: The Director General of Water Services, when he set new price limits for the industry in July 1994, made provision of more than £1 billion for the upgrading of over 2,400 combined sewer overflows in England and Wales under the urban waste water treatment directive. The details of the programme of works are matters for the companies and the local offices of the National Rivers Authority.

Anti-social Neighbours

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had on the issue of criminal anti-social neighbours. [13858]

Mr. Clappison: The Housing Bill now before Parliament includes a range of legislative measures to help landlords to tackle anti-social behaviour. Discussions on this topic continue between officials in the relevant Government Departments and the local authority associations.

Bury and Oldham Borough Councils

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has decided to take in relation to Bury metropolitan borough council following the notices served on it on 12 June and 29 August 1995 and to Oldham metropolitan borough council following the notice served on it on 15 August 1995 for anti-competitive behaviour in assigning certain services in-house. [15649]

Sir Paul Beresford: On 12 June and 29 August 1995, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State served notices on Bury metropolitan borough council, setting out his view that the authority had acted anti-competitively during a competition for refuse collection, street cleaning, public convenience cleaning and highways maintenance work worth £1.95 million per annum. On 15 August 1995, my right hon. Friend also served a notice on Oldham metropolitan borough council setting out his view that the authority had acted anti-competitively during a competition for the north-west area (area 2) building maintenance contract worth approximately £1.5 million per annum.

My right hon. Friend has given careful consideration to the authorities' responses to the notices.

Bury withheld information from private contractors relating to depot facilities and to the available vehicle fleet. In my right hon. Friend's view this was unfair as it made it impossible for private contractors to put in bids for the work based on the same information as was available to the in-house team. He has therefore today given the authority a direction which requires it to re-tender the refuse collection, street cleaning, public convenience cleaning and highways maintenance work by 14 October. It must seek his consent if, at the end of the re-tendering process, it plans to assign the work to its direct services organisation.

Oldham required prospective contractors to undertake to submit a TUPE bid—one incorporating the present staff's terms and conditions—if they were given the TUPE information. In my right hon. Friend's view, private contractors who have been given details of the present terms and conditions should still be allowed the freedom to bid using different assumptions because the in-house team can revise the way in which it delivers the work and it is unfair to deny this to some of the bidders. He has therefore today given the authority a direction which requires it to re-tender the north-west area (area 2) building maintenance contract by 14 October. The direction bars its direct services organisation from undertaking the work in future.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources he will make available to those local authorities which are to be reorganised on 1 April and which were asked to reconsider whether the reorganisations in their area could be implemented more economically. [15858]

Mr. Curry: The councils of the East Riding of Yorkshire, Hull city, Bristol city, Bath and North East Somerset and York district were asked to reconsider their estimates of the amount of expenditure they expect to incur on transitional costs of reorganisation in 1996–97. On the basis of the revised information provided by the five authorities, I have decided the maximum amounts to allocate towards such costs in 1996–97. The amounts are as follows:

Maximum amounts: £ thousands rounded

Authority	1996–97	Cumulative total 1995–96 and 1996–97
East Riding of Yorkshire Council	7,000	8,200
Hull City Council	3,000	6,000
Bristol City Council	3,500	6,500
Bath and North East Somerset Council	4,000	5,810
York District Council	3,500	6,050

I shall make a further announcement about the allocations to authorities for which reorganisation orders have not yet been made.

Water Companies (Delayed Payments)

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about North West Water's delayed payments for work undertaken by local authorities on the company's behalf. [13202]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 5 February 1996]: None. Any arrangements between water companies and local authorities are a matter for the individual parties concerned.

WALES

Teachers

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many full-time equivalent teachers were employed by each Welsh education authority in: (a) January 1991 and (b) January 1995. [14039]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is given in the following table. Figures refer to school teachers only. Teachers in further and higher education establishments were employed by local education authorities in 1991 but by 1995 the majority were employed by the institutions themselves. Comparisons between the two years would not therefore be meaningful.

Number of full-time equivalent school teachers

Local education authority	Number[1,2] 1991	1995
Clwyd	3,707	3,212
Dyfed	3,527	3,570
Gwent	4,038	4,049
Gwynedd	2,299	2,232
Mid Glamorgan	5,302	5,443
Powys	1,234	1,184
South Glamorgan	3,733	3,831
West Glamorgan	3,632	3,464
Total	27,472	26,984

Notes:
[1] At January each year. Includes teachers based in schools, peripatetic teachers, advisory teachers and teachers in occasional service.
[2] Full time equivalent teacher numbers are shown to the nearest whole number.

Health Service

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions (a) wards and (b) departments of hospitals have been closed in Wales in (i) 1995 and (ii) 1996; and if he will list the hospitals. [14802]

Mr. Richards: The information is not held centrally.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to request the Welsh health planning forum to review the future supply and demand for hospital beds. [15124]

Mr. Hague: The responsibility for ensuring that the NHS has the appropriate number of beds to meet the needs of the population rests with health authorities. Health authorities regularly review the bed capacity available in their areas and through the contracting process and in discussion with NHS trusts balance the provision between emergency, planned and continuing care.

The Department's contract with the Welsh Health Common Services Authority for the services provided by the Welsh Health Planning Forum expired last year.

Paediatric Intensive Care Beds

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the supply and demand for paediatric intensive care beds in (a) Welsh hospitals and (b) in adjoining English specialist hospitals serving adjoining areas of Wales; how many paediatric intensive care beds there are in each Welsh hospital which has them; how many beds are (i) installed but are not currently staffed and (ii) under construction; and if he will make a statement. [15141]

Mr. Hague: There is currently one paediatric intensive care facility at the cardiac unit at the University hospital of Wales. Other demand is met by adult units.

My Department has asked all health authorities and NHS trusts in Wales to work in partnership to review against assessed need the adequacy of the current provision for intensive and high dependency care facilities, including the requirement for dedicated facilities for children. Health authorities are due to report the outcome of this exercise, including action to address any deficiencies, by the end of this month.

Mr. Glyn Davies

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the payments of (a) salary, (b) expenses and (c) other emoluments to Mr. Glyn Davies in respect of membership of (i) the Development Board for Rural Wales and (ii) other public appointments between 1985 and 1995. [15221]

Mr. Hague: The information is not readily available. I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 15 February. [14015]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 15 February. [14017]

The Prime Minister: This morning, I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister how many directives have been passed through the Council of Ministers in each of last five years. [13906]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 February 1996]: The Commission's most up-to-date figures for the number of Council directives in the last five years are:

1991: 68
1992: 93
1993: 66
1994: 49
1995: 31.

Ghazanfer Ali

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if he will call for a further report into the case of Ghazanfer Ali who is detained in prison in Mirpur city in Azad Kashmir; and if he will make a statement. [15348]

The Prime Minister: I understand that Mr. Ali, a Pakistani national, has now been formally charged with murder and the illegal possession of arms and that he is making regular appearances in court. The next hearing are scheduled for 24 and 29 February. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary will continue to monitor his case on humanitarian grounds.

DEFENCE

Armed Forces (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to reduce the presence and activities of the armed forces in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [14918]

Mr. Soames: Force levels in Northern Ireland are kept under continuous review and will remain appropriate to the security situation and to the need for UK bases.

Kevin Duncan

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations to the court were made on behalf of Kevin Duncan, a serving soldier in the Highlanders, in respect of his sentence for a drink driving conviction in January. [15075]

Mr. Soames: It is normal practice, as in the case to which the hon. Member refers, for an officer to accompany all soldiers to civilian court appearances to provide character references, job descriptions and details of pay and allowances. Information is also offered to the court about military matters which it may find helpful in its consideration of the case. The conduct of the court's proceedings is a matter for the court itself.

TRANSPORT

Rail Freight Capacity

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what spare freight capacity exists on the rail routes running north from London. [14741]

Mr. Watts: I am informed by Railtrack that considerable spare capacity exists.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he first learnt of the alleged irregularities involving work by Union Railways on the channel tunnel rail link. [15162]

Mr. Watts: I was first informed by Union Railways of the alleged irregularities on Tuesday 6 February.

There is no suggestion of any connection between the alleged irregularities and the evidence Union Railways has presented to the Select Committee considering the Bill, or of any connection with the competition to select the private sector promoter for the channel tunnel rail link project.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the inquiry into the alleged irregular processes involving Union Railways is to be completed. [15163]

Mr. Watts: The inquiry into the alleged irregular processes involving Union Railways began on Wednesday 7 February and is expected to take several weeks to complete.

Dial-a-Ride Service (London)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of the dial-a-ride service in the London area. [15297]

Mr. Norris: The Government are committed to the continued provisions of a dial-a-ride service in London.

Motor Vehicle Licensing Offices

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff are employed at the Coventry motor vehicle licensing office; and what provision for transfer of staff to other licensing offices when the Coventry office closes has been made. [15218]

Mr. Norris: There are currently 22 staff employed at Coventry vehicle registration office including job sharers and part timers, a member of staff on secondment from a neighbouring VRO and five casual staff. Permanent staff have given the opportunity to say if they would want to transfer to a neighbouring VRO. Every effort will be made to effect whatever transfers are necessary.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to close the Leicester motor vehicle licensing office. [15216]

Mr. Norris: As part of the rationalisation of DVLA's local office network, Leicester vehicle registration office will close later this year and the work will be transferred in stages to neighbouring VROs such as Nottingham, Peterborough and Birmingham. The VRO's customers including motor dealers, will be consulted so that their needs can be taken into account when making these revised arrangements.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles were registered at (a) Coventry and (b) Nottingham motor vehicle licensing offices in each of the last six years. [15217]

Mr. Norris: The table shows the number of new vehicles registered at (a) Coventry and (b) Nottingham vehicle registration offices over the last four financial years excluding those intended for personal and direct export. The information is not readily available for the earlier periods as it was compiled on a different basis.

	Coventry	Nottingham
1991–92	46,233	46,015
1992–93	72,677	44,230
1993–94	72,696	48,463
1994–95	68,773	50,171

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from vehicle manufacturers in Coventry regarding the closure of the Coventry motor vehicle licensing office; and what proportion were in favour of the closure. [15219]

Mr. Norris: None.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultation his Department held with motor vehicle manufacturers in Coventry regarding the closure of the Coventry motor vehicle licensing office. [15220]

Mr. Norris: In August 1994, it was announced that the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency was to close all its local offices, including Coventry, by 1997. The Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders and the Retail Motor Industry Federation were informed through their normal links with the agency. No consultation was undertaken with individual manufacturers. A later review completed in January showed a continuing need for a local office presence and although 40 of the 50 offices will remain, open 10—including Coventry—will still close by 1997.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what considerations underlay his Department's decision to close the Coventry motor vehicle licensing office. [15213]

Mr. Norris: In August 1994 my right hon. Friend wrote to the hon. Member to announce the closure of the vehicle registration office in Coventry. Although a more recent review has recommended retention of 40 offices, the one in Coventry is still planned to close.

The overall aim is to reduce the network's operating costs and to match its size to the expected future work patterns. In the case of Coventry, the lease on the premises had expired.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what extra provision he has made for increases in registration at the Nottingham motor vehicle licensing office from March. [15214]

Mr. Norris: Motor dealers who currently use Coventry vehicle registration office which is to close in March have been asked to indicate which vehicle registration offices they would prefer to use to conduct their business in future. That consultation is currently taking place and when complete will indicate what additional work will move to neighbouring offices such as Birmingham, Nottingham and Northampton. Resources will be adjusted to take account of any increases in order to maintain service standards.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average capacity of a motor vehicle licensing office in respect of the issue of vehicle licences. [15215]

Mr. Norris: The capacity of each office varies according to the size and population of the area for which it provides services and the mix of those services, in particular the mix of work between registration and licensing work and vehicle excise duty enforcement. A national average capacity based on licensing work handled by the 50 local offices in 1994–95 would be around 94,000 licences per office per year.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when construction work will start on the modernisation of the west coast main line. [15298]

Mr. Watts: It is Railtrack's intention to invite tenders and award the main works implementation contract later this year.

A programme of initial modernisation work is being planned to commence this summer and will be targeted in those areas from which the greatest benefits can be gained.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Probate Offices, Bradford and Leeds

Mr. Madden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many personal interviews took place at the Bradford probate office in each of the last five years to date; how many personal interviews took place at the Leeds district probate registry over the same period; what were the opening hours of both offices during this period; what representations have been received, to date, to the proposal to close the Bradford probate office; how many such representations have been (a) supportive of and (b) opposed to closure. [15347]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Max Madden, dated 15 February 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question about Bradford Probate Office and Leeds District Probate Registry.

The number of personal interviews at Bradford Probate Office for each of the last five years are as follows:

1991: 229

1992: 209

1993: 287

1994: 281

1995: 309.

The number of personal interviews at Leeds District Probate Registry for each of the last five years are as follows:

1991: 1,035

1992: 1,145

1993: 1,235

1994: 1,309

1995: 1,348

Bradford Probate Office is open to the public for interviews on the first and third Thursday of each month. Interviews can be arranged between 10.15am and 3.40pm. Leeds District Probate Registry opens Monday to Friday, except bank holidays, between 9.30am and 4pm.

The only representation received to date about the proposed closure of Bradford Probate Office has been from Mr. Gerry Sutcliffe, the Honourable Member for Bradford South, who is opposed to the proposal.

TREASURY

Incomes

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list (a) the total income before and after tax and national insurance and (b) the average earned and unearned income in 1995–96 and 1996–97 of (i) the top 1 per cent., (ii) the top 5 per cent., (iii) the top 10 per cent., (iv) the bottom 70 per cent., (v) the bottom 10 per cent. of taxpayers and (vi) all taxpayers. [14251]

Mr. Jack: Estimates are given in the table. Total income relates to income subject to tax and excludes non-taxable incomes such as certain social security benefits.

Quantile group of taxpayers	Total income before income tax and national insurance £ million	Total income after income tax and national insurance £ million	Average total income before income tax and national insurance £ million
1995–96
Top 1	34,300	22,400	133,300
Top 5	81,600	56,000	63,400
Top 10	121,500	85,700	47,200
Bottom 70	176,100	146,100	9,800
Bottom 10	11,700	11,100	4,600
All taxpayers	407,700	315,500	15,900
1996–97
Top 1	36,100	23,700	140,300
Top 5	85,800	59,200	66,600
Top 10	127,600	90,800	49,500
Bottom 70	182,300	151,900	10,300
Bottom 10	12,500	11,700	4,800
All taxpayers	428,100	334,300	16,600

Single European Currency

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment his Department has made of the impact of a single European currency on the United Kingdom economy. [14950]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 8 February 1996, Official Report, column 363.

Taxation

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 186, if he will set out the effects of the flat rate tax for income exempt from taxation in £1,000 increments from £3,000 to £10,000 on the basis of (a) a single tax exempt amount per household, (b) a shared tax exempt amount per couple and (c) both (a) and (b) with an additional £2,000 tax exempt amount for married couples only. [14947]

Mr. Jack: Such an analysis of the effects of introducing a flat rate of income tax on a joint or household basis could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many higher rate taxpayers are at present in (a) occupational pension schemes, (b) personal pension schemes and (c) executive pension schemes. [14665]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 February 1996]: Latest available estimates are that about 1.3 million members of occupational pension schemes and some 0.5 million members of personal pension schemes are higher rate taxpayers. A separate figure for executive pension schemes is not available.

Environmental Appraisals

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many environmental appraisals were produced by his Department using the guidance contained in the Department of the Environment's "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" in 1995; and if he will place copies in the Library. [15113]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 14 February 1996]: None.

Child Care Disregard

Ms Hodge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assumptions he has made of the effect the proposed increase in the child care disregard will have in 1996–97 (a) on the number of women who will take up the disregard and (b) on the flowback to the Exchequer from bringing more women into the work force. [15222]

Mr. Roger Evans: I have been asked to reply.

We estimate that, on average, between 5,000 and 10,000 families will benefit from the increase in the child care disregard. The behavioural effects of the increase, and the pace at which they occur, are uncertain. No specific assumption has been made as to the flowback to the Exchequer.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what arrangements have been made for (a) distribution of the Scott report within the civil service and (b) access to legal support and representation for civil servants criticised by Lord Justice Scott. [14841]

Mr. Freeman: Copies of the Scott report will be obtained by Government Departments in sufficient quantities to meet the needs of civil servants. Legal support for civil servants criticised in the report will be given where their Department concludes that such support is appropriate

Fire Safety Review

Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on each of the recommendations contained in the interdepartmental review of fire safety legislation and enforcement in the United Kingdom. [15398]

Mr. Freeman: The Government have been considering the findings of the review and the views expressed by interested parties, including the deregulation task force. It has also been further considering the fire safety aspects of the EC framework and workplace directives. An announcement on both will be made soon.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Belarus

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what resources have been committed to the Republic of Belarus to assist with the (a) medical, (b) agricultural and (c) other consequences of the Chernobyl incident; what resources will be committed in 1996–97; and when the Government propose next to review the level of assistance required. [15181]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: In 1986, the UK was the first country to respond to the United Nations' resolution on the Chernobyl accident. We have since contributed to international study and assistance programmes to Belarus and Ukraine through the EU, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the World Health Organisation and the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development's Nuclear Safety Account. The first priority of these programmes has been to ensure the safety of other nuclear installations in the region. Since 1991, 236 million ecu, around £180 million, has been committed via the EU's programme of technical assistance to the Commonwealth of Independent States, to which the UK contributes 16 per cent. We also provide financial and technical expertise to international projects in the region on radioactive contamination, feasibility studies for cleaning up contaminated areas, and radiological training. Bilateral assistance to Belarus in dealing with the environmental effects of the Chernobyl accident is through the environmental know-how fund, and during 1996 and 1997 we will continue to examine suitable projects directed at the rehabilitation of the area.

Chechnya

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what inquiries he has undertaken to establish whether Russian troops serving with British forces in Bosnia have been involved in atrocities in Chechnya. [15390]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have made no inquiries about whether the Russian troops, who are deployed in the American sector, have served in Chechnya.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a member of Her Majesty's embassy in Moscow last visited Chechnya. [15385]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Two members of Her Majesty's embassy in Moscow last visited Chechnya from 25 to 26 May 1995.

British Council Staff

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff are employed at each British Council office; what changes have taken place in staffing levels since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [14471]

Mr. Hanley: The British Council currently employs 1,173 staff in the UK—excluding the Central Bureau for Educational Visits and Exchanges, CBEVE—and 4,985 staff overseas in 229 offices in 109 countries. The number of staff employed in each overseas office is not immediately available. I will, however, write to the hon. Lady giving the detailed figures.

Since 1990, the number of British Council staff working in the UK—excluding the CBEVE—has been reduced by 30 per cent. from 1,687 to 1,173. Over the same period, the number of British Council staff working overseas has increased by 13 per cent. from 4,390 to 4,985.

These changes reflect the fact that the council is now operating in 109 countries compared with 90 in 1990 and has over the same period implemented radical efficiency measures to reduce the number of its headquarters support staff.

Gibraltar (Pensions)

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on pensions in Gibraltar. [15753]

Mr. David Davis: We remain in close touch with the Gibraltar Government on the question of pensions. Discussions are continuing.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for primary and secondary legislation passed since 5 April 1995 which measures were subject to a compliance cost assessment; and what was the compliance cost in each instance. [13640]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 7 February 1996]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 14 February, Official Report, column 578.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Senior Salaries Review Body

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Lord President of the Council which grades, appointments and other positions are covered by the Senior Salaries Review Body; and what are the three lowest salaries and the appointments to which they apply. [14626]

Mr. Newton: The Senior Salaries Review Body advises the Prime Minister on the remuneration of holders of judicial office, senior civil servants and senior officers of the armed forces. It can also be invited, from time to time, to advise on the pay, pensions and allowances of Members of Parliament and Ministers.

For the SSRB's three main remit groups, the lowest salaries and the appointments to which they apply are as follows. The salaries are those which will be payable from 1 April 1996.

£38,000
Entry point to Senior Civil Service (minimum of pay band 1).

£65,655
Two star officers (Rear Admiral, Major General, Air Vice-Marshall).

£62,018
Judiciary Group 7 (Chairmen, Independent Tribunal Service; Chairmen, Industrial Tribunals (England and Wales, and Scotland); Chairmen, Value Added Tax Tribunals; District Judges; District Judges of the Principal Registry of the Family Division; District Judges (Northern Ireland); Immigration Adjudicators; Masters and Registrars of the Supreme Court, Masters of the Supreme Court (Northern Ireland); Metropolitan Magistrates; President, Pensions Appeal Tribunals; Provincial Stipendiary Magistrates; Resident Magistrates (Northern Ireland); Vice President of the Value Added Tax Tribunals (England and Wales); Special Commissioners of Income Tax).

[1]Excluding salary leads for individual posts.

Ministerial Statements

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many oral statements have been made by the Secretary of State for Wales in each Session since May 1992 and what was the total length of time taken in making these statements and replying to questions. [1709]

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1995, c. 27]: I regret that the information given was inaccurate and should have read:

	Number of statements made
1992–93	[1]6
1993–94	2
1994–95	1

[1] 28 October 1992, 14 December 1992, 1 March 1993, 1 April 1993, 14 June 1993, 19 October 1993.

The total length of time taken in making the statements and in replying to questions was six hours 20 minutes. I have written to the hon. Member expressing my apologies for the error.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments since 1987, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14073]

Mr. Boswell: The management of MAFF's IT is in many cases the responsibility of local units. Consequently, not all records of any such transactions would be held centrally. There is insufficient time to gather the information requested from anywhere other than central records.

MAFF did charge for computer capacity in respect of the processing of grants and subsidies payments for the Department of Agriculture, Northern Ireland. The computer processing component of the total charge was approximately £50,000 per annum, and the contract came to an end in July 1994.

Empty Buildings

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many empty buildings his Department currently owns; what is the cost of insuring and securing these buildings; how many were designed as residential properties; and what was the total amount spent by his Department on empty property taxes in each of the last five years. [14573]

Mr. Boswell: The Ministry owns or leases 45 empty buildings. Most of these are surplus storage depots in the process of being sold. However, five were designed as, and still are, residential properties, but these are either due for disposal or awaiting new tenants.

The Ministry does not insure its buildings; as a general rule the Government carry their own insurance risk.

The Ministry does not pay uniform business rates to local authorities. Instead contributions in lieu of rates—CILOR—are paid to the Inland Revenue's Crown property unit. The amounts paid in the last three years in respect of empty properties are set out below.

1993–94: £7,403

1994–95: £57,208

1995–96: £53,194

The 1991–92 and 1993–94 CILOR payments, any reduced community charge/council tax on empty dwellings and the costs of securing empty property could be identified only at disproportionate cost.

MV Caroline

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the MV Caroline was used for the purposes of feeding, watering and resting live animals, and declared as such on respective journey plans during the period 18 January to 25 October 1995, for the purposes of the Welfare of Animals During Transport Order 1994. [14455]

Mrs. Browning: Yes.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to recover the costs awarded in favour of the Ministry in the case between the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and Live Sheep Traders Ltd., Live Sheep Traders (Ireland) Ltd. and Roger Ernest Mills. [14634]

Mrs. Browning: This matter was referred to a taxing master of the Supreme Court for adjudication. The Ministry is now seeking to recover the costs awarded.

Imported Animals and Birds

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many deaths of animals and birds have occurred at the animal quarantine station at Heathrow airport for each year since 1989. [8777]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 19 January 1996]: The animal quarantine station at Heathrow airport—AQS—has informed me that the number of deaths of mammals and birds, including those dead on arrival, at the AQS is in the table.

	Birds	Mammals
1989	1,483	0
1990	906	5
1991	528	22
1992	723	43
1993	861	31
1994	286	5
1995	407	29

Upland Areas (Support Grants)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what have been the total sums paid in support grants to upland areas in each of the last three years. [13012]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 1 February 1996]: The total of support grants paid to upland areas are not separately recorded. However, the total of direct subsidies paid to livestock producers in the less favoured areas in the United Kingdom is estimated at around £550 million in 1993 and in 1994 and about £600 million in 1995. These estimates cover only payments under the sheep annual premium scheme, suckler cow premium scheme, beef special premium scheme and hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme.

Live Animal Transport

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons his officials on the quayside at Dover returned a vehicle carrying sheep to a local lairage on Friday 2 February; if a prosecution is to be brought in respect of the animals involved; and if he will make a statement. [14328]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 9 February 1996]: This consignment was returned to premises close to the port of Dover because two of the sheep had eye discharges and a more detailed inspection was required. The sheep were unloaded under official supervision and they were inspected the following morning. No serious welfare problems were revealed at this inspection, although 20 sheep had ear tags missing. After rest and a further inspection, at which three sheep were rejected as unfit to travel, the remaining animals were permitted to continue their journey from Dover on Monday 5 February 1996. These events are being considered by officials in consultation with Kent county council.

Hill Farmers

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what additional assistance his Department has the power to offer west Cumbria's hill farmers following the recent adverse weather conditions. [14815]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 12 February 1996]: The EC rules for the provision of hill livestock compensatory allowances, the main form of aid payable specifically to hill farmers, already provides compensation for the permanent natural handicaps affecting farming activities. There is no provision to pay allowances in respect of abnormal weather conditions. However, the Department's staff at the Carlisle regional service centre have been in contact with the local farming community and Cumbria county council to co-ordinate assistance where required. Activity is mainly centred around the need for early road clearance to allow for milk tanker access to dairy units.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Nursery Schools

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average contract cost for an Office for Standards in Education nursery school inspection at the latest date for which figures are available. [15125]

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many Ofsted registered nursery education inspectors there are currently in England. [15126]

Mr. Squire: The Nursery Education and Grant-Maintained Schools Bill makes provision for the registration by Ofsted of a new body of nursery education inspectors. Registration itself cannot begin until the Bill has been enacted and brought into force.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate she had made of the average contract cost, in phase one of the voucher scheme, for an inspection under the auspices of Ofsted of (a) a nursery school, (b) a playgroup and (c) under-fives provision in primary or infant schools. [15127]

Mr. Squire: The Department is presently in discussion with Ofsted about the cost of inspection contracts.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate she has made of the cash value of the capital repairs backlog in schools in the grant-maintained sector; and when she will publish the findings of the Funding Agency for Schools conditions survey of grant-maintained schools. [15128]

Mrs. Gillan: This is a matter for the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Schools Inspections

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the original estimate for expenditure on inspection of schools in 1995–96; and what is the present budget. [15088]

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

Local Education Authorities (Expenditure)

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the money sum and proportion of the standard spending assessment or its equivalent, allocated to each English local education authority in (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) 1990 and for latest available year, for education purposes; and what was the actual expenditure and proportion of the local authority's budget spent on education in each of those years. [13821]

Mr. Robin Squire: I am placing in the Library tables that show for each local education authority, for the financial years 1990–91 and 1993–94—the latest available—total standard spending assessments and education SSAs, and total expenditure and education expenditure. Data in a similar form are not available for 1974 or 1979. Both SSA and spending figures include provision for grant-maintained schools. These figures have not been adjusted on account of any change in functions between the two years.

Computer Networks

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list all (a) Internet and (b) other computer network, sites or bulletin boards operated by her Department or containing information supplied by her Department, indicating for each site or bulletin board (i) the inaugural date, (ii) the timetable and policy in respect of updates, (iii) the Internet, or other network, address and (iv) to whom the site or board is currently made available and the criteria which must be fulfilled by applicants for access. [14229]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department for Education and Employment maintains an Internet site. This world wide web site was first made available on 24 April 1995 and is frequently updated. The address for this site is

"http://WWW.open.gov.uk/dfee/dfeehome.htm".

For technical reasons, some of the information on this site is held electronically at other sites, but all is available from the Department's home page. The Department has an Internet E-mail address-info@dfee.gov.uk.

The Department does not operate any other bulletin board or supply information for inclusion on any other bulletin board.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people are employed by the TECs; and what was the figure for each year since their establishment. [14254]

Mr. Paice: Training and enterprise councils are private companies and as such are not required to provide information on the number of staff they employ.

Spare Computer Capacity

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list all cases where spare computer capacity has been sold to other Departments by her current Department or its two predecessors since 1987, giving the Department and value of each contract. [14082]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following systems have been/are run for other Departments:

Department	System	Value 1993–94 (£000)	Value 1994–95 (£000)	Dates
Central Statistical Office	Retail Price Index	315	947	Finished 1995
Central Statistical Office	Family Expenditure Survey	325	301	Finished 1994
Northern Ireland Department of Economic Development	New Earnings Survey/Census of Employment	80	80	Ongoing

The above figures include the cost of developments, enhancements, support and process.

Education (School Premises) Regulations

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many representations she received during the consultation for the Education (School Premises) Regulations; which local authorities wanted the minimum space requirements for teaching and learning removed; and if she will make a statement. [14319]

Mrs. Gillan: The Department and the Welsh Office sent some 1,500 sets of consultation papers to local education authorities, schools, and other organisations. We received only 119 responses, which is less than 8 per cent. of those consulted.

Of local education authorities in England and Wales, fewer than two fifths replied. Among those which did, several supported the principle of non-statutory guidance. In particular, East Sussex and Wandsworth LEAs positively welcomed the proposed deregulation of statutory space requirements.

We have given careful consideration to all the responses and intend to incorporate many of the detailed points raised into the final version of the regulations and the accompanying circular.

Teachers (Northamptonshire)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many full-time equivalent teachers were employed by the Northamptonshire local education authority, grant-maintained and city technology college schools in the nursery, primary and secondary sectors in each year since 1979. [14309]

Mr. Robin Squire: The available information is shown in the following table.

Full-time equivalent of teachers in schools in Northamptonshire Local Education Authority area 1979–1995

Asylum Seekers (Training)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if asylum seekers will be eligible for Government training programmes under the new regulations, with particular reference to training for work. [15172]

Mr. Paice: There is no change in asylum seekers' eligibility for Government training programmes. They are eligible for training for work or the Government's programmes for young people if they have been granted permission to work in the UK by the Home Office pending a decision on their application for political asylum. They must fulfil the other eligibility criteria for those programmes which apply to all UK residents.

Access to Work Scheme

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what was the total budget for the access to work scheme in each of the last three years; and if she will give a regional breakdown of each national budget; [15331]

(2) what was the average payment per client of the access to work scheme, in each of the last three years; and if she will give a regional breakdown of the average payment per client. [15332]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mrs. Helen Jackson, date 15 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about the total budget for Access to work over the past three years and the average payment per client.

Access to work was introduced in June 1994. The total expenditure for 1994/95 was £15.7 million which included some residual payments on behalf of the preceding Special Schemes for people with disabilities. The budget for 1995/96 is £13.4 million but this is likely to be exceeded by some £6 million. The Employment Service regional breakdown for these years is given in the annex.

The average cost in 1994/95 was £1,513 per client. This includes people helped during 1994/95 under the special schemes that preceded Access to Work. Unfortunately the information we have for 1994/95 does not enable us to calculate regional average costs. The average costs for 1995/96 cannot be calculated until the end of the year.

I hope this is helpful.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many disabled people have benefited from the access to work scheme in each of the last three years; and if she will give a regional breakdown of national figures. [15330]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mrs. Helen Jackson, dated 15 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of people benefiting from Access to Work.

Access to Work began in June 1994. During 1994–95 10, 394 people were helped, of whom 7,669 people benefitted directly from Access special schemes in April and May 1994, some of whom transferred to Access to Work. During the period April to December 1995, the latest month for which we have figures, 12,267 people benefitted. A regional breakdown of these figures is given in the Annex.

I hope this is helpful.

Annex: Access to Work beneficiaries June 1994 to March 1995

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what was the original budget of the Government's access to work scheme in 1995–96; [15203]

(2) what is the estimated final outturn of the Government's access to work scheme in 1995–96; and what is the planned expenditure for the scheme for 1996–97. [15204]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions have been delegated to the Employment Service under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 16 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about the Access to Work budget for 1995–96 and 1996–97.

The original budget for Access to Work for 1995–96 was £13,434,000 and the current estimated outturn is around £19 million. The Access to Work budget planned for 1996–97 is £12,900,000.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what consultations have taken place with private employers about the access to work scheme; and what discussions have taken place in respect of employer's contributions. [15205]

Mr. Paice: Discussions are being held with the principal organisations concerned with the future operation of the access to work programme, including ones representing the views of private employers. The discussions are wide ranging.

Nursery Vouchers Scheme

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 320, relating to the appointment of Capita Manager Services Ltd. as contractors for the management of phase 1 of the voucher scheme for early years education, what was the number of tenders received; and what were the criteria, other than tender price, used in the appointment. [15346]

Mr. Robin Squire: Three tenders were received. The principal criteria, other than tender price, used to award the contract were: the quality of proposals for issuing and redeeming vouchers; the strength of proposals to ensure security and control; and the ability to comply with the timetable for phase one.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to the answer given on 8 February Official Report, column 320, concerning the statutory basis for the appointment of Capita Manager Services Ltd., at what dates in the contract the first advances on payments are due; and on what dates thereafter. [15345]

Mr. Squire: Payments were made on 11 December and 20 December 1995 to meet the initial costs of equipment and materials required for the issuing and redemption of nursery vouchers. The remainder of the contract cost will be paid in monthly instalments. These started in December 1995.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools have notified her Department of their interest (a) in increasing their number of assisted places and (b) in using the assisted places scheme for the first time; how many extra places have been notified in the last available year; and if she will make a statement on (i) the numbers to be provided and (ii) the expected timetable of provision. [15445]

Mrs. Gillan: Over 400 schools have bid for over 7,400 new entry places from September 1996 as part of the expansion of the assisted places scheme in England, and more bids have been received for further places in 1997. Over 260 of these schools already participate in the scheme, and over 140 have applied for admission. These bids far exceed the scale of expansion necessary to meet the announced doubling of the total size of the scheme over time. My right hon. Friend hopes shortly to announce the first allocations of new places for September 1996.

Skills Training Agency

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the Skills Training Agency was first established; how many people it employs; what have been its total running costs to date; and what are the estimated running costs for 1995–96 and 1996–97. [15084]

Mr. Paice [holding answer 13 February 1996]: The Skills Training Agency was established as a self-contained agency of the Department of Employment in 1985. It was transferred into the private sector in 1990. At that point, it ceased to be staffed by civil servants. The Department does, however, meet some residual costs relating to former staff and properties arising from the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency: for 1995–96 these are estimated at £1.8 million and for 1996–97 at £1.5 million.

SCOTLAND

Agriculture Department

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the current ratio of Scottish Office Agriculture Department staff is to the total number of farmers, partners and directors in Scotland. [12304]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The ratio of staff currently employed in agricultural divisions of the Scottish Office Agriculture, Environment and Fisheries Department to the estimated number of farmers, partners and directors in Scotland is approximately 1:43. This figure is based on recorded permanent staffing levels at 1 January 1996 and an estimate of the number of farmers, partners and directors in Scotland from the latest available information, at June 1995.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current target figure for the number of patients to be covered by general practitioner fundholding practices within each health board area in Scotland. [13252]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office has not specifically set a target number of general practitioner fundholding practices for each health board area in Scotland. However, all health boards other than Orkney, Shetland and Western Isles have agreed with the NHS management executive an objective of achieving at least 30 per cent. coverage of the population by 1995–96.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many on-line terminals are currently functioning in the national lottery. [14256]

Mr. Sproat: This is an operational matter for Camelot Group plc. The Director General of the National Lottery has licensed Camelot to run the national lottery and he regulates its operations. I have therefore asked the director general to write to the hon. Member, placing copies of his response in the Libraries of the House.

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the exact amount of start-up costs (a) to public funds and (b) to Camelot for the national lottery. [14257]

Mr. Sproat: Costs associated with the establishment of the national lottery fall (a) to Camelot Group plc, (b) to the Office of the National Lottery, (c) to my Department and (d) to lottery distributors.

Details of costs incurred by Camelot Group plc. are a matter for Camelot. I have asked the Director General of the National Lottery to write to the hon. Member with information about the costs of Oflot and to place copies of his response in the Library of the House.

The costs incurred by the national lottery distribution branch within the Department of National Heritage to 31 March 1995 totalled £247,000. It is estimated that these costs were predominantly for the setting up of systems and procedures for administering the fund. These costs were met from the national lottery distribution fund. Other costs of the national lottery division were met from the Department's administration vote. For the year ending 31 March 1995, these come to approximately £251,000.

Funds drawn down from the NLDF by the 11 lottery distributors, to cover administration costs, totalled £5.049 million for the period to 31 March 1995. These costs have also been shown to be predominantly set-up costs.

HEALTH

Anglia and Oxford Regional Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of the Anglia and Oxford regional health authority cook-chill venture; and if he will make a statement. [14529]

Mr. Horam: This is a matter for the Anglia and Oxford regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Stuart Burgess, the chairman, for details.

Paediatric Intensive Care Units

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the number of paediatric intensive care units in the North West and West Midlands regions, part of whose planned capacity is deemed to meet demand from north and mid-Wales; and how many beds in those regions are installed but not staffed. [15142]

Mr. Bowis: Health authorities are responsible for assessing health needs and I understand that the long-standing arrangements for the referral of critically ill children from Wales are taken into account in the planning and provision of paediatric intensive care units in the North West and West Midlands regions. There are currently 44 beds. Two more staffed beds will be brought into use next month.

Residential Homes

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average daily number and the number per 1,000 people aged 75 years and over, of (i) occupied geriatric beds, (ii) long-stay beds in NHS nursing homes and (iii) places occupied in (a) local authority residential homes, (b) voluntary residential homes, (c) private residential homes and (d) private nursing homes in England and Wales for the latest year for which information is available. [14660]

Mr. Bowis: The average daily number of available national health service beds for elderly people in England in 1994–95 was 54,040 and the number per 1,000 people aged 75 years and over was 16. Beds in NHS nursing homes are not separately identified. Data on the average daily number of places in residential care homes or private nursing homes are not available centrally. The number of residents at 31 March 1995 and the number per 1,000 people aged 75 years and over are shown in the table.

Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Occupied places in residential and nursing care homes, England, 31 March 1995

	All residents in homes for elderly people	Residents per 1,000 people aged 75 or over
Local authority residential homes[1]	55,100	16
Voluntary residential homes[1]	32,770	10
Private residential homes[1]	132,740	40
Private nursing homes[2]	115,550	35

Notes:
[1] Excluding residents in dual registered homes, who are counted in the nursing homes figure.
[2] Predominantly collected as at 31 March 1995.

Life Expectancy

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of average life expectancy (a) by region and (b) by health authority. [14807]

Mr. Horam: The average expectation of life at birth for 1992, the latest year for which figures are available, for regional health authorities of England and Wales, is shown in the table.

Average expectation of life at birth from abridged life tables for 1992
Regional health authorities of England and Wales (in increasing order of male life expectancy)

Health authority	Expectation of life (years)
	Males	Females
North Western	72.3	77.6
Northern	72.4	77.7
Mersey	72.9	78.2
West Midlands	73.4	78.7
Wales	73.5	78.9
Trent	73.6	78.9
Yorkshire	73.6	78.8
England and Wales	73.8	79.2
North-east Thames	73.8	79.5
South-east Thames	74.0	79.6
North-west Thames	74.5	80.1
Oxford	74.9	79.6
South Western	74.9	80.3
Wessex	75.0	80.3
South-west Thames	75.2	80.3
East Anglia	75.4	80.3

By 1993, life expectancy for England and Wales has increased further by 0.2 years for men and 0.1 years for women.

Calculation of life expectancy at birth by type of authority and type of census ward will be published in "Population Trends" in spring 1996, copies of which will be placed in the Library.

Psychiatric Beds

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 921, how many of the 66,000 psychiatric hospital beds are in private hospitals; and how many of the 14,000 beds in residential units for mentally ill people are provided (a) by the private sector, (b) by the voluntary sector and (c) by local authorities. [15131]

Mr. Bowis: The latest figure for the number of beds in hospital and staffed residential units for mentally ill people is 89,158. The information about these beds is shown in the table.

Number of available beds and staffed residential places for mentally ill people—England

	1994–95
Local authority residential places	4,747
Voluntary sector residential places	5,421
Private sector residential places	12,973
Private hospital beds	24,190
NHS mental illness beds	41,827
Total beds and places	89,158

Fazakerley Hospital, Liverpool

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of elective surgical admissions to Fazakerley hospital, Liverpool, and the impact of the market forces factor in the funding formulae. [15132]

Mr. Horam: Fazakerley hospital is part of Aintree Hospitals national health service trust. The number of elective admissions to the acute surgical specialty in Aintree Hospitals NHS trust during 1993–94, the latest period for which figures are held centrally, was 21,150[1].

The purpose of the market forces factor in the weighted capitation funding formula for health authorities is to take account of the geographical variations in the cost of providing health services.

Hospital Episode Statistics[1]

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the discharging of patients from Fazakerley hospital under the care in the community legislation. [15133]

Mr. Bowis: Responsibility for the discharge of patients from Fazakerley hospital, part of Aintree Hospital national health service trust, under the care in the community legislation lies with clinicians. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the trust for details.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 715, what factors led to the introduction of the Deregulation (Still Birth and Death Registration) Order 1996; and what account was taken of the additional expenditure burden on local authorities. [14043]

Mr. Horam: The White Paper "Registration: proposals for change" (Cm 939), published in 1990, recommended that it should be possible to register a death or still birth by means of a declaration made in a sub-district other than the one in which the death or still birth occurred. In 1995, my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mrs. Knight) introduced a ten-minute Bill to give effect to these changes. The Bill failed to gain a Second Reading because of the pressure on parliamentary time. Finally, I am advised by the Registrar General that he has received many letters over the years from members of the public urging him to implement this particular proposal.

There was also significant support amongst those consulted about the proposed deregulation order, including the local authority associations, for introducing the measure. It was acknowledged that the likely take-up of the facility for giving a declaration would be minimal. It was felt that the improvement to the service offered to the bereaved would far outweigh the burden of the small amount of any additional postage and telephone costs.

Colney Hospital, Norfolk

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made as to whether the proposed location of the planned Colney hospital in south Norfolk is in accordance with the advice in the Department of the Environment planning policy guidance notes 6 and 13. [15089]

Mr. Horam: This is a local matter. Planning permission for any hospital development has to be obtained from the local planning authority, which must take account of the contents of planning policy guidance notes The planning application is a matter between the local authority and the trust.

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much of the West Norwich hospital will be retained by the Norfolk Mental Health Care trust; what investment is proposed there; what parts of the West Norwich hospital will be closed by the Norfolk and Norwich Health Care trust if the proposed Colney hospital is constructed in South Norfolk district; and how much of the site is intended to be redeveloped; [15090]

(2) if his Department has received a business plan for the proposed Colney hospital, South Norfolk district; and if he has yet responded; [15143]

(3) what is the estimated cost of the proposed Colney hospital in Norwich; what is the expected annual cost to the NHS of the use of the hospital if provided by the private sector; and what expenditure on planning, design and site acquisition has been undertaken by the Norfolk and Norwich health care trust or its predecessor since the site was first identified; [15144]

(4) what plans there were to retain the Norfolk and Norwich hospital at the time of the Colney hospital public inquiry in 1988; and if it was described as a second district hospital; [15145]

(5) how many beds are provided in the existing NHS hospitals in Norwich, excluding Norfolk mental health care trust beds; how many beds will be retained within the city of Norwich after the construction of Colney hospital; and how many beds will be provided at the proposed Colney hospital. [15146]

Mr. Horam: The provision of local services is a matter for local managers. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Stuart Burgess, chairman of Anglia and Oxford regional health authority, for details of the proposals.

Norfolk and Norwich Health Care national health service trust submitted its formal business case for building a new hospital at the end of January. Given the size of the proposed project, the business case will be considered by officials at both the NHS executive and HM Treasury before it is passed to Ministers for final approval. I cannot comment further until all aspects of the business case have been fully considered.

National Blood Authority

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the running costs of the National Blood Authority in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95; what is the estimated outturn for 1995–96; and how much they are expected to be in the next three financial years. [15354]

Mr. Horam: The published accounts of the National Blood Authority do not identify the cost of the headquarters organisation separately from those of the rest of the National Blood Service.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional costs and savings are expected to result from the reorganisation of the operations of the National Blood Authority; and what will be their principal sources. [15353]

Mr. Horam: Details of the estimated costs and savings from the reorganisation of the National Blood Service and their sources are set out in the document "Plans for the Future of the National Blood Service" of November 1995, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of bills were paid by the National Blood Authority within 30 days of receipt on (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95. [15355]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Blood Products (Overseas Sales)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy towards the sale of blood products to overseas customers. [15352]

Mr. Horam: The National Blood Authority may sell surplus blood products on a cost-recovery basis to any other country after national health service demand has been satisfied. This avoids waste of a valuable resource and keeps down costs to the NHS. The alternative would be destruction.

Blood Service

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the price charged to hospitals in Oxford for blood products following reorganisation of the blood service will contain an additional charge to reflect the costs of transporting blood to and from the regional centres at Birmingham, Bristol or Southampton. [15352]

Mr. Horam: Charges paid by hospitals reflect the costs of collecting, processing, storing and distributing blood.

The document "Plans for the Future of the National Blood Service" of November 1995, copies of which are available in the Library, recognises that relocating bulk processing and testing of blood away from Oxford and some other blood centres to other such centres will lead to some increases in transport costs, but it also points out that these extra costs will be more than offset by savings arising from the reorganisation of the service.

Gender Dysphoria Syndrome

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the definitions of gender dysphoria syndrome recognised within the NHS. [15227]

Mr. Bowis: This syndrome is described in ICD 10—Classification of Mental and Behavioural Disorder—under code F66.1 egodystonic sexual orientation and would be recognised by clinicians.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many diagnosed cases of gender identity disorder there are in the United Kingdom broken down to show (i) male-to-female and (ii) female-to-male trans-sexuals; if he will indicate the statistical assumptions underlying his calculation; and if he will make a statement; [15228]

(2) how many citizens are currently being treated for gender identity dysphoria by the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [15229]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Prescribing Records

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish list D data on prescribing records from 1991 onwards. [15225]

Mr. Malone: The Department has a duty of confidence relating to the use of information derived from patient records and, following our usual practice, the information requested cannot be supplied at the level of detail of list D data because it is confidential.

St. Charles Youth Treatment Centre, Brentwood

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will allow staff of the former St. Charles youth treatment centre in Brentwood, Essex, to continue occupation of their homes until an alternative use for the site is found; what plans he has to allow local homeless people to use accommodation on the same site on an interim basis; and if he will make a statement; [15374]

(2) what plans he has for the use of the site and buildings of the former St. Charles youth treatment centre in Brentwood, Essex; and if he will make a statement. [15373]

Mr. Bowis: No decisions have yet been taken on the future use of the site of the former St. Charles youth treatment centre.

The residents remaining in the accommodation on the site have had their notice to quit extended from the required 14 days to six months.

Hospital Admissions

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of (a) surgical, (b) adult medical, (c) paediatric, (d) intensive treatment unit—ITU, (e) accident and emergency and (f) other emergency admissions in each year since 1989–90. [12626]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 30 January 1996]: The information that is available centrally from the "Hospital Episode Statistics" is shown in the table.

Published data on emergency admissions have traditionally included, not only the first episode of care, but subsequent episodes of care for each patient within a patient spell.

A more appropriate system has been developed which counts first episodes of care only. The information from this source is set out in the table. Information in this form is currently available only for the years 1993–94, 1991–92 and 1990–91. Data for 1989–90 and 1992–93 will be available in due course.

Emergency admissions—NHS hospitals, England, by specialty

	1990–91	1991–92	1993–94
Acute surgical	1,194,296	1,182,136	1,241,728
Adult[1] acute non-surgical (adult medical)	1,039,133	1,047,224	1,206,630
Paediatric	365,844	386,301	405,797

A and E[3]	(71,879)	(71,558)	(73,642)
Other emergency admissions	500,461	503,965	557,491

[1] Adult is defined as aged 15 years and over; adult acute non-surgical excludes those of 15's who are included in the paediatric specialty.
[2] ITU is not a recognised specialty in hospital episode statistics.
[3] Included in acute surgical.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Arcadia Café, Portrush

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what firm proposals have been put to him by private enterprise for (a) the development and (b) the redevelopment of the Arcadia in Portrush; [14405]

(2) what improvement or refurbishment works have been carried out to the Arcadia in Portrush in each of the last three years and the current year; and what sums were expended in each of these years; [14407]

(3) what proposals he has for the future development or redevelopment of the Arcadia site in Portrush; [14406]

(4) what investigations he has carried out into the structural soundness of the Arcadia in Portrush; what was the recommendation of the engineers involved; and when he expects to announce his conclusions as to the future of (a) the ballroom extension and (b) the rest of the building. [14404]

Mr. Moss: The private sector made a planning application in 1991 to redevelop the site for student accommodation. Planning permission was refused and a subsequent appeal to the planning appeals commission was dismissed.

No works for improvement/refurbishment have been carried out. During 1995, internal demolition works were carried out at a cost of £5,300.

The Department of the Environment, Works Service, carried out a preliminary property survey in 1993 and a detailed property survey in 1995. These confirmed that the ballroom was in a poor state of repair and that it would be feasible to retain the former Arcadia café building.

On 29 January 1996, the Department announced its intention to demolish the ballroom and invite development proposals for the cleared site while retaining the former Arcadia café building as part of any future development.

Public Appointments

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what criteria are used to select individuals for appointments to each (a) statutory and (b) non-statutory body and board in Northern Ireland. [14620]

Sir John Wheeler: In making public appointments, the prime considerations are an individual's ability or potential to contribute to the work of a particular body and the need for each body to have the range of experience and skills necessary to carry out its functions; individuals are appointed on merit.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are on the waiting list for (a) orthopaedic operations and (b) coronary by-pass surgery in each health and social services hospital trust in Northern Ireland; and what was the figure 12 months previously. [14622]

Mr. Moss: The attached table shows the number of patients waiting for hospital treatment in trauma and orthopaedic surgery and cardiac surgery in each health and social services trust providing these specialties in Northern Ireland. The figures reflect the position as at the end of September each year. The waiting list details held centrally are not specific as to the nature of the patients' operation.

[1] Altnagelvin Group of Hospitals currently has shadow trust status and will attain full trust status on 1 April 1996.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are on the waiting list for orthopaedic operations form the Down/Lisburn trust, Craigavon and Banbridge trust and Newry and Mourne trust; and what was the figure 12 months previously. [14623]

Mr. Moss: The information is not available in the form requested.

Public Appointments

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the membership of each (a) statutory and (b) non-statutory board and body established in Northern Ireland between 1 April 1973 and 31 March 1995. [14621]

Sir John Wheeler: Northern Ireland Departments maintain records of the membership of statutory and non-statutory boards and bodies for which they are responsible. The provision of this information from 1 April 1973 to 31 December 1994 could be given only at disproportionate cost. The membership of public bodies in Northern Ireland on 1 January 1995 is in the Northern Ireland public appointments list, which is available in the House of Commons Library. This list will be updated at 31 March 1996.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are (a) the criteria and (b) the procedures for public appointments. [14631]

Sir John Wheeler: All public appointments are governed by the overriding principle of selection based on merit, by the well-informed choice of individuals who, through their abilities, experience and qualities, match the needs of the public bodies in question. Board members must be committed to the principles and values of public service and be prepared to perform their duties with integrity.

The procedures followed by NI Departments when making public appointments are as follows:

- a specification is drawn up both for the appointment and for the person(s) required to fill it;
- a field of candidates is identified by a combination of using the central appointments database, advertising (where appropriate) and consultation with interested outside bodies;
- candidates are shortlisted based on merit, with the aim of achieving a balance of relevant skills and background and recommended to the appropriate Minister.

However, these procedures will be revised to take account of the appointment of the Commissioner for Public Appointments, Sir Len Peach.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many written parliamentary questions were passed for answer to executive agencies and non-governmental departments in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [14983]

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested on the number of written parliamentary questions passed for answer to executive agencies and non-governmental departments is a matter of public record but it could be extracted in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

Parliamentary questions are passed to the head of an executive agency for reply when the matter is one delegated to him or her under the agency framework document.

Public Bodies

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will ensure that the Fair Employment Commission and the Equal Opportunities Commission publish reports on the composition of bodies or individuals publicly appointed to quangos, statutory bodies and other non-departmental organisations. [14630]

Mr. Ancram: Both the Fair Employment Commission and the Equal Opportunities Commission (NI) are independent bodies with their remit defined by statute which does not cover the preparation of reports as suggested by the hon. Member.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a list of all individuals sitting as members of quangos, statutory bodies, and other publicly appointed non-departmental organisations. [14632]

Sir John Wheeler: The membership of public bodies in Northern Ireland is contained in the Northern Ireland public appointments list, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Community Employment Schemes

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many redundancies of core workers, who are funded by the Training and Employment Agency through the action for community employment training scheme, he has forecast for each of the next five years; [14728]

(2) how many core workers who are funded by the Training and Employment Agency through the action for community employment training scheme have so far been made redundant as a result of the changes in the ACE training scheme; [14729]

(3) what representations have been made to him from the organisations participating in the action for community employment training scheme who have experienced reductions in the number of placements in excess of 25 per cent.; [14730]

(4) what will be the effect on other programmes of the reduction in expenditure on the action for community employment training programme in each of the next three years. [14733]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 14 February 1996]: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Mr. Eric Illsley, dated 14 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency to reply to your questions about the effects of the reduction in the Action for Community Employment (ACE) budget.

Question 14728

The budget reduction may lead to 134 redundancies among the programme's Core Workers during 1996/97. The question of further redundancies over the following 4 years will depend upon the budget available but at present I am not forecasting the need for such redundancies.

Question 14729

At this stage I am not aware of any redundancies having been made by ACE schemes.

Question 14730

A large number of representations have been made regarding the reduction. The Minister and I have met public representatives and delegations from voluntary organisations and the Northern Ireland Federation of ACE Schemes to discuss their collective and individual concerns. We are not seeking to implement reductions beyond those required to operate within the budget allocated in 1996/97.

Question 14733

The reduction in the ACE budget has allowed the Government to meet emerging budgetary pressures in a number of areas and especially those which are important to the continued growth in the NI economy.

I hope you find this reply useful. I will of course be pleased to provide further information if you would find it helpful.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Treasury Solicitor's Office (Computer Disc Theft)

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what investigations are under way into the theft of a DTI computer disc from the Treasury Solicitor's office; [14636]

(2) what action is to be taken in respect of the people alleged to have stolen a DTI computer disc from the Treasury Solicitor's office. [14635]

The Solicitor-General: The Metropolitan police commenced an investigation in November 1994, and in 1995 reported to the Crown Prosecution Service who advised that, in relation to one of the two persons investigated, there was no evidence of any criminal offence having been committed within the jurisdiction and that, therefore, no action could be taken by the Metropolitan police in relation to him, and in relation to the second person that there was sufficient evidence to provide a realistic prospect of conviction but that it was not in the public interest to prosecute her. The police were advised to caution her.

Of the two people investigated by the Metropolitan police, only one had ever worked at the Treasury Solicitor's Department. She worked as a temporary typist, but had already left the Department before any investigation commenced.

Trophy International Animal Products Ltd.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Attorney-General if the Serious Fraud Office will investigate the franchising operation of Trophy International Animal Products Ltd. [14637]

The Solicitor-General: The Serious Fraud Office undertakes criminal investigations and prosecutions only in cases of serious or complex fraud. Relevant factors in deciding whether to accept a case include the need for accountancy and investigative skills to be brought together and for the use of specialist statutory powers of the office. The moneys at risk or lost are usually at least £1 million.

If there is evidence of criminality in the franchising operations of Trophy International Products Ltd. which would appear to fall within the acceptance criteria, it should be drawn to the attention of the director of the Serious Fraud Office. If the evidence points to criminality, but not of the scale dealt with by the Serious Fraud Office, it should be drawn to the attention of the police for the matter to be investigated.

Elaine Steel

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General if he will review the papers in the case of Elaine Steel of Workington. [13871]

The Attorney-General: I have called for the papers in this case and I shall write to the hon. Member in due course.

Transexuals

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General how much public money has been expended in each of the last five financial years in defence of legal actions relating to transexuals brought against Government Departments; and if he will make a statement. [15226]

The Attorney-General: The information requested by the hon. and learned Member cannot be compiled in the time provided. I shall write to him as soon as possible with the information which is available and arrange for a copy of my letter to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Closed Circuit Television

7. Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his assessment of the contribution to crime prevention made by closed circuit television surveillance in town centres. [13855]

Mr. Howard: CCTV systems around the country are having a significant impact on reducing crime and the fear of crime. The value of CCTV has been confirmed by the police and by independent research. This is why we are making £45 million available over the next three years to encourage the spread of this technology.

Probation Service

15. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his Department is doing to broaden the recruitment base of the probation service to encourage the recruitment of more mature and experienced people. [13865]

Mr. Sackville: We have ended the unnecessary requirement for probation officers to hold a social work qualification for appointment. We have also put in hand action to create a new, rigorous and more flexible system of training which will recognise the experience of mature candidates.

Domestic Burglaries

16. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many domestic burglaries there were in Kent in each of the last two years for which figures are available. [13866]

Mr. Howard: The number of domestic burglaries recorded by the police in Kent in the 12 months to June 1994 was 17,900. In the 12 months to June 1995 it was 15,315, a fall of 14 per cent. I congratulate the chief constable of Kent and his officers on this achievement.

Carl Bridgewater

17. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fingerprints on the bicycle belonging to Carl Bridgewater are so far unidentified; and if he will make a statement. [13867]

Mr. Kirkhope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin).

20. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a final decision in the Bridgewater Four case; and if he will make a statement. [13870]

24. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to announce his decision in the Carl Bridgewater case; and if he will make a statement. [13876]

Mr. Kirkhope: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden).

Prison Service Redundancies

19. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about proposals for redundancies in the Prison Service. [13869]

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations about Prison Service plans for cost reductions and for improving its efficiency. The aim will be, so far as possible, to achieve any necessary staffing reductions without resort to compulsory redundancy.

Violent Crime

21. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new measures he plans to introduce to combat violet crime; and if he will make a statement. [13873]

Mr. Maclean: Severe penalties are already available for those convicted of serious offences. Life imprisonment is the maximum penalty for the most serious offences, and long terms of imprisonment can be imposed for other violent offences. Maximum penalties for violent offences are kept under constant review and we have not hesitated to increase them when necessary. The Government fully support the private member's Bill being promoted by my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland), which proposes to tighten the law and increase the penalties for knife-related crime. The Government also propose that the courts should be required to impose an automatic life sentence on those convicted for the second time of a serious violent or sex offence. Full details of our proposals on sentencing will be set out in a White Paper in the spring.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek powers to double the penalties upon those convicted of violent crime within a given radius of schools; and if he will make a statement. [14016]

Mr. Maclean: I believe that offences should be punished for what they are, not where they are committed.

Severe penalties are already available for those convicted of serious offences. Life imprisonment is the maximum penalty for the most serious offences, and long terms of imprisonment can be imposed for other violent offences. Maximum penalties for violent offences are kept under constant review and we have not hesitated to increase them when necessary. The Government fully support the private Member's Bill being promoted by my hon. Freind the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) which proposes to tighten the law and increase the penalties for knife-related crime. The Government also propose that the courts should be required to impose an automatic life sentence on those convicted for the second time of a serious violent or sex offence. Full details of our proposals on sentencing will be set out in a White Paper in the spring.

Stolen Vehicles

22. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on stolen vehicle recovery rates. [13874]

Mr. Maclean: Figures for 1994 show that 59 per cent. of stolen vehicles recorded by the police in England and Wales were recovered. This is the same percentage as that recorded in 1993. Vehicle theft fell by 10 per cent. in 1994 as compared with 1993.

Crime Victims

23. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new proposal he has to help the victims of crime. [12875]

Mr. Maclean: We are aiming shortly to publish a new victim's charter which will set out the minimum standards of service victims can expect from the criminal justice agencies. It will explain clearly which agency is responsible for providing each service, and how victims can complain if they do not get the standard of service promised.

Achievement of the charter service standards will be monitored closely by the agencies concerned, and progress will be reported in the Home Office annual report.

The new charter demonstrates our commitment to respond to the needs and interests of victims in a real and practical way.

Immigration (Children)

25. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines he has issued to immigration officers at ports of entry relating to the admission of unaccompanied children from overseas seeking refugee status in Britain. [13877]

Mr. Kirkhope: Guidance to Immigration Service staff at ports on unaccompanied children seeking asylum covers a variety of issues and specifically that applications from minors are to be given priority and handled with particular care.

Prisoners (Debt)

26. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons are in prison for debt. [13878]

Miss Widdecombe: At the end of November 1995, there were 462 prisoners held in prison custody for non-payment of fines, 38 for non-payment of council tax and 10 for civil debts.

Crime Victims (Compensation)

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the ways prisoners can compensate the victims of crime. [13868]

Miss Widdecombe: The Government are committed to the introduction of arrangements whereby a proportion of prisoners' earnings from prison work is set aside to help victims of crime. I congratulate my hon. Friend on obtaining a Second Reading for his private Member's Bill last Friday which provides a statutory framework for this purpose.

Prisons (Greater Manchester)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of (a) the total inmate population of the prisons in the Greater Manchester area in each of the next five years and (b) the total number of prison places that will be available. [13456]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Jim Callaghan, dated 15 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the estimate of the total inmate population of the prisons in the Greater Manchester area in each of the next five years and (b) the total number of prison places that will be available.

There are three prisons in the Greater Manchester area: Manchester, Hindley remand centre and Buckley Hall. These prisons currently provide a total of 1,656 places and hold 1,723 prisoners. The number of places and prisoners held within each of these prisons is not expected to vary significantly over the next five years. The Prison Service has plans to build a new 800 place prison at Agecroft in the next five years, which will help provide the additional capacity needed in the region.

Empty Buildings

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many empty buildings his Department currently owns; what is the cost of insuring and securing these buildings; how many were designed as residential properties; and what was the total amount spent by his Department on empty property taxes in each of the last five years. [14567]

Mr. Howard: The Home Office assumes accountability for all the office in which it has occupations, including any vacant space therein, from 1 April 1996. Up to that date, responsibility for the whole of the Government common user (office) estate in which Government Departments were housed rests with Property Holdings. That part of the question is, therefore, a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

The Home Office has 208 empty properties on its departmental estates at the present time. Of these, 192 are residential properties on the prisons estate, most of which are temporarily vacant awaiting new tenants.

As a general rule, the Government carry their own insurance risk. The costs of securing these properties and the total amount spent by the Home Office on empty property taxes in the last five years cannot be readily identified without disproportionate cost.

Fire Service College

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the future of the Fire Service College. [14594]

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of the Fire Service College. [14795]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Members to the answer given to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 13 February, Official Report, column 517.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conclusions he has reached on the report on the Fire Service College. [15399]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the question from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 13 February, Official Report, column 517.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people who had obtained entry clearance as visitors prior to travelling to the United Kingdom were refused entry on arrival in 1994. [14797]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information available relates to all persons with an entry clearance or work permit who were refused leave to enter on arrival in the United Kingdom. There were 950 such persons in 1994.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of applications made in (a) Jamaica and (b) Trinidad and Tobago for entry clearance as a visitor to the United Kingdom were refused; and what proportion of applications on arrival for leave to enter the United Kingdom as a visitor from passengers from (a) and (b) were refused in 1994. [14798]

Mr. Kirkhope: Some 910 entry clearance applications for temporary purposes were refused initially in Jamaica, and 30 in Trinidad and Tobago, in 1994. These represented 26 and 3 per cent. respectively of the applications decided. Citizens of these two countries do not need an entry clearance to visit the United Kingdom. The information available on passengers seeking leave to enter the United Kingdom is given in the table.

Citizens of Jamaica, and Trinidad and Tobago, admitted and refused at United Kingdom ports in 1994

	Jamaica	Trinidad and Tobago
Admissions of visitors	13,200	8,480
Total of passengers refused leave to enter	366	61
Those refused because of insufficient means for proposed visit or not a genuine visitor[1]	306	50

[1] Excluding visitors refused for other reasons, eg false passport.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people with indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom were refused re-entry to the United Kingdom under the returning residents rule in 1994 when they had been out of the country for (a) less than and (b) more than two years; and what were the nationalities of the people concerned. [14800]

Mr. Kirkhope: The total number and nationalities of persons refused leave to enter and removed from the United Kingdom in 1994, on the basis that they did not qualify as returning residents as claimed, are given in the table. It is not known how many of these persons had been out of the country for less than two years.

Passengers claiming to be returning residents who were refused leave to enter, and removed from, the United Kingdom in 1994

Contact Orders

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions for assault have occurred as a result of incidents (a) prior to, (b) during and (c) after contact between parents whose children were subject to contact orders made under section 8 of the Children Act 1989 in each year since 1991. [14850]

Mr. Maclean: Information on the number of convictions for assault relating to incidents where contact orders were made under section 8 of the Children Act 1989 is not collected centrally.

Pregnant Prisoners

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to his oral statement on 18 January, Official Report, column 893, if the policy of shackling pregnant prisoners whilst they are escorted to the hospital is still in force; [15000]

(2) if he will make it his policy that women receiving hospital and maternity care will be escorted by women officers. [14999]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 15 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the treatment of pregnant prisoners.

Except where there is a medical objection to using restraints or where the governor decides, following a risk assessment, that restraints are unnecessary, pregnant prisoners en route from closed prisons to hospital for antenatal or other appointments will normally be restrained on the journey to the hospital and on the way from the vehicle to the hospital waiting area, or hospital entrance in the case of women prisoners who are being taken to hospital to give birth.

It is the Prison Service's policy that prisoners may be escorted by officers of either sex except where this would place the officer or the prisoner in an unreasonable position in terms of privacy or decency. For prisoners giving birth our aim is that both officers should be female, but sometimes, for example in the case of an emergency, there may not be sufficient staff on duty to allow this. In this situation, one of the officers must be a woman.

Secure Training Centres

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what are the current estimated costs for the construction and operation for secure training centres; and if he will indicate when the successful tenders will be announced; [15013]

(2) for what reasons tenders for the first two sites for secure training centres have been resubmitted. [15012]

Mr. Maclean: Each of the proposals submitted was non-compliant in some respects. Negotiations are continuing with the tenderers, who are being asked to revise the relevant aspects of their bids. For reasons of competition and commercial confidentiality, I cannot disclose the prices of the bids. Contracts will be signed, and announced, as soon as the terms have been settled.

Drivers (Drugs)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of state for the Home Department what powers the police have to test drivers for driving under the influence of drugs; how many convictions there have been over the past two years; and what representations he has had urging (a) more testing and (b) higher penalties. [15061]

Mr. Maclean: Section 4 of the Road Traffic Act 1988—as amended by section 4 of the Road Traffic Act 1991—empowers a constable to arrest a person if he has reasonable cause to suspect that that person has been driving or been in charge of a mechanically propelled vehicle when unfit through drugs. Section 7 of the 1988 Act empowers a constable to require the suspect to provide a specimen for a laboratory test.

Separate statistics for driving offences involving drugs only are not available centrally. I am not aware of any representations urging higher penalties for the offences but I know that the Association of Chief Police Officers is concerned about drugs and road safety and has called for the development of a device to test for drugs in drivers similar to the roadside breathalyser for alcohol. As a first step, research into the extent of drug use by drivers is being commissioned.

Fire Services

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which fire station provides cover for Brent Cross; and what level of cover is provided. [14746]

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the London fire and civil defence authority. My hon. Friend should contact the chairman of the LFCDA for details.

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those local authorities which are currently budgeting to spend on fire services (a) more than their standard spending assessment, (b) at the level of their standard spending assessment and (c) below their standard spending assessment. [14910]

Mr. Sackville: Information is not yet held centrally on the budgets which fire authorities in England are in the process of setting for 1996–97.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made as to whether all fire brigades in the United Kingdom will be able to meet, alongside their other statutory responsibilities, the emergency needs of their communities in the year 1996–97. [15401]

Mr. Sackville: Under section 1 of the Fire Services Act 1947 a fire authority has a duty to make provision for firefighting purposes and, in particular, to secure the services of a fire brigade and equipment in order to meet efficiently all normal requirements. Section 3(1)(e) of the Act gives the fire authority discretionary powers to employ its brigade and use its equipment for purposes other than fire fighting. Fire authorities have been able to provide such services from within the resources available to them for firefighting purposes. Fire authorities do have arrangements in place for mobilising assistance from neighbouring authorities in the more serious incidents, for example Windsor castle.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made as to whether all fire brigades in the United Kingdom will be able to meet the minimum statutory standards for their rescue and fire fighting roles in the year 1996–97. [15400]

Mr. Sackville: Such an assessment can be made only by individual fire authorities in the light of their own local circumstances. It is for each fire authority to set a budget which will allow it to comply with its statutory duties under the Fire Services Act 1947.

Prison Service Director General

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce the name of the new Director General of the Prison Service; and if he will make a statement. [14977]

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 5 December, column 204.

Women Prisoners

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if women who have been assessed for open conditions, and then placed in the HMP Holloway, are subject to mechanical restraints whilst on escort. [15002]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 15 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about women who are subjected to mechanical restraints while one escort.

Women who have been approved for open conditions are not normally subject to mechanical restraints. Women who are sent back to Holloway prison as being unsuitable for open conditions will be subject to mechanical restraints while on escort.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many written parliamentary questions were passed for answer to executive agencies and non-governmental departments in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [14984]

Mr. Howard: This is a matter of public record. Although the information readily available in the Department does not give figures for each of the last five years, it suggests that the total number of written parliamentary questions which have been passed for answer to executive agencies since they were established is:

	Number
United Kingdom Passport Agency (established on 2 April 1991)	86
The Prison Service (established on 1 April 1993)	2,309

	Number
The Forensic Science Service (established on 1 April 1991)	33
The Fire Service College (established on 1 April 1992)	5

No parliamentary questions have been passed for answer to non-governmental departments.

Cemeteries

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will legislate to amend the Local Authority Cemetery Act 1977, and the Local Government Act 1972, to allow exhumation in defined circumstances to allow the re-use of graves; and what response he has sent to the representations on this topic from Reverend Peter Jupp, director of the National Funerals College. [14048]

Mr. Sackville: There are no plans to amend the Local Authorities' Cemeteries Order 1977 or the Local Government Act 1972 to permit the exhumation of human remains for the re-use of existing graves. We have no record of the receipt of any representations from Reverend Jupp on this matter.

Fire Cover Review

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the final proposals from the London fire and civil defence authority in respect of its fire cover review. [14923]

Mr. Sackville: Presently, these remain matters for the authority. I understand that it intends to consider the reaction to its recent consultation process at its meeting on 22 February.

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reply he has sent to the London borough of Bromley in response to its representations on the proposed reductions in fire cover affecting the borough; and if he will make a statement. [14924]

Mr. Sackville: The reply explained the criteria which my right hon. and learned Friend would apply to an application from a fire authority to reduce fire cover. It confirmed that, should such an application be received from the London fire and civil defence authority, the representations would be taken into account.

Identity Cards

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to respond to the consultation exercise on the Government's Green Paper on identity cards. [14925]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on 26 January, Official Report, column 470.

Docklands Bombing (Fire Appliances)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fire appliances attended the site of the docklands bombing on 9 February; at what times the first appliance arrived and the last appliance left; how many appliances arrived within (a) five and (b) 10 minutes of being summoned; from which fire stations appliances were sent; and how many fire fighters attended. [15202]

Mr. Sackville: I have been informed by the London fire and civil defence authority that a total of 113 appliances attended this incident over three days. The first appliance arrived on 9 February at 19:07 and the last appliance left on 12 February at 13:46. One appliance arrived within five minutes of being summoned and two within 10 minutes. In total, 427 fire service personnel attended the incident.

Appliances were sent from the following stations: Addington, Barking, Battersea, Beckenham, Bethnal Green, Bromley, Bow, Chelsea, Croydon, Dagenham, Deptford, Dockhead, East Greenwich, East Ham, Erith, Forest Hill, Greenwich, Hainault, Hornchurch, Ilford, Lambeth fire boat, Lewisham, Leytonstone, Manchester Square, Millwall, New Cross, Norbury, Old Kent Road, Plaistow, Plumstead, Poplar, Romford, Shadwell, Sidcup, Silvertown, Stratford, Sutton, Tooting, Tottenham, Wandsworth, Westminster, Whitechapel, Woodford, Woodside and Woolwich.

Programme Development Unit

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will announce his decision on the outcome of the second round of funding for local projects considered by the programme development unit of his Department. [15224]

Mr. Howard: The matter of second stage bids to the programme development unit for funding local projects is being given careful consideration. I hope to be able to announce a final decision shortly.

Home Country Reports

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to his answer of 12 February, Official Report, column 411, if he will place in the Library a copy of the home country report on Pakistan used by a Home Office presenting officer at an immigration appeal hearing in Leeds in 1995; [15342]

(2) if he will place in the Library home country reports and other related information which he considered in respect of the designation of Bulgaria, Cyprus, Ghana, Poland, Romania, Ethiopia, India, Kenya, Pakistan and Tanzania for the purposes of determining countries from which asylum cases are likely to prove unfounded. [15350]

Miss Widdecombe: As I explained in answer to the question from the hon. Gentleman on 12 February, Official Report, column 411, when the country assessments to be made available to adjudicators have been finalised, I will place them in the Library.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he has taken to remove Nigerian nationals from the short procedure, introduced last May, for deciding asylum cases likely to prove unfounded; and if he will make a statement. [15351]

Miss Widdecombe: The short procedure operates within existing legislation and has never been confined to countries which are candidates for designation under clause 1 of the Asylum and Immigration Bill. Individual applications which on examination are unsuitable for the short procedure are removed from it.

Firearms-related Crime

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps he is taking to deal with the problem of firearms-related crime. [13872]

Mr. Maclean: Our aim is to cut the supply of guns used in crime and to ensure that the courts have adequate powers to deal with those who commit firearms offences. The controls on firearms are already stringent and kept under constant review. The penalties for misuse are substantial. The maximum penalty for carrying a firearm in the furtherance of crime is life imprisonment and the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 increased the maximum penalties for a wide range of other firearms offences. If further legislative measures are considered necessary, the Government will not hesitate to take them.

Local initiatives to detect or prevent armed crime are the responsibility of individual chief officers of police. I understand that the chief constable of Merseyside police has recently launched a high profile campaign to combat the particular threat posed by armed criminals in his force area.

European Parliamentary Constituencies

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what supplementary review of European parliamentary constituencies in England the parliamentary boundary commission for England plans to conduct. [15824]

Mr. Howard: The commission has informed me that it intends to consider making a supplementary report on the European parliamentary constituencies in England, and to commence forthwith a general review of the European parliamentary constituencies in England.

Research Projects

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for 1995 and each of the previous five years (a) the longest period and (b) the shortest period between the receipt by his Department of a report of a research project commissioned by his Department and its subsequent publication; and in each case if he will give (i) the title of the publication and (ii) the subject of the project. [14671]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 13 February 1996]: Details for reports published in 1994 and 1995 follow. There are no systematic records for previous years.

In 1994, the shortest and longest periods between receipt and publication were for the following reports:

Research and Planning Unit Paper (RPUP) "86 Drug Education Amongst Teenagers", (two months) and Home Office Research Studies (HORS) 134 "Contacts between Police and Public: findings from the 1992 British Crime Survey", (12 months) respectively.

In 1995 the reports concerned were:

HORS 147 "Anxiety about crime: findings from the 1994 British Crime Survey", (2.5 months) and RPUP 90 "Improving bail decisions: the bail process project phase 1" (14 months).

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what targets he has set for his Department in respect of publishing the reports of research projects regarding crime, police and other issues. [14672]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 13 February 1996]: There are no formal targets for the publication of research reports. Once a report is accepted as meeting the terms of the research contract, it is published as soon as practicable.

Legislation (Compliance Cost Assessments)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for primary and secondary legislation passed since 5 April 1995 which measures were subject to a compliance cost assessment; and what was the compliance cost in each instance. [13659]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 14 February 1996]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 14 February, Official Report, column 578.

Discretionary Life Sentences

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 6 February, Official Report, column 107, on offences carrying a discretionary life sentence, for what offences were the five life sentences imposed; what offences were committed by the 29 offenders who did not receive an immediate custodial sentence for a second offence carrying a discretionary life sentence; and what sentence was imposed in these cases. [15191]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 14 February 1996]: I regret that the information given in the answer of 6 February, on offences carrying a discretionary life sentence, has been found to be incorrect due to an error in the way the sample was drawn. The first paragraph and table 1 of this answer show the revised figures.

The information requested is not collected routinely. A sample of those convicted of indictable offences in five weeks of 1993–94 included 1,086 offenders, not 600 as previously stated, convicted of sexual or violent offences carrying a discretionary life sentence, 224, or 21 per cent., not 198, or 33 per cent., of whom had previous convictions for such offences. One hundred and eighty-two not 169—of the offenders with previous convictions for such offences were given a custodial sentence, five, as previously given, of whom were sentenced to life imprisonment. The table shows the average sentence imposed, excluding life sentences, by offence group. Information is not available on sentences actually served by the offenders included in the sample.

Table 1: Sentencing of offenders reconvicted of sex and violent offences carrying discretionary life sentences

Offence	Number sentenced to immediate custody on second or greater occasion	Average custodial sentence imposed (months)
Manslaughter	5	45
Rape	8	81
Robbery	103	40
Buggery	4	75
Wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm	34	48
Aggravated burglary	3	74
Firearms offences	1	48
Other offences	19	36
Total	177	44

Table 2: Offenders reconvicted of sex and violent offences carrying discretionary life sentences and not given a custodial sentence[1]

Disposal	Manslaughter	Robbery	Wounding with intent to do GBH	Other offences
Absolute discharge	—	1	—	—
Conditional discharge	—	—	—	3
Supervision order	—	6	—	3
Probation order	—	4	—	9
Community service order	—	1	—	—
Combination order	—	2	—	2
Fully suspended sentence	—	—	—	1
Otherwise dealt with	1	4	1	4
Total	1	18	1	22

[1] All offenders convicted of rape, buggery, aggravated burglary or firearms offences were sentenced to immediate custody.

Of the five offenders sentenced to life imprisonment, four were convicted of rape and one of robbery. Forty-two offenders with previous convictions for sexual or violent offences were not given a custodial sentence. The offence and disposal for these offenders are shown in the table.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Benefit

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what checks operate to prevent those living abroad receiving child benefit paid into a United Kingdom bank account; and what estimate his Department has made of the amount of money thus claimed. [14751]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: Child benefit is normally payable only to those who are resident in the UK. Exceptions are made for temporary absences abroad for up to eight weeks, and for longer periods in certain circumstances where a child is absent abroad for education or medical purposes. When people leave the country, payment of child benefit terminates after the eighth week. A number of different mechanisms are used to prompt notification by those leaving the country for longer than eight weeks.

The most commonly identified situation where payment could continue into a United Kingdom bank account despite a lack of entitlement is where a person from abroad returns home without notifying the child benefit centre. Special inquiries are made in cases where this is thought to be a possibility.

Operation Rattle was launched in November 1995 to deter this type of abuse. To date, cases have been found which, if action had not been taken, could have led to expenditure of up to £8 million.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review his policy concerning cold weather payments; and if he will make a statement. [14911]

Mr. Roger Evans: There are no plans for major changes to the scheme. However, after the end of March each year, the operation of the scheme is reviewed with the Meteorological Office. In particular, links between weather stations and postcode areas are reviewed and, where appropriate, changes are made.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the temperature level at which cold weather payments are triggered; and if he will make a statement. [15007]

Mr. Evans: Cold weather payments give extra help to vulnerable groups towards additional heating costs resulting from sustained periods of very cold weather. An average temperature of 0°c (freezing point) or below, over seven consecutive days, is considered a clear and reasonable indication of a sustained period of very cold weather, not normally expected to occur in the majority of British winters. During the winter, the scheme is monitored, and at the end of each March, a review of the scheme takes place with the Meteorological Office. Changes are considered, if appropriate. No further research has been considered necessary.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received since 1 January 1995 about delays in payment of attendance allowance for blind people; and how many representations there were in the last five years. [14915]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: I receive many representations concerning almost every area of the Department's business both from individuals and organisations. Detailed information on the nature of those representations is not routinely collected.

Child Support

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many and what percentage of cases the parent with care has indicated on the Child Support Agency maintenance application forms that the absent parent is unaware of the child. [14959]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: As the agency has no business need for the information requested, it could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Running Costs

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were in each year from 1979 to 1994, in real terms, (a) the running costs of Ministers' private offices, separately identifying expenditure on staff and (b) the running costs of the Department. [15357]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

The running costs of Ministers' private offices is only available for 1994–95 and is in table 1:

Salaries	1,474,194
Running costs	449,049
Total	1,923,243

Ministers are currently housed in Richmond house and all facilities are provided by the Department of Health. This Department has been responsible for paying its own share of the rent and rates since 1992. All expenditure on accommodation is included in the running cost expenditure of the two Departments, which is published in their annual reports, copies of which are in the Library.

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of people (a) paying contributions to SERPS each year since its inception and (b) drawing pensions in each year since the scheme's inception and if he will detail his estimates for both (a) and (b) 10, 20 and 30 years hence. [15235]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Table 1 shows, for 1978–79 and later years, the number of people in the UK who paid class 1 national insurance contributions at the not contracted-out rate on earnings equal to or above the annual lower earnings limit for that year. These people have accrued entitlement to additional pension as have a small but unquantifiable number of people whose earnings in one or more of the years were marginally below the annual LEL and who reach state pension age before April 2000.

Burnley Benefit Agency

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many telephone calls were made to the Burnley Benefits Agency office under Operation Speakeasy; and if he will make a statement. [14930]

Mr. Heald: A freephone telephone line was piloted for three months up to 31 January 1996, to help the public refer cases of suspected fraud to the Benefits Agency for investigation. A total of 570 calls were made for the Blackburn and Burnley areas. It is not possible to identify separately the number of calls for the Burnley office.

Women Workers

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumption was made for financial year 1995–96 on the flowback to the Exchequer from encouraging women back to work; and what revisions have been made to those assumptions during the course of the year. [15223]

Mr. Burt: No specific estimate has been made on the overall flowback to the Exchequer from social security and employment measures focused on helping women into work. On average, encouraging a lone parent to move from income support to family credit saves £50 per week from a combination of public expenditure savings and increased revenue. For those women, or their partners, who are not in receipt of income-related benefits, the payback will be lower.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 16 February 1996

SCOTLAND

Court Service

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what circumstances a sheriff may hear representations on sentences in private; and on how many occasions such representations have been heard in private in the last five years. [15059]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is no information on the number of occasions on which sheriffs have heard representations on sentence in private. Representations on sentence are normally made in open court.

Mental Incapacity

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to reply to the report on mental incapacity recently produced by the Scottish Law Commission; and if he will make a statement. [15403]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has welcomed the Scottish Law Commission report on incapable adults. We are studying its wide-ranging proposals very carefully, but I cannot yet say when we shall be in a position to respond.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Courses

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans the National Rivers Authority has to increase public access to water courses. [15156]

Mr. Clappison: The National Rivers Authority has a general duty to promote the use of inland and coastal waters and associated land for recreation, and must ensure that its own water or associated land is made available in the best manner for recreational purposes. The Government's code of practice on conservation, access and recreation gives guidance to the NRA and the water and sewerage companies on the exercise of their environmental and recreational duties. Details of the NRA's activities in these areas are contained in its annual report on conservation, access and recreation.

Water Regulations

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those regulations concerning licenses for the abstraction of water which remain to be covered by regulations to be brought in to implement European Union directive 92/43 on habitats and species; and when he expects to lay drafts before Parliament. [15198]

Mr. Clappison: Chapter II of part II—sections 24 to 72—of the Water Resources Act 1991 concerns the granting of licences for the abstraction of water. Those sections will be covered by further regulations implementing the EC habitats directive. It is expected that the regulations will be laid before Parliament later this year. Currently, regulation 3 of the Conservation (Natural Habitats &c.) Regulations 1994 required all competent authorities, such as the National Rivers Authority or environment agency, in the exercise of any of their functions, to have regard to the requirements of the habitats directive.

Chemical Recycling Plant, Warndon

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will investigate the application by Norchem to construct a chemical recycling plant at Warndon, Worcester; and if he will make a statement: [15411]

Sir Paul Beresford: The current application by Norchem in relation to the Warndon area of Worcester is for a waste management licence under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The application has been made to Hereford and Worcester county council, the licensing authority, and is for waste oil treatment recovery and chemical waste transfer. The council is considering a number of matters relating to the application.

Homelessness

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has in respect of grants to homelessness voluntary organisations under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985; and if he will make a statement. [16138]

Mr. Clappison: The section 73 grant programme continues to represent good value for money. Since 1990–91, it has been particularly successful in assisting a large number of single people to find and keep accommodation. Programme expenditure has grown from £2 million to £6.9 million in 1995–96 and the number of schemes funded has increased from 30 to 160.

For 1996–97, the Government have increased to £7.8 million the sum to be made available to voluntary organisations to help them to meet the running costs of practical schemes that assist single people in housing need. This means that, in addition to continuing to fund all eligible existing projects, we shall invite bids to start new schemes in 1996–97.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Roads Services

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to review the proposals to contract out parts of the Department of the Environment's roads services. [16009]

Mr. Moss: I have received a number of representations about the proposals to contract out large parts of the activities of the roads service. I have decided that an extensive market testing programme would provide an alternative way of securing improved value for money and give employees of the roads service an opportunity to compete with the private sector for the delivery of service.

TRANSPORT

Railway Franchises

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what mechanism exists to ensure that the public are made aware of any new level of subsidy agreed in the event that a franchisee for the south-west or great western line returns to the franchising director to renegotiate the level of subsidy upwards. [15169]

Mr. Watts: The level of subsidy paid in respect of the South West Trains and Great Western franchises is detailed in the relevant franchise agreement, which is available to the public via the franchising director's register. If the franchising director were to agree any new level of subsidy with either the South West Trains or Great Western franchisee, this would be shown in a revised franchise agreement which would be placed on the register.

Supersaver Tickets

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps the Government have taken to secure the future of the supersaver ticket and its applicability to the current range of services. [15294]

Mr. Watts: This is a matter for railway operators. The British Railways Board offers supersaver tickets because of their commercial potential, and private railway operators are likely to set up similar schemes for the same reason.

Disabled Car Drivers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which London boroughs do not recognise the orange badge usable by disabled car drivers; and if he will make a statement. [15394]

Mr. Norris: The orange badge scheme does not apply to the City of London, the city of Westminster, the royal borough of Kensington and Chelsea and part of the London borough of Camden. Each of these authorities, however, operates its own independent concessionary scheme for disabled people who live or work in the area and offers limited concessions in relation to designated parking and meter parking to orange badge holders generally.

Gateshead Western Bypass

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will (a) list the number of private companies and agencies consulted by the Highways Agency for advice and information to date in connection with the agency's proposed Al Gateshead western bypass and (b) give the total cost of the amounts paid by the agency to private companies and agencies. [15193]

Mr. Watts: The Highways Agency contracted preparation work on the bypass to one firm of design consultants. The consultant has obtained specialist advice about matters concerning geology, archaeology, ecology, landscaping and agriculture from a number of firms.

The total cost of preparatory work to date is £3.3 million, excluding VAT.

MV Derbyshire

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to include an expert nominated by the Derbyshire Family Association on the proposed inquiry into the wreck of the MV Derbyshire; and if he will make a statement. [15536]

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 22 January, Official Report, column 38.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plan she has to collate information about applications to courts in respect of public interst immunity certificates. [14902]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Government will consider the maintenance of records relating to public interst immunity certificates in the light of the recommendations in Sir Richard Scott's report.

Contact Orders

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many parents with care have been imprisoned for contempt of court following non-compliance with a contact order made under section 8 of the Children Act 1989 in each year since 1991. [14848]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and accordingly I have asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Mike Gapes, dated 15 February 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has asked me to reply to the above Question about the number of parents with care imprisoned for contempt of court.

This information is not collected centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many contact orders have been made under section 8 of the Children Act 1989 where the presiding judge has been aware that one parent has been charged with, or convicted of, assaulting the other parent. [14842]

Mr. Evans: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Mike Gapes, dated 15 February, 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has asked me to reply to the above Question about the number of Children Act contact orders made.

Between October 1991, the date on which the Children Act came into force, and September 1995, the latest date for which figures are available, 106,911 contact orders were made under section 8 of the Act. It is not possible to identify with certainty the number of cases which involved a parent who had been charged with, or convicted of, assault and the task of extracting what information might be available would be disproportionately costly in view of the volume of cases.

Legal Aid

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in how many cases the legal aid costs were over £100,000 in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) so far in 1995–96. [14747]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested is shown in the table. For civil legal aid, the figures represent the number of individual legal aid certificates where gross payments, including VAT, have exceeded £100,000, but exclude multi-party actions. The criminal legal aid figures also include VAT and cover cases in the magistrates' courts and the crown court.

Year	Civil	Criminal	Total cases
1993–94	54	172	226
1994–95	56	237	293
1995 to date	65	178	243

HOME DEPARTMENT

Pregnant Prisoners

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the current status of contracting out the care of pregnant women to the NHS by women's prisons; and what such plans exist for HMP Holloway. [15001]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 16 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the current status of contracting out the care of pregnant women to the NHS by women's prisons and what such plans exist for Holloway prison.

No women's prison has contracted out maternity care. With the exception of women at Holloway prison, women prisoners receive such care from local hospital and community NHS services. At Holloway, antenatal and postnatal care is shared between the Prison health care service and NHS staff. Intrapartum care is provided at local NHS maternity units, usually the Whittington Hospital. Health care staff from Prison Service headquarters and the prison itself are currently reviewing all aspects of the delivery of health care at Holloway. One option under consideration is the contracting out of some specialist services following a competitive tender process. It has not yet been decided, however, whether maternity services should be contracted out.

Criminal Cases Review Authority

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date the post of chairman of the Criminal Cases Review Authority was advertised; how many applications were received; how many candidates were shortlisted; on what date the shortlisted candidates were interviewed; and with what result. [14933]

Mr. Kirkhope: The post of chairman of the Criminal Cases Review Commission was advertised on 3, 5 and 8 September 1995. Thirty-seven applications were received in response to the advertisement and these, along with 87 candidates drawn from other sources, were considered. Six shortlisted candidates were interviewed on 12 and 20 December 1995. The decision whom to appoint is for Her Majesty the Queen, advised by the Prime Minister. When that decision has been taken, an announcement will be made.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many industrial tribunals have been registered in the last 12 months in respect of staff employed in the Prison Service; how many have been settled prior to a hearing taking place; how much compensation has been paid to individuals in total; how much costs have been incurred by (a) services provided by Treasury Solicitors for industrial tribunals and (b) services provided by counsel advising and attending tribunals; and how many cases are still outstanding. [14954]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 16 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about applications to Industrial Tribunals by members of the Prison Service.

Information on appeals to Industrial Tribunals by Prison Service staff is not held centrally by the Prison Service.

The information in the attached table has been provided by the Treasury Solicitor's Department which normally acts for the Prison Service in Industrial Tribunal cases. There may have been other cases in which the Treasury Solicitor's Department was not involved but the number is likely to be very small.

	Amount
Total number of Industrial Tribunal cases received in the last 12 months by the Treasury Solicitor's Department in respect of staff employed within the Prison Service	54
Number of these cases settled without an award being imposed	[1]14
Total compensation paid	£29,723
Total costs (of which £4,053.75 were fees paid for services provided by counsel advising and attending tribunals)	£124,655.78
Number of cases outstanding	30

[1]Includes 1 case settled by a Respondent other than the Prison Service.

Passport Offices

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that there should be an office for the issue of passports in Birmingham. [15425]

Mr. Kirkhope: The UK Passport Agency undertook a review of the location of its offices in 1995 and concluded that the six regional passport offices in the United Kingdom were able to meet current and expected levels of demand and that there was no case for additional offices.

The UK Passport Agency has recently introduced a partnership arrangement under which passport applications can be handed in at high street post offices and branches of ARTAC World Choice travel agents who will check the application form for accuracy and deliver it to the agency for processing. There are more than 40 post office outlets and five ARTAC World Choice travel agents in the Birmingham area.

DEFENCE

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will institute changes in his Department's practice on the non-disclosure of internal papers containing classified or commercially sensitive information involving arms or military equipment sales. [14900]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made yesterday by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, Official Report, columns 1139-44.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library copies of all documents submitted by his Department to the Scott inquiry on the quantities and values of the Jordan arms sales package. [15693]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Sir Richard Scott intends to publish in due course copies of all document which he considers are relevant to the text of his report. This will be available to the House.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the titles of each of the papers his Department provided to the Scott inquiry. [15699]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have no plans to list the titles of the 29,000 pages of papers which my Department provided to the Scott inquiry. The inquiry will be publishing a substantial number of these documents in the annex to the report.

Military Training (Foreign Nationals)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his practice to give details of types of training and the number involved in the training of foreign nationals involved at military establishments in the United Kingdom and at British military bases abroad. [15696]

Mr. Soames: We disclose details of those countries which received UK training, whether in the UK or overseas, and also the number of students concerned during any particular period. It is not normally our practice to disclose the precise details of military training given to any particular country as such details are regarded as confidential between Governments. There are no plans to change this policy.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has anything to add to the answer to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) of 25 January 1991, Official Report, column 357. [15630]

Mr. Arbuthnot: No.

Abbey Wood Building

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are being taken to ensure that sub-contractors working on the new Ministry of Defence building at Abbey Wood, Bristol are being paid on time by the main contractors and according to the amount of work executed. [15479]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The contractual relationship between a main contractor and his sub-contractors and suppliers are a matter for the main contractor. However, contracts for Abbey Wood construction works place an obligation on main contractors to include a term in sub-contracts which require payment to be made to suppliers or sub-contractors within a specified period not exceeding 30 days from receipt of a valid invoice as defined by the sub-contract requirement.

The overall progress on the main construction works at Abbey Wood is continuously monitored by the MOD project team and its commercial works project manager to ensure that programmed milestones—linked to payment plans set out in the respective contracts—are being met, with the achievement of agreed progress milestones triggering payment. We understand that sub-contractors and suppliers are being dealt with in accordance with the terms and conditions agreed between the parties concerned. Were this not the position, we would expect a detrimental impact on progress which would then be taken up directly with main contractors.

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimates he has made of the cost of the work being undertaken in respect of the construction of the new MOD building at Abbey Wood, Bristol; and if he will make a statement on the extent of the overrun against the original estimate. [15480]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The estimated works cost of the Abbey Wood development—inclusive of site acquisition, construction, fitting out, professional works management fees and VAT—is kept under constant review and remains within the approved budget of £248.5 million at 1992 prices—£273.4 million at 1995 prices.

New Office Accommodation

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff have been or are planned to be accommodated in new office accommodation. [36587]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Detailed information relating to all the new build office accommodation is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Four new office accommodation projects in excess of £10 million in value have been approved centrally since 1991 to accommodate some 8,800 staff in total. All of these are part of wider strategies which result in significant savings to the taxpayer. They are the new Procurement Executive headquarters at Abbey Wood near Bristol, an additional office block at Andover for HQ quarter master general's staff, a new personnel and training command headquarters at RAF Innsworth and a new logistic command headquarters at RAF Wyton.

Land Mines

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ban the export of self-destruct anti-personnel land mines. [36586]

Mr. Arbuthnot: No. It would not be right to ban completely the export of a weapon which we may in future need to import for our own armed forces.

Trafalgar Class Submarines

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to award the contract for the construction of batch 2 Trafalgar class submarines. [36572]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I hope to be in a position to place a prime contract for the construction of batch 2 Trafalgar class submarines next year.

Intelligence-gathering Satellites

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence with which countries the United Kingdom is collaborating or discussing collaboration on intelligence-gathering satellites. [36578]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Western European Union is currently studying the possibilities of co-operation on a European satellite observation system. The United Kingdom is contributing fully to that work.

Anti-missile Defence

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement of progress on the feasibility study on anti-missile defence. [36580]

Mr. Arbuthnot: A contract was awarded in October 1994, to a consortium led by British Aerospace, to carry out a pre-feasibility study to identify ballistic missile defence systems to counter potential threats to the United Kingdom, the dependent territories and our forces deployed overseas. The study, which is scheduled to run for some 18 months and is proceeding according to schedule, will identify practical defensive architectures against a range of scenarios taking account of performance criteria, costs, time scales and technical risk. This advice will inform subsequent policy consideration, including whether the UK has a requirement for ballistic missile defence.

Attack and Support Helicopters

Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Britain's requirements for attack and support helicopters now meet the United Kingdom's needs into the next century. [36585]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The orders which were announced during 1995, for 67 Apache attack helicopters for the Army, and 14 Chinook Mk II and 22 utility EH101 support helicopters for the Royal Air Force, will ensure that the United Kingdom's requirements for these capabilities will be satisfied for the foreseeable future.

TREASURY

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for the most recent year available the cost of conditional exemption from inheritance tax of (a) chattels and (b) land in each case indicating the number of estates granted exemption. [13927]

Mr. Jack: The estimated cost to the Exchequer of granting conditional exemption from inheritance tax in 1994–95 is about £55 million for chattels, and £5 million for land and buildings. These figures represent the amount of tax deferred as long as the owners comply with their undertakings about the maintenance and preservation of the exempted property, and the provision of public access. If the undertakings are breached, or the property sold, tax is charged on the value of the property at that time.

In 1994–95, conditional exemption was granted to 59 estates in respect of chattels, and to 18 estates in respect of land and buildings.

Taxpayers (Children)

Miss Hoey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average number of children in households where the husband or wife is (a) a higher rate taxpayer, (b) a basic rate taxpayer and (c) a lower rate taxpayer, classifying households by the taxpayer on the highest marginal rate. [14263]

Mr. Jack: Estimates for 1995–96 are as follows:

Marginal tax rate of married couple or single person[1]	Average number of children for single people and married couples with at least one child[2]
Lower rate	2.1
Basic rate	1.7
Higher rate	1.8
All	1.8

[1] Marginal tax rate of single person or higher marginal tax rate of married couple.
[2] Child defined as being aged under 16.

The estimates are based on information projected from the 1993 family expenditure survey and are therefore provisional.

Working Mothers

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Peckhan (Ms Harman) of 5 March 1993, Official Report, column 335, on an allowance for working mothers. [14403]

Mr. Jack: Estimates of the cost of introducing allowances against taxable incomes for working mothers and lone parents in 1995–96 are set out in the table. The first year cost would depend on how the measure was implemented.

Cost (£ billion)

	Allowance of: (a) £1,000 per year	(b) £2,000 per year
All working mothers'	0.7	1.3
All working mothers with a child under 5'	0.2	0.4

' Including lone parents who are working.

The estimates are based on information projected from the 1993 family expenditure survey and are therefore provisional.

Opposed Measures

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a list of all the measures on personal and business taxation since 1979 which were approved by Parliament and opposed by Her Majesty's Opposition (a) on Second or Third Reading, (b) in Committee and (c) on Report; and if he will make a statement. [13122]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 6 February 1966]: The Opposition have voted against every Finance Bill on Second Reading since May 1979, apart from the pre-election 1992 Finance Bill.

They have voted against Bills including measures:

to reduce the basic rate of income tax from 33 per cent. to 24 per cent. and the top rate of income tax from 83 per cent. (98 per cent. on savings income) to 40 per cent.; and to reduce to rate of tax on companies to its present level, which is the lowest of any major industrial country.

A full list of all the measures requested in the question could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions since 1 January 1995 (a) he, (b) Ministers in his Department and (c) officials in his Department have had contact with Lord Howe concerning his correspondence with the Scott inquiry. [14821]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 12 February 1996]: As a former colleague, Lord Howe has had informal contact from time to time on these matters with the Treasury at ministerial level.

My officials have had no such contact with Lord Howe on departmental business nor, so far as I am aware, on an informal basis.

Personal Tax Returns

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to raise the de minimis rule as it applies to personal tax returns. [14664]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 February 1996]: There is no de minimus rule applying to tax returns.

EU Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for primary and secondary legislation passed since 5 April 1995 which measures were subject to a compliance cost assessment; and what was the compliance cost in each instance. [13655]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 13 February 1995]: I refer to the answer that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster gave to my hon. Friend on 14 February 1996, Official Report, column 578.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Dr. Alan George

Mr. Allason: To ask the Attorney-General if he will refer to the Director of Public Prosecution the allegations made by Dr. Alan George and referred to him on 29 January. [15058]

The Attorney-General: Dr. Alan George wrote to me drawing attention to conduct by another which may have involved the commission of criminal offences. He indicated that he had also drawn the matter to the attention of the Metropolitan police.

Dr. George has been advised that the matter should first be investigated by the police. They will refer the case to the Crown Prosecution Service if their investigations reveal that criminal offences may have been committed.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: to ask the Attorney-General if he will list the titles of each of the papers his Department provided to the Scott inquiry. [15698]

The Attorney-General: I have no plans to list the titles of the 1,778 pages of papers which my Department provided to the Scott inquiry. The inquiry will be publishing a substantial number of these documents in an annex to the report.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what plans he has to make changes to the public interest immunity certificate arrangements; [14898]

(2) if he will make a statement on the use of public interest immunity certificates. [14906]

The Attorney-General: The Government do not propose to comment on issues within the scope of Sir Richard Scott's inquiry until his report has been published and fully considered by the Government.

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions were brought by the Serious Fraud Office in each of the last four years; in how many all defendants were found guilty; and in how many the principal defendant was found guilty of the most serious charge. [14748]

The Solicitor-General: I have been asked to reply.

Since 5 April 1992, the Serious Fraud Office has brought 68 cases to trial. In 37 of these trials, all the defendants were convicted. In 53 of the trials, the principal defendant, or a principal defendant, was convicted.

This is broken down as follows:

5 April 1992 to 4 April 1993

21 trials

12 trials in which all of the defendants were convicted

16 trials in which a principal defendant was convicted

5 April 1993 to 4 April 1994

26 trials

14 trials in which all of the defendants were convicted

20 trials in which a principal defendant was convicted

5 April 1994 to 4 April 1995

12 trials

5 trials in which all of the defendants were convicted

9 trials in which a principal defendant was convicted

5 April 1995 to date

9 trials

6 trials in which all of the defendants were convicted

8 trials in which a principal defendant was convicted

In Serious Fraud Office cases, only serious charges appear in the indictment.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

HMSO Publications

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the Government will meet the costs incurred when interested parties translate HMSO material into (a) braille, (b) large print or (c) audio tape. [14663]

Mr. Willetts: Her Majesty's Stationery Office is just one of many printers and publishers undertaking Government work. Individual Departments, agencies and other public bodies determine how, in what form and at what cost their official information is to be made available, and details are not held centrally.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many written parliamentary questions were passed for answer to executive agencies and non-governmental departments in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [14982]

Mr. Willetts: Since the Department was formed in May 1992, a total of 13 questions have been passed for answer to executive agencies and non-governmental departments for which this Department is responsible. The figure can be broken down as follows:

1992–93: 2

1993–94: 0

1994–95: 8

1995 to date: 3

Seconded Staff

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the individuals, by name and company, who are engaged on temporary secondments in the Cabinet Office and Office of Public Service; and if he will list the type and nature of the secondment. [14675]

Mr. Willetts: The following staff are currently seconded into the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service, from industry and commerce:

Name	Company
Mr. M. Blessing	PA Consulting
Mr. S. Culhane	Lloyds Bank
Mr. M. B. De Ferranti	GEC/Marconi Ltd.
Mrs. L. Emin	Cable and Wireless plc
Ms M Guiot	British Telecom
Mr. S. Greenstreet	Coopers and Lybrand
Mr. A. Harris	Clifton Corporate Services Ltd.
Mr. S. Hoffman-Womersley	Shandwich Communications Ltd.

All are engaged on work relating to improving efficiency and effectiveness of public services or to competitiveness and deregulation.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many written parliamentary questions were passed for answer to executive agencies and non-governmental departments in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [14995]

Mr. Hanley: This Department has transferred no parliamentary questions to non-departmental public bodies.

The number of written parliamentary questions referred to next steps agencies by this Department is as follows:

Session 1992–93: 7

Session 1993–94: 4

Session 1994–95: 6

Session 1995–96: 8

Information for previous Sessions is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

It is normal practice to print answers from the heads of our agencies in the Official Report.

Chechnya

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the aims, operations and achievements of Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe in Chechnya. [15382]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The OSCE long-term objective is to promote a peaceful settlement in Chechnya. Through the assistance group in Grozny, it continues to make every effort to help bring about an early ceasefire and encourage negotiations to find a settlement acceptable to all parties. The assistance group can play an important role in bringing Chechen and Russian representatives together and was instrumental in brokering the talks which led to the conclusion of the military agreement in July 1995. This agreement still offers the best basis for securing a lasting peace. Despite operating in often dangerous and difficult conditions, the assistance group continues to do a good job in building contacts with all parties.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's ambassador in Moscow last met Mr. Sergei Kovalyov to discuss the situation in Chechnya. [15384]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Her Majesty's ambassador to Moscow last met Mr. Sergei Kovalyov on 22 September 1995, at which meeting the situation in Chechnya was raised.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's ambassador in Moscow last discussed the situation in Chechnya with (a) President Yeltsin, (b) Mr. Gennadzy Zynganor, (c) General Lebed, (d) Arkadiy Volsky, (e) Mr. Vladimir Zhirinovsky, (f) Prime Minister Chernomyrdin, (g) Mayor Luzhkor and (h) Foreign Minister Primakov; and what were his conclusions. [15383]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Her Majesty's ambassador in Moscow last met Mr. Primakov on 6 February 1996 and Mr. Zyuganov on 14 September 1995. The situation in Chechnya was touched upon on both occasions. Her Majesty's ambassador presented his credentials to President Yeltsin on 12 February 1996, but did not discuss Chechnya with him. He has not met any of the other people listed. It is clear from these contacts and others that the situation in Chechnya and the search for a settlement is a major preoccupation both for the Government and Russian political leaders.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now list the titles of each of the papers his Department made available to the Scott inquiry. [15700]

Mr. Hanley: I have no plans to list the titles of the 16,234 pages of papers which this Department provided to the Scott inquiry. The inquiry will be publishing a substantial number of these documents in an annex to the report.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions since 1 January 1995 (a) he, (b) Ministers in his Department and (c) officials in his Department have had contact with Lord Howe concerning his correspondence with the Scott inquiry. [14818]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 12 February 1996]: Communications between Ministers in this Department and others concerning correspondence with the Scott inquiry are private. Lord Howe has, like other witnesses to the inquiry, had contact with officials in the FCO from time to time.

Immigration (Mrs. Noreen Bibi)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is going to be taken on an application made by Mrs. Noreen Bibi (Ref. IMMI/Co 534) to the post in Islamabad to join her husband in the United Kingdom. [15558]

Mr. Hanley: I have asked the high commission at Islamabad for details and will arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit as soon as possible.

WALES

Health Service Staff

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many nurses there were in Welsh hospitals between 1990 and 1996; [14804]

(2) how many managers there were in Welsh hospitals between 1990 and 1996. [14829]

Mr. Richards: The information is given in the table. The figures include all staff employed by NHS trusts, health authorities and the Welsh Health Common Services Authority as separate figures for staff in hospitals are not available centrally. A reliable split between nursing staff and midwifery staff is not available centrally, so the information given relates to all staff in the nursing and midwifery group excluding pre-registration learners. For managers, all staff paid on manager pay scales are included in the figures; a number of these staff have been reclassified as managers from within the administrative and clerical and other staff groups. Managers from all disciplines may be included.

Whole-time equivalent number of staff in post at 30 September

	Nursing and midwifery staff[1]	Administrative and clerical staff
		Total	Of which managers
1990	25,017	8,185	436

1994	25,220	9,905	1,292
1995	24,728	9,875	1,350

[1] Excluding pre-registration learners.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the (a) monetary targets and (b) the actual return on capital for each NHS trust annually since its inception; and how much of the surplus was (i) retained by each NHS trust and (ii) returned to the Government. [14625]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is contained in NHS trusts' annual financial reports, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the total amount of (a) useable and (b) set-aside capital receipts held by each local authority in Wales at 31 March 1995. [15065]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is given in the table.

Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed, and in what capacity, at the Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation's regional office in Swansea. [14941]

Mr. Richards: One person is employed at the regional office in the capacity of schools liaison officer.

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the rent of the regional office of the Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation in Swansea; and who receives that rent. [14942]

Mr. Richards: It is for the foundation to negotiate the best possible terms within the funding made available from the Welsh Office. Such arrangements are commercial in confidence.

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many inquiries the regional office of the Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation in Swansea has handled since it opened. [14943]

Mr. Richards: Two hundred and six, many of which resulted in visits to schools to talk to governors, teachers and parents.

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what publications the regional office of the Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation in Swansea produces; and what is the cost of producing these publications. [14944]

Mr. Richards: The production of publications by the regional office in Swansea is a matter for the foundation.

British Eagle Cycle Factory

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the closure of the British Eagle cycle factory in Newtown. [15230]

(2) if he will list all (a) direct and (b) indirect financial support given by statutory agencies to British Eagle cycle company in respect of its business in Newtown; and if he will make a statement. [15231]

Mr. Hague: The Development Board for Rural Wales is the only statutory agency to have given support to British Eagle Cycles. I have asked the chief executive of the board to write to the hon. and learned Member with the information requested and I will arrange for a copy of his reply to be placed in the Library of the House.

Hospital Waiting List Initiative

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish the current guidelines on the use of waiting list initiative funding on (a) British United Provident Association, (b) private consultants and (c) NHS consultants on piecework rates; and if he will make a statement. [15657]

(2) what guidelines he has issued on the removal of patients from eligibility for waiting list initiative funding on the basis of their refusal to accept NHS treatment at (a) non-local hospitals and (b) private hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [15658]

(3) if he will list for each family health service authority the amount agreed with each GP fundholding practice for waiting list initiative funding for out-patient consultation or treatment to be completed by 31 March. [15660]

Mr. Hague: It is for health authorities and GP fundholders to decide on the most effective ways of spending the resources available under the waiting times initiative. Purchasers can agree contracts with private hospitals and with consultants on a private basis.

The allocations do not distinguish between the resources available for reducing waiting times for out-patient appointments or for treatment as an in-patient or day case.

No guidance has been issued on the use of waiting times initiative funding for patients who refuse the offer of treatment at NHS hospitals outside their local area or at private hospitals. Such patients can expect to be seen or treated at the hospital of their choice as quickly as local contractual arrangements between purchasers and providers allow. The treatment involved may be funded from waiting times initiative funds or from purchasers' general allocations.

Waiting times initiative allocations to individual GP fundholders are made by family health services authorities from the total amount available for the district as a whole. Details of the allocations made to individual fundholders are not held centrally.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultation she has had with the chairmen of the University Hospital of Wales Trust, the south Glamorgan health authority and the south Glamorgan family health services authority concerning the payments of waiting list initiative funds to GP fundholders for the treatment or diagnosis of long waiting list orthopaedic patients at (a) BUPA, (b) consultants' private consulting rooms and (c) weekend sessions in NHS hospitals. [15661]

Mr. Hague: No such consultation has been made. It is for health authorities and GP fundholders, as purchasers of hospital services, to decide on the most effective way of using waiting times initiative funding. In doing so, they are conscious of the need to achieve value for money.

General Practitioner Training

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list each GP training programme in Wales, the number of places allocated in each centre and the number of GP trainees at the latest available date. [15659]

Mr. Hague: This information is not held centrally by the Welsh Office. The sub-dean of the University of Wales college of medicine, department of postgraduate education has advised that, as at February 1996, there are 12 vocational training schemes in Wales. The number of places on each of those schemes are:

	Number
East Glamorgan	8
Carmarthen	4
Gwynedd	6
Abergavenny	6
North Clwyd	4
South Clwyd	4
Aberystwyth	6
Cardiff	8
Bridgend	10
Haverfordwest	2
South Gwent	6
Swansea Bay	16
Total	80

A total of 49 trainees are at present on these schemes. In addition, 41 trainees are undertaking self-constructed schemes.

Hard-to-fill Vacancies

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the percentage of hard-to-fill vacancies over the previous 12 months in 1994 and 1995. [15560]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Figures relating to number of vacancies over the periods are not available. However the report "Skill Needs in Britain, 1995" published by the Department for Education and Employment indicates that the percentage of establishments with 25 or more employees in Wales reported hard-to-fill vacancies in 1994 was 16 per cent. The figure of 35 per cent. quoted in that report for 1995 is not directly comparable due to changes in the questions asked. A comparable 1995 figure is not available.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Bankruptcy (Manchester)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many petitions for bankruptcy have been initiated by her Department in respect of businesses in the Greater Manchester area in the past five years. [10303]

Mr. Robin Squire: Records are not kept that would allow a definitive answer to be given but I am aware of no instance of the Department, or of the former Departments for Education and Employment, having initiated such action within the period.

Empty Buildings

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many empty buildings her Department currently owns; what is the cost of insuring and securing these buildings; how many were designed as residential properties; and what was the total amount spent by her Department on empty property taxes in each of the last five years. [14571]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department for Education and Employment and the Employment Service together currently own 26 freehold properties which are empty.

One property includes a hostel block for use by trainees and four terraced houses for the use of hostel supervisors.

Following general Government practice, the Department and the ES bear the cost of their own property insurance.

The Department and the ES together also hold 135 leasehold properties which are empty. None is designed for residential use.

In many leaseholds buildings, the landlord insures the building and recovers the cost through the overall service charge; it is not possible to disaggregate this charge without disproportionate time and cost.

The cost of security for empty buildings is also included in maintenance costs and it is therefore not possible to identify the separate total for security costs.

The Department's contribution in lieu of rates on vacant properties for the current year ending March 1996 will be £170,900. The ES's CILOR on vacant properties in the year ended 31 March 1995 was £680,000. CILOR figures for previous years are included in overall running cost figures and cannot be separated out without disproportionate costs.

Education Funding (Warwickshire)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 12 February 1996, Official Report, column 438, how many children are covered by the management and administration cost of £2,924,000; and what is the pupil:manager ratio in Warwickshire local education authority. [15367]

Mr. Robin Squire: A total of 68,699 pupils: this figure, like those given in my answers of 2 and 12 February, is taken from the authority's 1995–96 local management of schools budget statement. The Department does not collect the information which would be needed to answer the second part to the question.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) for how many weeks of jobseeker's allowance a claimant will be eligible after a suspension period imposed on grounds of having left a previous job voluntarily; [15548]

(2) what mechanism will be used to reclaim jobseeker's allowance, paid during the adjudication period, to a claimant who is subsequently judged to have left his previous employment voluntarily and has his allowance suspended. [15557]

Mr. Forth: Provided that the jobseeker satisfied the entitlement conditions for JSA, payment of benefit will not be suspended pending an adjudication officer's decision on a question of whether a claimant left his employment voluntarily. If the adjudication officer decides that the claimant did leave his employment voluntarily without just cause, he will also decide the length of the period—at least one week, but not more than 26 weeks—for which JSA is not payable. Since any sanction will start from the week following the determination, repayment of JSA received before the decision will not be required. The claimant's period of eligibility for JSA after the sanction will depend on how long he continues to satisfy the conditions of entitlement.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what requirements the jobseekers scheme will place on applicants to ensure that their appearance is suitable for the job being applied for; and what assessment she has made of the impact of these requirements on the ability of small businesses to comply with equal opportunities legislation. [15554]

Mr. Forth: To be entitled to jobseeker's allowance, a jobseeker must seek employment actively. Any act which would otherwise be considered a step in actively seeking employment will be disregarded if, by his appearance, the jobseeker undermines his prospects of securing employment, unless due to reasons beyond his control. An example of this would be where a jobseeker chose to dress for a job interview in a way which he knew would be unacceptable in that particular type of employment.

These matters relate to the conditions for jobseeker's allowance and have no bearing on the ability of any business to comply with equal opportunities legislation.

School Inspections

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average cost of a school inspection; and how many inspections took place in each of the last five years. [15469]

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools, who heads the Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

Social Affairs Council

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the outcome of the informal Social Affairs Council held on 2 to 4 February in Venice. [15091]

Mr. Forth: An informal meeting of Social Affairs Ministers in Venice on 3 February 1996 re-emphasised the importance of education and training issues to European competitiveness. The Commission's White Paper, "Teaching and Learning: Towards a Learning Society", provided a focus for a debate on the contribution of education and training to the promotion of employment. As this was an informal meeting, no formal conclusions were reached.

Nursery Voucher Scheme

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what steps she will be taking to ascertain the number of new places created in (a) the maintained sector, (b) the private sector and (c) the voluntary sector in phase one of the voucher scheme; [15299]

(2) what steps she will be taking in phase one of the voucher scheme to ascertain the number of nursery vouchers redeemed by those currently in (a) maintained and (b) private sector provision. [15300]

Mr. Robin Squire: We have information on the number of four-year-olds currently in maintained schools but do not hold information on the number of four-year-olds in the private sector. We will collect information on the number of vouchers redeemed in the maintained and private and voluntary sectors once phase 1 of the scheme begins in April 1996.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (a) how many 11 to 16-year-old pupils are permanently excluded from (i) local education authority secondary schools and (ii) grant-maintained secondary schools for the most recent year for which figures are available, (b) 11 to 16-year-old pupils have been admitted following permanent exclusion from another school to (1) local education authority secondary schools and (2) grant-maintained secondary schools and (c) the total number of schools in each category in that year. [15481]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is as follows:

(a) A survey published by the Department in July 1995 showed that in the academic year 1993–94, 8,960 pupils were excluded from secondary schools within the 101 local education authorities that responded. The data returned did not distinguish between grant-maintained and other schools.

(b) This information is not available.

(c) There were 3,035 local education authority maintained secondary schools and 594 grant-maintained schools at the end of the academic year 1993–94.

School Mergers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools in England have (a) closed and (b) merged for each year since 1979, giving the totals for (i) primary, (ii) secondary and (iii) special schools. [15344]

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 15 February 1996]: This question could be answered in the form in which it is asked only at disproportionate cost.

In January 1979 there were 21,309 primary schools, 4,606 secondary schools and 1,489 special schools in the maintained sector. In January 1995 these figures had dropped to 18,551, 3,614 and 1,218 respectively.

Mortgages

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Eduction and Employment how many heads of household below retirement age and available for work have mortgages. [14300]

Mr. Clappison: I have been asked to reply.

The latest estimate for England is that 7,540,000 heads of household who are below retirement age, and were either in employment or seeking and available for work, have mortgages. This estimate is from the 1994–95 Survey of English Housing and is subject to sampling error.

HEALTH

Bed Closures

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds were closed in 1995 in (a) Consett, (b) Sunderland, (c) Grimsby, (d) Good Hope, (e) West Middlesex and (f) Newham general hospitals. [14652]

Mr. Horam: Details of bed closures are not held centrally. Since the beginning of this year an extra 10 beds have been opened in Consett, 26 in Sunderland, 17 in Grimsby, 24 in Good Hope, 12 in West Middlesex and 32 in Newham general hospital.

Dental Health

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the mean number of decayed, missing or filled teeth in five-year-olds in each health authority in each of the last five years; and what are the latest available figures. [14766]

Mr. Malone: Tables setting out the mean number of decayed, missing and filled teeth of five-year-old children in each health authority in 1991–92 and 1993–94 will be placed in the Library. The 1993–94 figures are the latest available.

Kirby-Harris Libel Case

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what grounds his Department will pay the libel costs of the defendants in the Kirby-Harris libel case. [14661]

Mr. Malone: The Department agreed to make an ex-gratia payment towards the legal costs of the parties on the grounds that bringing the proceedings to an end before further costs were incurred represented the best value for money. This decision was based on legal advice that very substantial costs, in excess of the costs paid, might fall to be paid by the Cornwall Healthcare NHS Trust out or resources which should be used for the health-care of the people of Cornwall.

Renal Care

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish the review of renal care in the United Kingdom. [15470]

Mr. Horam: The national review of renal services, which was completed at the end of 1994, covered only England. I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Davyhulme (Mr. Churchill) on 8 February 1996, Official Report, column 348.

Health Authority Funding

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) to what extent each of the former district health authorities in West Sussex is currently underfunded in both cash and percentage terms in (a) the current financial year and (b) 1996–97; and what is the level of underfunding of the two most underfunded health authorities elsewhere in the United Kingdom; [15404]

(2) what plans he has to implement his policy of ensuring that from 1 April 1996 all health authorities in the South Thames region will be broadly within 5 per cent. of their target share. [15402]

Mr. Horam: The planned 1996–97 allocations will bring all health authorities within the former South Thames regional health authority within 5 per cent. of their weighted capitation targets.

For 1996–97 there is only a single planned weighted capitation target for the new West Sussex health authority and it is under target by 4.8 per cent. or £15.8 million. In 1996–97 the two most under-target health authorities in England are South Essex at 7.7 per cent. or £22.8 million and North Essex at 6.4 per cent. or £23.0 million.

In 1995–96 Mid Downs was 5.7 per cent. or £6.1 million below target Chichester 7.9 per cent. or £6.5 million and Worthing 13.0 per cent. or £15.7 million.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what monitoring of the ethnic origin of staff is being undertaken by national health service employers; and what reports he intends to publish based on that information; [15668]

(2) what measures are planned to monitor the steps taken by national health service employers in respect of levels of race discrimination following the Policy Studies Institute report, "Nursing in a Multi-Racial Society", commissioned by his Department; [15665]

(3) what measures are in hand to monitor the steps being taken by trusts to improve equal opportunities under the enabling agreements recently introduced in the national health service. [15666]

Mr. Malone: I attach great importance to achieving equality of opportunity for all staff in the NHS. Information on the ethnic origin of NHS employees is collected annually and published in the Department of Health Statistical Bulletin for "NHS Hospital and Community Health Services Non-Medical Staff in England", which will be placed in the Library shortly and separately for "NHS Medical and Dental Staff", also issued annually, copies of which are available in the Library.

I have taken seriously the issues raised by the Policy Studies Institute report on "Nursing in a Multi-Ethnic NHS" and refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 18 January 1996, Official Report, column 687.

The enabling agreements of the General Whitley Council are for management and staff to implement locally in accordance with particular local needs. I have no plans to monitor these arrangements.

However, the NHS Executive's director of human resources recently reminded NHS chief executives and general managers—in EL(96)4—of their personal responsibility for progressing equal opportunities issues.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he intends to take following the recent industrial tribunal case McCarthy v. British Nursing Association. [15667]

Mr. Malone: This matter does not concern a national health service employee. However, the NHS Executive is strongly committed to equal opportunities in NHS employment and will be studying the consequences for the NHS of any further legal action in this case.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the position of asylum seekers needing advice or treatment from national health service health care staff. [15669]

Mr. Horam: Asylum seekers can seek advice or treatment from national health service health care staff on the same basis as other individuals.

Community Care

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many judicial reviews of community care policy there have been since 1 April 1993; [15475]

(2) how many judicial reviews of community care policy have been applied for since 1 April 1993; [15476]

(3) what has been the cost of each judicial review of community care policy since 1 April 1993; [15477]

(4) how many requests for judicial reviews of community care policies have been turned down since 1 April 1993. [15478]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Relocation Expenses

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data his Department collects about the relocation expenses paid by national health service employers. [15663]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 8 March 1995, Official Report, column 242.

Adoption Law

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when will he publish the Bill outlining changes to adoption law. [15670]

Mr. Bowis: A draft of the proposed Adoption Bill will be issued shortly in the form of a consultation document.

NHS Contractors

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his Department's policy to disqualify organisations that commit acts of race discrimination from being contractors with the national health service. [15664]

Mr. Horam: All national health service contractors are expected to comply with their statutory obligations under the Race Relations Act 1976 or any enactment relating to discrimination in employment, and to take reasonable steps to secure their observance by staff or agents employed in the performance of any NHS contract. Where a contractor is in serious or continuing breach of this requirement in a particular case, without taking remedial action, the NHS trust or authority concerned has the option of disqualification or termination, depending on the local circumstances of the case.

Electromagnetic Fields (Cancer)

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the relationship between electromagnetic fields and child leukaemia; if he will place copies of that research in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [15633]

Mr. Horam: Commissioned research relation to electromagnetic fields and childhood leukaemia includes:

- a direct Department of Health contribution to the United Kingdom childhood cancer study—a five-year prospective study of childhood cancer being undertaken by the UK Coordinating Committee on Cancer Research—to which a substantial effort is also being devoted by the National Radiological Protection Board, which advises Government on radiation hazards;
- a study by the NRPB, shortly to be published, of the possible effects of exposure to mains frequency EMF on the proliferation of cultured human cells;
- NRPB-funded work at Oxford university investigating the possibility that weak EMF might damage genetic material.

The Department is currently considering a number of other research projects for funding which bear on EMF and possible health effects.

In addition, a major evaluation of scientific publications on EMF and cancer has been undertaken by the NRPB's advisory group on non-ionising radiation under the chairmanship of Sir Richard Doll and was published in 1992. The Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment has endorsed the advisory group's report. Two brief supplementary reports, in 1993 and 1994, were published by the NRPB to take into account the results of epidemiological studies from Scandinavia and Canada. Copies of the advisory group's report and the supplementary documents are available in the Library.

The Department will continue to monitor the results of all research closely, and to maintain its support for research in these areas, consulting NRPB and COMARE as necessary.

Registered Home Tribunals

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the individuals who serve on registered home tribunals, by region, indicating their gender and occupation. [15662]

Mr. Bowis: The information requested is shown in the tables. The information requested is not kept by region as tribunal members may be required to attend tribunals in any area of the country.

Professors of General Practice

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many professors of general practice are currently in post; and at which institutions [14806]

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that there are 23 professors of general practice in post: seven at schools of the university of London and the remainder at the universities of Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Dundee, Edinburgh, Exeter, Glasgow, Keele, Leeds, Leicester, Manchester, Newcastle upon Tyne, Nottingham, Sheffield and Southampton.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer on 16 January, Official Report, column 568 on accounting methods used by the Child Support Agency to calculate benefit savings, if he will place in the Library a copy of the audits carried out by Price Waterhouse in 1993–94 and 1994–95. [14523]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 15 February 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about accounting methods used by the Child Support Agency.

The reports to which you refer were commissioned as a private stu... to examine areas the Agency already knew were in need of improvement. They were internal audits to assist CSA managers in of improving the administration of the Agency's business. A summary of the findings will be placed in the library shortly.

I hope this is helpful.

National Insurance

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what methods his Department has to guarantee employees that their current or previous employers have forwarded their part of national insurance contributions. [15097]

Mr. Heald: The administration of national insurance operational matters is for Mrs. Faith Boardman, the chief executive of the Contributions Agency. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Spencer Batiste, dated 15 February 1996:

As Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency, I have responsibility for answering questions about operational matters relating to the Agency and the National Insurance (NI) scheme.

I have been asked to reply to your question regarding the methods used to guarantee employees that their current or previous employers have forwarded their part of National Insurance contributions (NICs).

A number of measures are in place which directly or indirectly monitor the requirement for employers to pay NICs and to ensure that the Agency receives these NICs.

Employers are required to make payments monthly (quarterly for some small employers) to the Collector of Taxes for tax and NICs due that month. At the end of the tax year the employer has to send a statement (P35) to the Inland Revenue of the years total of tax and NICs for all employees. The Inland Revenue ensures that the balance of payments due at that time is collected.

Employees' individual returns of tax and NICs are also sent to the Inland Revenue and forwarded to the Agency. Any discrepancies between the figures on the employer's annual statement (P35) and the aggregated total on the individual returns (P14s), are identified and followed up by the Agency. Missing individual returns may be identified by this process.

Employees' returns showing no NICs due but substantial tax earnings may be queried and followed up by the Agency with the employer (but there are still some legitimate reasons for tax due but no NICs due e.g., pension payments).

The Agency has a programme of visiting employers to check their compliance with NI law and to also offer advice and guidance. Around 10% of employers are scheduled for visit in 1995/96. The Inland Revenue also has a programme of making audit visits to employers; the Agency and Revenue work closely together to avoid duplication of effort.

The Agency has measures in place to enable employees themselves to identify any discrepancy. Firstly, an employee is entitled to a certificate (P60), at the end of the tax year, of the tax and NICs deducted. This P60 should be a copy of the P14 which the employer sends in. The employer may at that stage contact the Revenue or the Agency about any discrepancy or non receipt.

Once the majority of employers' end of year returns are expected to have been received, the Agency has an established system of sending individual notices to certain people for whom no contributions have been received or an amount insufficient to benefit qualification has been received. The Agency can take action to resolve any queries which are from these notices.

Whether or not a deficiency notice has been sent, an employee can ask the Agency at any time for a statement of their NICs received and their effect on benefit. These queries may also be received subsequent to a request for a state Retirement Pension Forecast. These statements record the recent tax years where there are any NI deficiencies and what may be done about that deficiency.

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total value of entitlements so far gained under SERPS. [15410]

Mr. Heald: The total value of accrued additional pension rights was £178 billion in 1993 cash prices. This figure does not include entitlements accrued by people who have subsequently died, nor does it include additional pension currently in payment.

Government Actuary's Department.

Social Fund

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what help is available from the social fund to people on income support who have suffered loss and damage as a result of the recent exceptionally severe weather in the Glasgow area; and if he will make a statement. [16137]

Mr. Roger Evans: Disaster relief following any such crisis is essentially a matter for the relevant local authority. However, through the social fund, crisis loans can be made available to help individuals in such unfortunate circumstances and community care grants are also available to help those families who find themselves under exceptional pressure. Applications to the social fund are dealt with, as speedily as possible, by specially trained social fund officers who look carefully at the individual circumstances surrounding each application and use discretion and flexibility when forming their decision.

Until 31 January 1996, a total of 967 social fund awards had been made to people in the Glasgow area who had been worst affected by the severe weather, at a cost of £268,308. An individual allocation from the social fund of £268,308 will be made immediately to reimburse those district offices worst affected and we will continue to monitor the whole situation carefully within the limits of funding available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Empty Buildings

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many empty buildings his Department currently owns; what is the cost of insuring and securing these buildings; how many were designed as residential properties; and what was the total amount spent by his Department on empty property taxes in each of the last five years. [14568]

Mr. John M. Taylor: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is providing figures for empty buildings on the common user estate. These figures cover most of my Department's properties. This reply supplements the central response by supplying information covering properties classed as departmental estate for which my Department currently has direct responsibility.

My Department is currently responsible for nine empty buildings. These are all on the Department's site at Teddington.

My Department carries its own insurance risk on these buildings, so on expenditure on commercial insurance has been incurred. It does not maintain separate records of the costs of securing empty buildings.

Two of the empty buildings were designed as residential properties but one was used for non-residential purposes before it was vacated.

My Department pays a contribution in lieu of rates on its Teddington site, but figures to show the element attributable to the empty properties are not available. The following council tax payments have been made in respect of empty properties:

1993–94: £270.40

1994–95: £297.00

1995–96: £341.50.

Figures for payments made before 1993–94 can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Franchise Operators (Refund Agreements)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to introduce regulations on the advertising of refund agreements by franchise operators. [14638]

Mr. Page: There are no plans to introduce such regulations.

Single European Currency

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of the impact of a single European currency on United Kingdom trade. [14952]

Mr. Oppenheim: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 8 February 1996, Official Report, column 363.

Iraq (Biological Agents)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will establish an investigation into the requests received by the British Government from Iraqi companies or Government agencies for biological agents since 1979. [14901]

Mr. Lang: If the hon. Member has any evidence that such an investigation is necessary, I should be happy to consider it.

BMARC

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 26 January 1996, Official Report, column 423, how many of the newly discovered batch of export licence applications from BMARC did not have full supporting documentation. [14580]

Mr. Oppenhiem [holding answer 9 February 1996]: Of the recently recovered BMARC—or Astra Defence Systems—export licence applications which were dealt with under the military list between 1985 and 1990, about 60 per cent. were accompanied by copies of one or more of the type of documents normally recognised as constituting adequate supporting documentation. In around a further quarter of the cases, other supporting information was provided. Less than a tenth of the applications had no supporting documentation or information of any kind. In the remaining cases, the application papers themselves have not been recovered, so it is not possible to say whether supporting documentation or information was provided.

Trade Mission (Burma)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those companies which will be taking part in the forthcoming trade mission to Burma in February; what level of financial assistance is being offered to those attending; and if he will make a statement. [14587]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 13 February 1996]: A list of those companies taking part in the DTI mission to Burma in February 1996 follows. Twenty-six of the companies are eligible to apply for a DTI travel grant of £1,000 towards the costs of taking part in the mission.

The Government's policy towards Burma, including trade, was fully set out in the speech by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, on 7 February 1996, Official Report, columns 296–302. There is no obstacle to UK firms exploring business in Burma not covered by the European Union embargo.

Manufacturing Sector

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current size of the manufacturing sector; what were the figures for 1979; and if he will make a statement. [13820]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 14 February 1996]: In 1994, the latest year for which figures are available, the net ouptut of the manufacturing sector was worth £156.5 billion. Manufacturing output grew by 9.5 per cent. in volume between 1979 and 1994. Manufactured goods account for more than 80 per cent. of visible exports and have grown by almost 90 per cent. since 1979 while output per head has grown faster than in Japan, the United States of America, Germany and France.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 271

SESSION 1995–96

5th February—16th February 1996

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
